"I think with the mass media in our society we have lost our sense of communication... it's a lost art... people learn the most valuable things in life talking to other people," Saylor said. To her communication is one of the "most valuable tools in education" and observes that "people are almost afraid to ascend." Admitting her own failures to make this true communication a priority in life, Saylor agreed, "it's a fast paced society, we're all guilty of it," explaining how we as a society get caught in cycles of schedules and plans and overlooking who we are and how we fit together in the world. Looking ahead, the future appears promising for Inklings, with increased student participation whether there is a scheduled event or acting as a casual meeting place. Although student involvement has been Inklings' main goal, the staff also hopes to see more PC faculty and staff interest as well. Inklings is currently open on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday from 8 pm to midnight with fair attendance on weeknights. Overall, Inklings is considered a success by students and faculty alike, and is a promising permanent addition to PC campus life.

Some of Inklings' short-term goals include: sound proofing the existing room, installing more adequate lighting, and purchasing tables and chair sets, while the one long-term goal they are working toward is to see Inklings become a place students are actively involved in at all times- not just for special events. Student comments and suggestions are welcome and many have already become reality, such as the suggestion for "Open-microphone night," which is already a hit after debuting this past week. The emphasis is on everyone coming together, involvement and participation. These things cannot be accomplished without an effort from everyone, and Inklings hopes to be the place where it all comes together.

Dean, Council Chairpersons see 'need for study' of Honor Code

by Tobin Turner
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

In an academic year where Honor Code violations in the first semester alone have surpassed the number of violations occurring in all of last year, Dean of Students Joe Nixon and current Judicial Council Chairperson Mary Beth Thomas both believe that a study of the current code is in order, as well as an appraisal of the day to day visibility of the Honor Code on campus.

The Honor Code was last revised during the 1988-89 academic year and the time may be right for another assessment according to Nixon who states, "I am for a review, evaluation, and analysis of the Honor Code's effectiveness and careful study to see if there are revisions that need to be made."

Former Council Chairperson Marie Youmans also agrees with Thomas and Nixon, adding, "I don't believe there is a need for a major overhaul, but I do feel there are a few places where the wording could be altered to avoid ambiguities." Youmans believes the issues of how and when new council members are added to the council needs to be addressed, as well as election procedures for the council chairperson.

Another issue that has sparked some debate is the role and function that the Appeals Board serves on campus.

"People can appeal almost anything. I certainly feel there needs to be an appeals board, but we need to look at under what circumstances people should be allowed to appeal... It often seems that what the Judicial Council decides isn't as important if there is going to be a second trial," Youmans says.

Mary Beth Thomas agrees, remarking, "The appeals board was created to overturn unfair decisions, not for people to appeal decisions that they just don't like."

Dean Nixon, however, approaches the idea of changing the role of the appeals board with some wariness. "Some feel strongly about the revamping of the Appeals Board, but I'm not sure I support this. The Appeals Board has many minor duties that cannot be forgotten about," Nixon, however, agrees that the Board should not have to hear "frivolous appeals," but stresses that students should not be denied their rights. In fact, one area Nixon would like to see studied is the possibility of adding a section describing the rights of an individual prior to being accused, much as there are currently rights for accused students.

Both Thomas and Nixon agree that another needed revision might be the provision of more specific guidelines in sentencing instead of a very generally applied "normal penalty."

"Right now all we have is the 'standard penalty' and how often do you have a 'standard case?'" Thomas asks. "It would be nice to have some kind of yard stick to measure penalties."

Nixon also comments, "We need to look at the possibility of having lesser penalties for forthcoming individuals because that is what is expected under the Honor Code."

The process for a study of the code begins with college president, Kenneth B. Orr, who must first convene an ad hoc committee whose responsibility it is to study the current version of the code and make recommendations to either the Academic Affairs Council or the Student Affairs Council. Either council will study the proposed revisions and will generally seek faculty and student input during the analysis. Ultimately, the burden of accepting any proposed changes falls upon the PC faculty. All procedures for the changing of the code are explained in complete detail in the college's Article on Governance of School.

Youmans, Thomas, and Nixon all agree that it is important to increase the consciousness of the Honor Code on the PC campus. Nixon has emphasized the need for greater upperclass awareness even suggesting a need for "yearly signings." But until any such action is taken, as one current council member asserts, "It is still the responsibility of each student to continually be aware of the provisions cited clearly in the Knapsack, forgetting isn't an excuse."

Nixon has stated that he feels the best time for the study "would be this Spring" to avoid "logistical" problems getting students and faculty together.

"I really think there needs to be a new study because there are a lot of shades of gray that we can't effectively deal with now," said Thomas.

PC faculty, staff assist medically needy with establishment of free clinic

by Gray Lesesne
MANAGING EDITOR

Laurens County residents unable to afford immediate medical care received a literal shot in the arm recently with the opening of the Good Shepherd Free Medical Clinic, a nonprofit, no-cost medical service established by All Saints' Episcopal Church under the leadership of PC director of donor relations Jan Roberts and her husband Jim Roberts. The clinic, which opened in September of 1994, is open each Thursday evening to Laurens County residents who have no health insurance and meet certain financial requirements. Since its inception, the clinic has served over 250 Laurens County residents, with volunteers from local churches serving as staffers, nurses, and physicians. PC faculty and staff serve as volunteers in the program, and PC Public Safety officers rotate with Laurens County law enforcement agencies to provide security for the clinic. Local pharmacies and other health care agencies have donated drugs and equipment to see that the clinic patients pay as little as possible (often nothing) for the medicines they receive.

"I was placed on the vestry at All Saints' in 1993 to create an outreach program for Laurens County. I went around the upstate looking at various programs other Episcopal churches had, and in early 1993, we found a free clinic in Spartanburg started by St.

Luke's Episcopal Church that was ecumenical that we really liked," said Jim Roberts, a Clinton businessman.

Roberts and his wife, Jan, began meeting with local church representatives, attorneys, medical professionals, and lay people in 1993. They wrote proposals for grants, requested money from local churches, and began to coordinate the September 1994 opening of the clinic. Almost all Laurens County primary care physicians donate their time to the clinic. Nurses and lab technicians from county medical practices also provide their services at no charge. The clinic stretches from 5:30 until 10 p.m. each Thursday night, according to Roberts, but sometimes spills late into the night so that the 25-30 patients from each session can be seen. Volunteers from the PC community include English professor Dr. Neal Prater, head of library cataloging Marion Prater, and student Dot Morris.

"We have miracles to happen here every night," said Jan Roberts. "We had several Hispanic patients who spoke no English, and someone walked in and asked 'Do you need a translator?' Also, a patient needed crutches, and the next morning two pair were on my front doorstep," she said.

Local churches provide meals for all of the volunteers each week. Most volunteers leave their jobs and come straight to the clinic, according to Jan Roberts. Patients most often complain of hypertension, diabetes, and respiratory problems. Emergencies are sent to Laurens County Hospital, located next door to the clinic. The staff practices entire confidentiality about the patients' medical and financial histories—they are never discussed, even among staffers.

Willie is a third time patient visiting the clinic on Thurs., Feb. 9. He was admitted due to problems caused by high blood pressure. He is unemployed due to a job injury and has no medical insurance. He has no personal transportation to the clinic, although a neighbor was able to bring him this time.

"If it wasn't for this clinic, I wouldn't be able to see a doctor. Before, it was just about impossible to get medical help. I'd be out of medicine for weeks," he said.

Prior to the clinic's opening, Willie would visit the Laurens County Hospital's emergency room for immediate medical attention of any kind. He was unable to afford any other alternative. Recent studies show that usage of hospital emergency rooms as a source of primary medical care is one of the leading factors in skyrocketing health care costs.

"I've been perfectly satisfied. It's (the treatment) all been free," he said.

"We've all been grateful for everything everyone's done. This county has been so supportive. I've been caught up in the spirit of things. I'm so thankful that everyone has helped so much," said Jim Roberts.

Study abroad a vital asset to a liberal arts education

This month, the Blue Stocking focuses its attention on page 6 to off-campus study and the many off-campus programs Presbyterian College offers to its students. Studying at PC can be a wonderful experience; however, there are several factors which sometimes inhibit students from enjoying the total liberal-arts experience here—the small size of Clinton, the small population of PC, and the similar economic backgrounds and environmental upbringing of most PC students. Life in Clinton provides a free, safe, easy-going background for the intensive learning that occurs here. But, the streets of Clinton cannot rival the circuses of London or trekking the Great Wall of China. Nor can Laurens County provide the cultural backdrop of Paris or a leisurely afternoon like that found in the Australian Outback.

Read through the comments and insights of your fellow students who have experienced a study in a different culture. You will find a common theme—it was one of the best times of their lives. They changed, they matured. A time away from what is familiar to each of us is critical to the growth process.

The programs offered by Presbyterian College are as varied as the many nations of the world. PC offers its own summer study program in Oxford, England and the college plans to expand its summer programs to include study in South Korea. Students may also study in Finland, China, Australia, Spain, and many other nations.

To enjoy a liberal-arts education at its best, one must allow him or herself a total immersion in a foreign culture...to be alone for a semester will advance and enhance the knowledge that has occurred both in and out of the classroom here in Clinton. The Blue Stocking commends the college administration for ensuring that valuable financial aid and scholarship dollars can be applied to approved study-abroad programs. PC is one of the few colleges in this area to provide such a serious commitment to studying in a different culture.

Never again will you have the opportunity to take advantage of the tremendous learning experience a study in a different culture offers. While the PC community may offer security, comfort, and relative closeness to family and friends, a study abroad offers you the rare chance to get to know yourself, a different culture, and the meaning of a study in the liberal arts firsthand.

By Gray Lesesne

I am currently enrolled in the Third World Seminar and Experience course offered by the departments of religion and interdisciplinary studies, taught by Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain of the college and Dr. Celia Fryer, assistant professor of modern foreign languages. The course is designed to expose 10 students each spring to the problems of poverty both here in the United States and in Central America. Key components of the course include travel to Honduras over spring break and to a homeless shelter in Atlanta before spring break.

We recently visited The Open Door

Atlanta's Open Door a great place to help yourself... help others

Community, a homeless shelter started by PC alumnus Ed Loring to serve the many street people and those without homes in the metropolitan Atlanta area. As soon as the PC group arrived, we were in culture shock. To say that PC is an isolating and sheltering environment is an understatement. We become so used to riding around in our plush cars, living in heated, comfortable dorms, attending meetings, and advancing in studies so that we may benefit, that we forget about those who are less fortunate. Sure, we have SVS and many organizations who sponsor charities on campus, but how often are we ripped from our comfort zones for more than a couple of hours and immersed in a culture of total poverty, need, and basic living? How much do Darwin's biological theories or applied management strategy help us then? Although we were able to use our hands and our heart to reach out to the people of The Open Door, our education and prior experiences had failed to prepare us for the emotional turmoil, anger, and hurt we felt at a world which has the resources to house and feed everyone on this planet, but doesn't due to greed and hate.

Christopher and Adrian sleep on the front steps of The Open Door every night. They could come inside the community (like any other homeless person) if they agreed to abide by the strict living standards and demands of the community. But, they choose to try and make it on their own. They tell funny stories and tall tales to pass the time. But, put them in a pair of jeans and a PC sweatshirt and no one could discern them from the average PC student. Adrian led a life of luxury until he quit a $22,000 drug dealing job several months ago. Christopher is a former college student who couldn't afford to make payments on his college loans. They are not winos or bums. They do not stink. They may ask you for a quarter or dollar on the street, but could just as easily explain the effects of British mercantilism on the colonies (Adrian compared the mercantilism of the 1800s to the drug network of Atlanta). They lead a transitory life, with all of their possessions packed in plastic garbage bags, neatly stashed throughout midtown Atlanta.

But what would the average PC student do if they saw these people? Students from major cities in our class had no idea that homelessness exists as it does in some of the most prosperous southern towns. We ride by the homeless, the poor, the impoverished, every day, jamming to our R.E.M. lyrics, caring for maybe a moment. But do we really care? Who are we serving when we attempt to fulfill our college's motto of "While we live we serve?" It often seems that the only people we serve are ourselves.

The community members at The Open Door believe that Christ returns to the earth under the stranger's guise. Isn't the stranger the homeless, the poor, the needy? Shouldn't we show compassion to the stranger on the street just as Christ would? Presbyterian College is a wonderful place, but it is often used as a stepping stone to something better, something higher—an on ramp into the rat race of the modern world. In that rat race, we often forget about those who are less fortunate, those who won't be a PC alumnus or a member of the country club. Shouldn't we remember those who have nothing but love to try to give ourselves even more?

Student asks for 'support' of Pac saC not continual 'slamming'

Dear Editor,

I am a Greek AND on the staff of the Pac saC, and I was very upset by the latest letters in the Blue Stocking. Ms. Bunch says that she was appalled at the audacity of the staff to offend the Greek system, but I would like to point out that she misquoted the Pac saC. There is a word missing in that first sentence. What it actually says is, "Despite logo-bearing T-shirts and not-so secret rituals, organizations at PC not at all exclusive." Obviously, there is a mistake, but for Ms. Bunch and Ms. Lawton to assume that they knew the intentions of the editor is childish and highly offensive. It also upsets me that they assume the entire Greek community is offended. I think that my Greek friends and I are smart enough to take it for what it actually was—a mistake. And if Ms. Lawton and Ms. Bunch have a difficult time with the concept of a mistake, I'd like to point out that in Ms. Bunch's letter there are two sentences with words missing. Proof positive that, no matter how professional we try to be, mistakes happen. Should I, then, insert words where I see fit and proceed to be offended by them?

Since the last editor of the Pac saC is no longer here, we will probably never know exactly how that sentence was supposed to read, but I fail to see the point of blaming one staff for the mistake of another.

The staff of the 1994-1995 Pac saC has been working very hard to overcome the old reputation of the yearbook, but with people like Ms. Bunch and Ms. Lawton, who seem to be looking for reasons to be offended, I'm not sure that we're going to be able to. With the support of the student body and the faculty, the Pac saC can only get better, so if Ms. Lawton truly believes that this is HER Pac saC, then I challenge her and Ms. Bunch to stop slamming it and start supporting it.

'95 Pac saC Editor seeks to clarify accusations and clear name of publication

Dear Mr. Editor:

I write in response to the two letters from Miss Ashby Lawton and Miss Catherine Bunch that appeared in the last issue of the Blue Stocking. There are always two sides to a story. Unfortunately Miss Bunch and Miss Lawton never saw fit to extend the common courtesy of discussing this matter with me or anyone else on my staff.

I will not apologize for the comment found in the organization section divider because no one on the 1995 Pac saC staff had any connection with it. The Editor-in-Chief writes all copy for divider pages. Unfortunately, the former Editor-in-Chief graduated in December of 1994 and is not here to answer to the allegations made. This is the precise reason I have such a problem with the letters to the editor: since the person who wrote the sentence is no longer on campus, these letters serve no purpose. Miss Bunch seemed to call into question the professionalism of the 1995 Pac saC staff. Anyone on campus who takes the trouble to examine our new staff closely will find an organization that takes great pride in its work, is efficient to the point of being ahead of schedule, and uses the highest standards of journalism. I question the professionalism of the Panhellenic Council and the Order of Omega for making such accusations without questioning any member of the Pac saC staff.

Miss Bunch said that it was aggravating to see all of Panhellenic's hard work be undermined with the stroke of a pen. Her and Miss Lawton's pens ironically undermined the hard work of the staff of the 1995 Pac saC, which is working hard with the Greek presidents to ensure that the pictures of their organizations published this year did not include anything that could damage the image of the Greek system. Obviously these efforts on the part of our extremely capable Greek section staff have not been noticed or appreciated. I would like to point out that out of a total of twenty-eight staff members, 38% or ten, are members of the Greek system. I also point out that 38% is very close to the 42% participation in the Greek system on campus. I cannot speak for the staff of the 1994 Pac saC because I was not the Editor-in-Chief, but the 1995 Pac saC is sensitive to the Greek system and has a fair amount of representation on our staff.

I would like to point out that when reading the opening sentence of the organization section divider, with the verb "are" missing, the sentence can be interpreted in several different ways. I also point out that when Miss Bunch quotes the sentence in her letter, she inserts the "are" where she thinks it should be and deletes the word "at" from the sentence entirely. As I read the sentence I think that it very clearly could be interpreted to say, "Despite logo bearing T-shirts and not-so secret rituals, organizations at PC are not at all exclusive." In fact, with the word "despite" included in the beginning of the sentence, I think that this is the predominant interpretation of the sentence. Given that because the author is not here and available for questioning, both Miss Lawton and Miss Bunch are jumping to conclusions when they interpret the sentence in the manner they have.

Both of the letters spoke of the PC family and community and how the Pac saC belongs to everyone on campus, and they are correct. However, it is unfortunate they felt it necessary to criticize the hard work, efforts, and extremely large time commitments made by twenty-eight of the hardest workers on campus (ten of whom are Greeks) who had nothing to do with the statement in question. I invite anyone in the future who may have a problem with the Pac saC to come and discuss it with someone on our staff. Our door is always open, and we are always willing to listen. After all, as Miss Bunch pointed out, nobody is perfect. As everyone, the Pac saC is constantly trying to improve itself and become better. We would just like the opportunity to discuss how we can improve without being sent to the newspaper first. By discussion, we can all become better, by publishing comments without discussion, however, no one's best interests is served.

Jay Therrell
Editor-in-Chief, 1995 Pac saC

Student wants fewer excuses and more improvement in Pac saC operation

Dear Editor,

Cost overruns (or to be blunt, DEBT) on the yearbooks and late ones at that! I honestly have to say that this is just a bit ridiculous. I don't want to offend anyone or get mad, but this is a situation that should not exist at a college of PC's stature. I personally worked on my school yearbook three years in row, two of which I held editorships of various sections. My school went from Pre-K to Twelfth grade—a lot more students than this college has. The yearbook was also 300 to 400 pages plus and won awards every year. And it was always on time. I understand the hard work and time that goes into these books. My freshman year at UGA saw the release of their monstrous yearbook on time. What's the problem here? I don't think one should blame it on yearbook companies that are not meeting "our needs." Could the problem be bad leadership? No timetables that are set in stone? When I worked on yearbooks, we set a deadline to turn in a certain number of pages NO MATTER WHAT. If we had to work all night and weekends, we did. Of course, we also had an excellent yearbook company representative that came by probably once a week. It all comes down to the fact that at the end of the school year, a yearbook should be ready with everything included. No supplements. That's a cop out. My father went to a major university and they had graduation photos in their yearbook and they didn't get it three to six months later. They got it on time.

I once volunteered to work on the yearbook, figuring that my experience would be helpful. I never heard a thing. At the time I said it must have been due to an unprofessional staff or editor. It seems that I was right. Never-the-less, my offer still stands. I'm willing to help out, but I never see or hear any announcements that the yearbook needs help. And it needs a lot of help too. I wish the best of luck and fortune to the editor of this year's book. You are going to have to meet some high expectations. I hope the school, whether faculty, administration, or students, can overcome the ridiculous and embarrassing problem. Again, best wishes and good fortune to the editor of the yearbook and his staff.

PC sorority benefits from national board

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

Recently, the Presbyterian College chapter of Sigma Sigma Sigma test piloted a recruitment program designed by its national board. The national recruitment program brought a committee of the sorority's national officers to campus. Four committee members stayed on campus to organize and execute the program.

When the national officers arrived, rumors flew about what was happening inside the sorority, according to Sigma President Kathryn Elliott, who was quick to clarify the situation. "The chapter was never in danger of closing. That never crossed anyone's mind. In fact, our chapter is very efficient and very well-known. We have received numerous awards and have gained national recognition," Elliott said. With 25 active members, Sigma Sigma Sigma is the smallest sorority on campus, something Elliott sees as an advantage. "I enjoy our small group. We seem to have a real bond." Looking at her members during their Tuesday night meetings, she notices "genuine friendships" and "a true sisterhood."

PC is the first small college to test the new recruitment program for the sorority, which has been effective at larger schools such as Florida State University, Penn State University, and the University of Massachusetts. The program involves an open rush, which resembles a formal rush, but is less exclusive. All females at PC were invited to attend rush events to get a feel for sorority life. Sigma's open rush consisted of three scheduled events on three nights. The first event was an Open House, where rushes met with sisters in a casual atmosphere. The second night involved a "Philanthropy Party/Game Night". Rush was concluded with a Preference Party on the third night. Elliott is pleased with the outcome of the recruitment program. In addition to hosting national officers, PC's chapter welcomed sisters from Oglethorpe University to stay for a weekend.

"We had a lot of fun. We all really enjoyed it," said Elliott. The chapter gained three new members as a result of the national program. Elliott thinks that growth of the chapter is important and that the program was a successful aid in beginning their growth process.

PC's chapter is celebrating its five year anniversary this month. The sorority, which was founded in Virginia, has chapters at colleges and universities all over the United States. Recently, the sorority established its first chapter in Alaska. The Alaskan chapter is the first to be established by any sorority in the snowy wonderland.

The PC chapter has scheduled many events for the spring. During the last week of March, the sisters will be holding their major fundraiser, which generates funds for the Robbie Page Memorial. This memorial provides money for play therapy units for sick children. In addition, the sorority will hold its Royal Pearl Formal on March 18th.

Elliott feels that her chapter is moving in a positive direction. She is "energized" by the efforts and support of the national committee, and hopes to make the PC chapter more valuable to the whole college community.

Black History Month provides fellowship, celebration

by Dawn Banks
STAFF WRITER

In 1926 Negro History Week emerged in the United States. This was a week in which many aspects of the black religious and cultural experience was signified in American history. By the early 70's, this week became known as Black History Week. Because history was and is incessantly being made at an extensive degree, in 1976 the week was extended into a month which has become known as Black History Month. Black History Month is a month in which the history of African Americans in the Americas is taken in depth. During this month, prominent black leaders of the anti-slavery and civil rights movements are remembered and honored for their enormous contributions toward the strive for national, civil, and human rights in America. Many prominent caucasian men including George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, John Locke, John Jay, Alexander Hamilton, and John F. Kennedy are also recognized and acclaimed for their accountability in aiding the blacks in their quest for freedom and liberty.

However, because the 28 to 29 days of February are such a short period, a tremendous amount of important African American figures in black history are unmentioned and unrecognized, and are therefore unknown. Black history month seeks to increase public knowledge and understanding of the contributions of African Americans to society.

Fachon Glover, a 1990 PC graduate is the Director of Minority Affairs and Coordinator of Student Volunteer Services. Glover is credited for initiating and coordinating many black awareness activities at PC.

"Minority affairs on campus have tremendously improved over the years," said Glover. Collaboration between the Minority Affairs office and the Administrative staff has improved minority recruitment extensively. Funds and support for minority functions have also increased. The first formal minority affairs event took place in 1986. Since then, the Dr. Martin Luther King Birthday Celebration has emerged into a series of activities beginning in 1991.

Glover recognizes four very significant aspects of minority affairs on campus. First and foremost, the formation of the Minority Student Union. The members of MSU are involved in fund-raisers, volunteer/community services, retreats, and minority awareness activities. Secondly, the emergence of the Gospel Extravaganza. Held bi-annually, this concert has proven to bring the campus together as a whole. This traditional and contemporary Gospel music performance by the PC Student Fellowship Gospel Choir, has drawn crowds from PC and the entire Laurens County community. Third, the opening of the Charlotte Hawkins Brown Center. This facility has provided a social outlet and academic study hall for PC minorities. Finally, the formation of the African American Overnighter. This event increases PC involvement in the South Carolina community and also serves as a forum for minority interaction on campus.

Glover's ultimate goal of minority affairs on the PC campus is to have, "a larger percentage of students of color as well as a balanced female-male ratio present at PC."

"It's positive for all students to establish PC as a diverse community rather than a homogenous one. The real world is diverse and therefore, exposure to diversity during the college years gives these students an advantage in becoming productive citizens," she said.

Glover also hopes to see more women and people of color on the faculty and PC administrative staff, because "different people bring different perspectives to the campus."

Finally, Glover would like to "work herself out of work." This refers to the realization of a time when there would be no need for minority direction of events, and when contributions by all ethnic groups and cultures would be embraced.

Certainly African American history should be celebrated 365 days a year rather than for just one month. Academically, PC offers courses which focus on African American issues. Socially, PC provides students with many black cultural activities such as presentations of black speakers, concerts by black artists, the Student Fellowship Choir Extravaganza, African American Overnighter, Dr. Martin Luther King birthday celebration, Chapel services commemorating black leaders, and much more. Therefore, it is up to each individual to utilize these resources to increase their social awareness and enrich their sense of African American history.

SCSL brings politics to life

by Alison Barnard
STAFF WRITER

Comprised of students from 15 South Carolina colleges and universities, the South Carolina Student Legislature is an organization which seeks to simulate government institutions. Students serve as members of the State Supreme Court, the State House of Representatives, and the State Senate. Each fall, the delegates convene in Columbia to pass legislation and hear cases in the Supreme Court.

True to the form of the state legislature, the SCSL is a bipartisan organization. While the activities of the student legislature are only simulations of congressional procedure, some of the SCSL's ideas have been incorporated in real legislation. The most noteworthy examples of this are the state seat belt law and several crime bills. PC has always been well-represented in the SCSL. Melinda Diller, a former governor of South Carolina Student Legislature, said, "SCSL focuses on education of undergraduates about the legislative process at the state and the national level. I have certainly enjoyed it." Karen Frierson, this year's Speaker of the House, said, "Some of my best friends are from SCSL. It's a really a lot of fun." For more information about the South Carolina Student Legislature, contact Karen Frierson or Dr. Dave Gillespie.

Many students that attend PC choose to study off campus and come back from their experience with fresh ideas and a new outlook on life. Programs with a variety of destinations and options available are the responsibility of Dr. Ronald Dempsey, Assistant Academic Dean and Director of Student Records. To give a true account of the benefits and experiences gained by traveling and studying abroad, a compilation of a few student's reflections and comments about these programs follows:

BRAD LOVE Great Britain

During the spring semester of 1994, I had the opportunity to attend the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) and, simultaneously, have an internship with a member of Parliament's House of Commons. While being heavily involved in this program, I had several opportunities to travel extensively in the United Kingdom, Ireland and France.

Living in a flat with four other Americans in downtown London was quite a change from the small, sleepy town of Clinton, SC and Presbyterian College. London, with its millions of people from every walk of life was full of a rich, diversified culture. I experienced life as a native Londoner when a few of my friends and I one night were walking down Oxford Street near Oxford Circus and Soho when we happened upon a police barricade blocking our path. It was a bomb threat. Our first concern was not to get as far away from there as possible—as any red-blooded American's response should have been; rather we were wondering how long the barricade was going to be blocking our path. After three or four mortar attacks at Heathrow Airport, one becomes accustomed to such occurrences. However, do not misinterpret my story, London is a very safe city. London has a very low crime rate compared to its American counterpart Washington D.C.. I felt safer in downtown London at 2:00 a.m. than I have ever felt in downtown Atlanta during the day.

ASHLEY ALLEN Spain

"Yo soy el que ama a la ciudad romántica con amor de fuego."
—Federico Garcia
Lorca

"I am he who loves the romantic city with the strength of fire." When poet Lorca spoke of his love for Granada, his native city, in terms of a love made from fire, he captured all of the fascination, passion, and steadfast admiration I myself experienced as a result of spending a semester there in the study-abroad program.

Every day in Spain a thousand new images, ideas and experiences appeared for my "made with pride in America" background to shape it into a dynamic understanding of a foreign culture. I learned a to see old shapes and colors transformed into the people of another race with other cultural values, standards, and belongings. Bullfighting, nationalism, and an intense Catholicism combined with other cultural phenomena came to form a complex and thorough picture of a society rich in texture and full of views which challenged the previous images I had both of Spain and of myself.

Spain was fun, primarily. But while making new friends, travelling to new places, and seeing new sights were all enjoyable pastimes, my experiences there were also the most educational experience I've ever had. I learned more about different people and was challenged by more circumstances than I could ever have hoped to have encountered at PC, and that is why I would recommend participating in a study-abroad program to every student on this campus.

MELANIE ABRAMS China

I don't know how or why I decided to go to China, but I do know it was one of the best decisions I have ever made. The initial shock of a third world country was extremely hard for me. The ride from the airport to our campus was an hour of frantic thoughts including, "Why did I ever want to come here?" However, the next four months was my answer.

It is impossible to sum up everything my experience meant to me. However, one of the most amazing things I learned while in China was the difference between the really important and really unimportant things in life. Through my friendships with Chinese students, I was able to see just how sheltered and privileged my life has been. I will never be told how many children I'm allowed to have, what city to live in, what profession to have or most importantly, what I'm allowed to believe. It's one thing to hear about the lives of people in China and other communist countries. It is an extremely different thing to experience it first hand. It means more to me than I can say, that I had the opportunity to experience such a different culture first hand.

BRACKEN CARR Oxford Summer Experience

This Oxford experience has touched my heart and soul. My mind was given the chance to learn science, history and philosophy yet it has experienced and transcended my wildest expectations.

I will truly miss this place after I have time to rest and look at the pictures and memories that this journal projects. I will laugh and cry and remember how this land called England and these students and teachers called friends and family have brought my life a richer sense of living. A part of my spirit, with its golden wings, will reside here in this pastoral, breezy haven forever.

AVERY CHEVES Washington, D.C.

Studying in Washington, D.C. for a semester was the best experience of my life. I can't describe it in only a few sentences because there were so many different aspects to it. I studied journalism and politics and lived in a dorm on the American University campus with other students on the same program. Seeing how our government works and actually being a part of it was an incredible, eye opening experience. And my internship with the Family Research Council was a wonderfully educational opportunity. I would highly recommend the Washington Semester Program to anyone who is slightly interested in politics. I only wish I had the opportunity to do it again.

College offers semester in China

Presbyterian College students will have the opportunity to study in China in the fall semester of 1995 in a program offered by the South Atlantic States Association for Asian and African Studies (SASASAAS). The program will be administered by Wake Forest University and will be based at Beijing Foreign Languages Normal College.

A student will earn sixteen hours of credit, ten of which will be in Chinese language. In addition to the language course, the student will take two courses which will be taught in English. China in Perspective is a survey course taught by Chinese scholars and is designed to increase the student's understanding of various aspects of Chinese culture. Selected Contemporary Chinese Fiction will be taught by a member of the faculty of Davidson College who will also serve as resident director of the program.

In addition to course work, there will be a variety of activities and excursions in and around Beijing. Students will have the opportunity to attend theatrical performances, films, and opera as well as temples, the Great Wall, the Ming Tombs, and festival celebrations.

The cost of the program is approximately $7,050 and includes orientation, room, board, tuition, organized cultural excursions, textbooks, and other educational materials, visa fees, and round trip airfare. The program will be competitive and students must submit applications by March 1. Students should have a minimum GPA of 2.8, demonstrated ability in foreign language study, and serious interest in the study of Chinese culture.

Students should contact Dr. Burnside at ext. 8358 for more information or for application forms. For information they may also contact the following students who have participated in the program: Melynda Ray, Melanie Abrams, Ashley Riddle, Jennifer Tiscornia, Jennifer Fouse, Todd Stanley, and Jesse Frey.

Men's basketball "playing as a team"

by Margaret Ellen Pender
SPORTS EDITOR

Though sentiment is not commonly a component of sports articles, there is certainly a time to deviate from the normal cut-and-dry, play-by-play routine of sports journalism. Examining the 1994-1995 Presbyterian men's basketball team should definitely qualify as an instance to indulge; their accomplishments in the past three weeks have indeed been a testimony to the power of the human spirit and, again, to the power of sweat and perseverance.

While the connection between country music and basketball may seem remote, forget for a moment your preconceived notions that the two have no relationship. Think if you will of these moving words penned by a modern songwriter: "When we stand together, it's our finest hour, (and) we can do anything..."

Perhaps the connection is becoming a little more obvious. About three weeks ago, the Blue Hose men's record stood at 4-11 after suffering a 49-66 setback to intrastate rival Wofford, and the majority of the sports community had written off the remainder of the season. With the injury of top-returner Brian Franklin still casting a looming shadow over the rather young team, the loss of two other key players seemed to seal the disappointing fate of a program so accustomed to success.

Someone must have forgotten to inform the Blue Hose, however, that they were supposed to lurk in the doldrums of the SAC. Since the loss to the Terriers, the Blue Hose have posted a 5-1 record which includes victories over SAC rivals Catawba (86-74), Elon (90-68), Wingate (69-43), and second-ranked Carson-Newman (58-55). The other win came against the Flying Fleet of Erskine College (60-48). During this period of great fecundity, the sole loss incurred by the Hose was a one-point nail-biter at Gardner-Webb.

To what could this burst of dominance be attributed? According to head coach Greg Nibert, there is one primary reason that the Hose are beginning to add a little weight in the "W" column: "we are really playing as a team!" And just as in most areas of life, more great things can be accomplished by a group of people working together than by a loose association of individuals who are simply toiling in the same arena. "Our guys are passing the ball well; we have lots of assists each game (14.9 per game)."

Senior guard Ernest Holiday and freshman point guard Patrick Johnson have been piloting the passing attack for the Blue Hose, but juniors Ty Phillips and Billy Murphy have provided some valuable minutes off the bench for the Hose, as well.

"Taking care of the basketball" says Nibert and getting it to the open man will enable the Hose to attain one of his keys to success—shooting over 50% from the field.

Offense, however, is only half the battle, and in fact most old-school coaches would tell you it's the more crucial of the two. Seeing the frustration that can result from a poor shooting night, my old high school coach used to say, "It doesn't matter if we don't score a basket as long as they don't either."

The Blue Hose of '94-95 seem to have returned to that basic philosophy of hard-nosed basketball. Currently the Hose lead the SAC in scoring defense, allowing only 65.7 points per game, and in rebounding margin (+6.5).

Nibert reiterates the importance of concentrating on defense and acknowledges that his squad "is playing great team defense."

Sophomores Ronnie Cannon (9.8 ppg) and Andre Newman (10.6 ppg) continue to provide a powerful punch for the Presbyterian offense, but the consistent performance new-arrival Steve Rydzewski (11.4 ppg, 14 blocks) has often propelled the Blue Hose over the top. Steady improvement is also evident in the other freshman center Eric Rothwell, who chipped in 14 points versus Carson-Newman.

Upcoming action for the Hose includes road trips to Lenoir-Rhyne, Newberry, and Catawba. The men return home to face Gardner-Webb on Saturday, Feb. 25, which will be their final regular season game at Templeton.

Financial aid cutbacks frighten administrators, educators

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

A major factor contributing to the popularity of the GOP at the polls in November was the Contract With America, the brainchild of new House Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.). The contract calls for sweeping reform to the current legislative system, in hopes of reducing government and creating a more efficient system in which to make law.

Among ten bills listed on the contract is the Fiscal Responsibility Act. This bill proposes $20 billion in cuts to federal student aid over the next five years. Among the programs to be affected by this proposal are the SEOG and SSIG grant programs, the Federal Perkins loan, Federal Work-Study, Federal Stafford loans, and possibly the Pell Grant. A significant element of this proposal is the idea of eliminating the Student Loan Interest Exemption. This means that the government would no longer subsidize interest on loans, increasing significantly the amount students are required to pay back after graduation. Currently, government pays the interest on student loans while a student is still in school, and for 6 months after leaving school. Under the new plan, it would be the responsibility of those students to pay for that interest. This means that a debt of $34,000 would become a debt of $43,000. Student indebtedness would increase by more than 25%, according to recent studies.

"For many students, that would make a big difference," said Judi Gillespie, director of PC financial aid. Under the new plan, PC would only stand to lose about $180,000 in federal funding. While not crippling to PC, it would still have a profound influence on daily operations. PC has a distinct advantage over some schools in that it has a large private endowment to draw from in the event that funding is lost, said Gillespie. Public colleges and universities would face hard economic times if funds are cut.

Perhaps in greatest danger are traditionally black schools in the United States, which rely immensely on federal funding. At these schools, a majority of the student bodies is first-generation college students, who come from working class families.

Dr. Booker Ingram, professor of political science, fears any cuts of federal aid to schools, especially traditionally black schools. "I have to be concerned about the opportunities for poor and working class students," said Ingram.

A high danger for schools is that financial aid awards are being made for the next academic year based on the assumption that those government funds will still be in place. It could happen that this bill be passed in June or July, which would force schools to take from students money that has already been promised to them.

Recent surveys show that next to Social Security, student aid is the issue Americans will most strongly defend.

"Investing in education is the best thing we can do for America," said Gillespie. "In cutting aid for education, we're defeating America in the long run," she said.

Lady Hose victory propels squad to head of conference

by Lucy Mahon

"Good, good, good, good...nice!" echoes through the gym every afternoon. The players run from one drill to the next as coach Beth Couture calls out these words of motivation while they work. Intensity is never lost, and a supportive attitude is held constant. Coach Couture has much to be pleased with these days. The women's basketball team has really come together in recent weeks. There's a noticeable difference in the team, but not one that you can easily point out.

Perhaps the change is due to the fact that their hard work in practice is paying off. Or maybe it's that the team's hunger for winning has increased after each game in their eight game winning streak. Dare one even say that it could be because this group of women would like to see the oh-so sought after SAC Championship rings on their fingers. Whatever the reasons may be, whatever it takes seems to be what they're willing to do to be number one.

The Blue Hose have improved their SAC record to 8-2 moving themselves into a three way tie for first place with Carson-Newman and Wingate. All three teams have played each other twice already and split games, so in order to break the tie a team must lose to fall out of first place. "We control our destiny," Couture said, "It's in our hands."

The fact that all the players have now accepted the adjustments that Couture made at the outset of the season has allowed each player to establish her roll on and off the court.

The three seniors have provided a backbone of this squad and have displayed tremendous leadership—each in her own way. Guard Leigh Irwin continues to provide quality experience in the backcourt and often initiates the abundant enthusiasm off of the court.

Kaye Watts, who was named to the NCAA South Atlantic Regional All-Tournament Team as a guard last year, has made the transition to the so-called "4" position (a power forward) for most of this year, yet she has adjusted successfully and has remained a key contributor, as she has scored over 900 career points.

The third senior, Melanie Johnson, has stepped up to assume much responsibility for the fate of this squad as well. In an age of vocal, show-boating stars, Johnson simply "gets it done" on the court. She has enjoyed much success this year and leads the Blue Hose in scoring (15.5 ppg) and field goal percentage (49.2%).

Another dominant force for the Hose has been junior Kristy Tarallo. She leads the team in steals (63 for the season), assist (4.2 pg), and rebounds (7.6 pg). Not surprisingly, she has distinguished herself in the SAC as well and has placed herself in the league's top 10 in five different statistical categories. Over the course of the season, Tarallo has been ranked sixth in scoring, eighth in rebounding, third in steals, fourth in assists, and tenth in field goal percentage.

The frontcourt has not been dominated by a single individual but rather has been a battle ground for several players. Freshman Denyel Barman has started frequently, and she had seen increased amounts of playing time. She is third on the team shooting percentage (43.8%). Partner-in-crime, Tonya Kelley, continues to improve as well, and together they have provided the much needed depth on the Blue Hose bench this year.

Junior Jennifer Mims leads the team in blocked shots (33 for the season), while sophomore Watoma Williams has come off the bench on numerous occasions to contribute on both ends of the floor. Evidencing her great strides in refining her game, Williams now averages 7.3 ppg and is second on the team in rebounds (6.0 pg).

Junior guard Chris Mitchum has shown increased confidence as she has settled into her roll as the point guard. Currently she stands as the team's third leading scorer, due largely to her accuracy from three point territory (42 on the season). Recently Mitchum matched her season-high of 20 points including a five-of-11 effort from the three-point land as Presbyterian defeated Wingate, 79-65.

The Lady Hose travel to Lenoir-Rhyne this weekend and then face the Indians of Catawba on the road on Feb. 22. The Hose return to Templeton on Feb. 25th for a contest against Gardner-Webb.

Baseball team's plan: SAC championship

by Elizabeth Hartman
STAFF WRITER

After months of preparation under the instruction of second year coach Doug Kovash, the PC baseball team has finally begun its season. The Blue Hose traveled to Georgia College on Feb. 12 for their first double-header but were defeated 4-2 and then 10-2. The team will continue to play away until they face Coker on Feb. 21 at 3 p.m.. The Blue Hose finished last season with an overall record of 25-22, breaking the school record for wins. They also placed 7th in the South-Atlantic Conference with a record of 8-13.

With three returning seniors and a great deal of underclassmen talent, this season looks rather promising for the Blue Hose, according to team players. Senior outfielders Elton Pollock and Paul Bushway, along with senior pitcher Matt Tebbetts, hope to lead the team to a successful season. Pollock was named 1st Team All-South Atlantic Conference in 1994, as well as being elected All-South Atlantic Region and All-South Carolina. Bushway and junior Albert Mitchell were both named 2nd Team All-South Atlantic Conference and Matt Tebbetts was invited to pitch for the Chittenden Cubs in the NBC World Series in Wichita, Kansas.

Starting 3rd baseman Ryan Kane, who is only a sophomore, was invited to the USA Team Trials in Nov. 94 and will have a chance to represent the USA in the 1996 Olympics. Kane was also selected to the Eastern Division All-Star Team this past summer.

"We're going to look really good this year," says sophomore Brandon Pressley. "We have a strong defense and good offense, and the pitching is even better than expected," he said.

"I think we have a good chance to do very well this year," said Jonathan McCutcheon.

"An extra years experience at each position, plus added depth in the middle-infield, should prove to be a great asset in our quest for the South Atlantic Conference Championship," said sophomore Adam Cantrell.

"Consistency in all positions, especially the pitching staff, is what we need to lead us to the SAC Championship," said Anthony Losey, who looks forward to "many wins and a successful season."

Sprouse welcomes students with open heart, refrigerator door

by Chris Cohdeach
STAFF WRITER

"The first thing people think of when they think of our house is lasagna, chocolate delight, and our trampoline," begins Rhonda Sprouse, a PC employee and an encouraging face for many students. Secretary for PC's Harper Center, Rhonda Sprouse, is a mother and not just to her three children Amber, Mindy, and Shawn. Sprouse helped to establish the Adopt-A-Student program at Broad Street Methodist Church a year ago. "We started out with 18 (PC students); now, we're up to 54. I am very proud of our PC students," she said. In this program, church members can "adopt" a student from PC, providing them with a home away from home—a place to go that feels like family. Rhonda herself has "adopted" four PC students: Bea Gaffias, Melissa Boyett, Cameron Lokey, and Cassy Helsley.

"She's wonderful. She's like my Mom away from home Mom," says Helsley. "I am so proud of her," said Gaffias. "It is the little things that Rhonda does that makes them feel special, from her famous cooking, to decorating tiny live Christmas trees for her students' dorm rooms," said Gaffias.

Sprouse grew up in a tiny town called Liberty Center, Ohio, among a family of nine. The daughter of Courtney Patton Sprouse of South Carolina and the former Lavon Kigar of Ohio, Sprouse was the eldest of seven siblings.

Sprouse recalls fond memories of her childhood. "Of course I was the baby-sitter; I was always seen carrying my little brothers around town." The most crazy times came when one of the children got sick, because when one gets sick, they all get sick, according to Sprouse. "Once, we all got measles at the same time, and our eyes became very sensitive to light. Our mom would pull us around in the red wagon to entertain us, and there we were, all seven of us, riding around wearing our sunglasses!"

Sprouse left Ohio to move to Waterloo, S.C.. She has lived in the Clinton area for 21 years. In February of 1988 Sprouse came to PC to work in the Chaplain's office. She now works as a secretary for the Drama Department. It was at the Clinton Bowling Alley and Skating Rink that Rhonda first met her husband, Bennie Sprouse. "He came to my house the next day, and we've been together ever since," she said. They will be celebrating their 20th wedding anniversary this year.

They welcome PC students with open hearts, as well as an open refrigerator door! "We keep in touch with all of our PC students. They know they can call or visit anytime," said Sprouse.

On-campus vandalism prompts "zero-tolerance" proposal

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

First floor Barron Hall residents awoke on Feb. 21 to a wet mess as a result of vandalism to a water fountain. The chaos broke out after a student came in from a night of partying and "with no clear regard for that property, put too much weight on the water fountain," according to Andy Altizer, director of residence life. Pipes were ruptured and puddles of water were on the hallway tile floor and carpet. Initially, college officials thought the incident would cost a significant amount to repair, but according to Altizer, the cost for repair and clean-up came out to under $40.

Recent incidents have prompted several members of the Judicial Council to propose amending college policies concerning on-campus vandalism. In the past, vandalism cases have been handled by the Judicial Council and most have resulted in community service, fines, and restitution. However, this policy is not entirely satisfactory to some members of the administration and Judicial Council. Council member Gray Lesesne believes that an amendment to college's Code of Conduct is in order.

Lesesne is proposing that PC should adopt a "zero-tolerance" policy toward vandalism. Lesesne's proposal includes a stipulation that the minimum punishment for a vandalism conviction, however great or small the cost, be suspension for the remainder of the semester in which the action takes place.

"If this college, including the administration and student body, is serious about ending on-campus vandalism, then it needs to adopt a tougher policy. Otherwise, I don't think the administration or students have a legitimate reason to complain about the wasted dollars and senseless destruction that occurs here over and over again," said Lesesne, who plans to take his proposal before the SGA and seek its approval before presenting the new policy to the faculty. All amendments to the Honor Code and Code of Conduct must receive SGA and faculty approval. Under his plan, all convictions of any vandalism offense would result in a semester-long suspension, unless six of the nine Judicial Council members who sit on each trial vote to modify the suspension, as is the procedure during proceedings involving the Honor Code.

"We take vandalism seriously, and we think it should be taken more seriously by the student body," said Altizer.

much power to the Judicial Council. Barron finds fault with the Knapsack definition of vandalism. According to the Knapsack, "Vandalism is defined as willfully or ignorantly destroying, damaging, or defacing property belonging to another, the College, or the public." Barron feels that this definition is "too broad" and "too subjective." He would prefer to keep authority in the hands of the administration.

"It sounds like a good proposal, but it should not be taken to extremes. If a student drops a piece of trash on the floor, certainly that shouldn't be considered in the same category with breaking a window or the ceiling, for example. The plan would have to be well written and depend on the circumstances," said Bill Wright, a Bailey Hall RA and prosecutor for Judicial Council.

"In most cases we see, the vandalism is unintentional," said Joe Nixon, dean of student affairs. Barron fears that even the most minor, unintentional offenses would be subject to the "death penalty."

Council member Tobin Turner agrees with Nixon, adding, "I think each case should be looked at individually. As an RA I have had numerous students come to me and confess to vandalizing the dorm, often something as small as breaking a window. That is surely unacceptable behavior, but the student certainly shouldn't be kicked out of school."

"Vandalism shows lack of responsibility and does not reflect the sense of respect that we profess to show to PC," said Melissa Boyett, also a member of the Judicial Council.

"The zero-tolerance plan is an excellent idea mainly because it would hold students accountable for their actions and express the College's concern for the lack of consideration students show to campus," she said.

"Compared to other schools, PC doesn't come anywhere close to the volume of incidents the other schools see. Whereas we see perhaps 5 or 7 incidents of vandalism a month, larger schools see 5 to 7 incidents per weekend," said Altizer.

In addition to the recent case in Barron Hall, the most noteworthy incidents have included fires in Doyle and Bailey Halls and a shattered door in Georgia Hall. The Georgia Hall incident, similar to a case which occurred last year, remains unsolved. Last year, a student who had forgotten his dorm card smashed the door to get in to the building. The computerized lock mechanism was also damaged in the incident. The college spent an estimated $500 to fix the door and lock mechanism this year. Typically, repair fees are assessed to the guilty student or to the hall, but in this case, no student was ever caught.

"Vandalism hurts the entire school, since it causes a useless waste of money for repairs. It is this waste of money that hinders the purchase of housing materials such as new lobby furniture and mattresses. In the past, we haven't had too much trouble finding money for these items, but with needless wastes of money, these things become more difficult to purchase," said Altizer. Altizer has recently stepped up his punishments for vandals, finding himself less tolerant toward the offenders. One new way he has begun punishing vandals is by restricting their access to other residence halls.

"If these people don't know how to treat their own dorms, I don't think they're worth other dorms with respect," said Altizer.

Presbyterian College officials look for the school to be moving in an even more health-conscious direction with a recent proposal of a new campus fitness center. The center will be located adjacent to Springs Campus Center and house a variety of equipment, including cardiovascular, and free-weight equipment. College officials wish to locate the center, which has not received formal approval, on the volleyball court next to the indoor pool on the east side of Springs.

"We're looking at a floor area around three thousand square feet," said Bryan

Madden, assistant Springs Director and project coordinator. The new center would connect to Springs with a possible changing area joining the two. No plumbing for showers or expanded locker rooms is scheduled.

"The need for a center is apparent with the large amount of student interest in wellness. Our current facilities are pretty sparse," said Randy Randall, who oversees Springs Campus Center.

The fitness center would be available to all PC students and faculty during regular Springs hours. Under consideration is a plan to open the center from six to nine in the morning for those who wish to exercise before class. For assistance, a trained student would be present at all times to answer questions and give help to any who may need it.

The variety of equipment in the center would range from stairmasters and bicycles to bench press and leg press equipment. Overall, with the nautilus, cardiovascular, and existing equipment, nearly thirty machines would be available.

"Getting the drawing finalized is the stage we're at right now," said Madden. Once the source of funding has been determined and gathered, and other preliminary stages completed, the fitness center could be ready for use as soon as one to two years from now, said Madden.

PC English professor selected as Fulbright Scholar to teach, study in Norway

In the academic world, the acceptance of an award as prestigious as the Fulbright Fellowship would most likely be the defining symbol of accomplishment in an educator's career. In August of 1995, Dr. Rachel Stewart will begin a ten month sabbatical at the University of Tromsø in Norway on her second Fulbright Lecturer/Research Fellowship where she will further enhance her career as an educator in the field of American literature.

A professor of English at Presbyterian since 1973, Stewart has been the recipient of the Distinguished Service Award and the Distinguished Teaching Award from the college. She has also served as chairman of the Faculty Development Committee and the PC Publications Committee, as well as editor on several planning committees. Stewart's accomplishments are not limited to the PC community. A Phi Beta Kappa graduate from the University of Colorado, she has garnered such prestigious awards as a Woodrow Wilson Citation in 1968 and a Ford Foundation Fellowship in 1969. In 1988, Dr. Stewart established student exchange program. used her first Fulbright to serve as a guest "I was delighted and astonished when

learned of the award, because I had already won one and I was told that it was very rare to win another one," said Dr. Stewart. She explained that the process is "very competitive" and that "the hardest part was making it through the two levels in the United States." There are five levels in the Fulbright process, with the last three involving approval of the national board, the university board, and the department of the university in Norway.

While lecturing at the Norwegian university, Dr. Stewart will also be researching Toni Morrison's Nobel Prize-winning novel, Jazz, and assisting students who are graduating from the university with a degree in American studies.

"I am hoping to establish an exchange program similar to the one the college has with Finland," said Stewart.

This Fulbright is the fourth fellowship awarded to a PC professor within the last ten years, with Stewart holding two of those recognitions.

"We are very pleased about Dr. Stewart's award. It is a great honor to her and to the college," said Dr. Neal Prater, chair of the PC English department.

"It is outstanding that the faculty has achieved these awards and been able to receive an international education," said Stewart.

CHOICES

You've been looking forward to Spring Break since the first day of the term! But you still have to decide what you're going to do, where you're going to go and who you're going to be with. One choice should already have been made: the choice to be safe.

Think about it:

- Remember you don't have to be "drunk" to be impaired—even one or two drinks affect your driving skills.
- Stay out of dangerous situations involving alcohol, whether in a car, a bar, or a bedroom.
- Drinking, drugs and driving don't mix.
- Take your turn being a designated driver—get everyone where they are going safely.
- Respect other people's rights, and your own—choose not to drink.
- Respect state laws and campus policies.
- Wear your seat belt—it's your best protection against an impaired driver.
- If one of your friends drinks to the point of passing out, alcohol poisoning is a real danger. If you are the least bit concerned, please seek medical attention. Better safe than sorry!

Play it safe. Have a Spring Break to remember.

PC veteran still vital part of GDH family after 34 years

Walter Robertson has worked in GDH as a receiving clerk for well over three decades. Five children, fourteen grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren later, he still finds the time to put in 10-12 hours a day and spend time with his family.

Dedication and dependability can describe the numerous days of hard work Walter Robertson has served the PC community through his many responsibilities at Greenville Dining Hall. Robertson came to PC straight from his five years service in the U.S. Army and remembers simply being asked if he would take the open position of receiving clerk one weekend as he was visiting some friends that already worked for the college. Recalling his first response to the unexpected job offer, Robertson said, "jobs weren't easy to come by in those days, I gladly took the job."

Today, almost 34 years later Robertson continues to hold the position of GDH's receiving clerk, only with more responsibilities and duties. Charged with checking all food shipments received by the college, maintaining proper food storage facilities, restocking goods, checking equipment, most of the catering responsibilities and the safety of the entire facility, Robertson has full working days with much to attend to. Looking back over the years Robertson has seen thousands of students pass through the lines at GDH and he fondly remembers time when PC students worked alongside the other employees. Robertson said, "I used to know lots of students when they worked with us...I enjoyed that...I wish they would start that [program] again-I don't see students anymore."

Developing relationships with students was something Robertson truly looked forward to every day, those friendships helped maintain an interactive and pleasant atmosphere for the dining hall.

Off-campus Robertson puts his family first and with the size of his immediate family, that is no small task. Robertson proudly spoke of his 5 children, 14 grandchildren, and 2 great-grandchildren and said, "I'm their main source of transportation from here to there." duties for the college, Robertson said it is hard to find time for his family but on his time off that is where his energy is spent. The Robertson family looks forward to attending his annual family reunion, with relatives from all over the state since family is always "a priority" to Robertson. Putting things in perspective helps Robertson focus on the job at hand, and he has done a commendable job thus far balancing the demands of work and time with family. He has given the PC community faithful service from the very start.

Lady Hose seek to continue SAC-8 dominance after tough loss

by Lucy Mahon
STAFF WRITER

It is never pleasant to lose a game—especially when the margin of defeat is only two points. Unfortunately the Lady Hose 77-75 can't erase the loss to Catawba from their record, but the setback struck a low note in the otherwise beautiful symphony of a season because the loss toppled the Blue Hose from a share in the three-way tie for first place in the SAC. Perhaps, however, the old cliché "a stumble may prevent a fall" will prove to be valid for the Hose, who are hoping that the defeat will generate enough intensity to carry them through the SAC playoffs and on to the NCAA regional tournament.

The frustration harbored by the members of the Blue Hose squad was unleashed last Saturday night (Senior Night) against Gardner-Webb, as the Lady Hose crushed the Bulldogs 79-55. Junior guard Chris Mitchum drilled three consecutive 3-pointers at the outset of the contest and scored PC's first eleven points, igniting the powerful offense which continued to dazzle fans throughout the evening.

Mitchum, who tallied 23 points against the Lady Bulldogs, has been the leading scorer for the Lady Hose in three of the last five games, and she recently broke the South Atlantic Conference record for three pointers made in one game. Mitchum nailed 8 out of 12 attempts from behind the line against Senior Melanie Johnson shoots the ball past an overmatched opponent. Melanie has spent the last four years leaving opponents in a blurry dust, as is seen above.

Lenoir-Rhyne, en route to notching a career knew I had made several in the first half, but I had no idea how many I had made until I heard them announce that I had broken a record." Mitchum has also led the team in free throw percentage throughout the season (78.3%), and three point shots made (64), while averaging 11 points a game.

In last Saturday's contest against Gardner-Webb the Lady Hose performed very well overall. Senior Leigh Irwin made vital contributions on both ends of the floor, but most notably through her aggressive defensive pressure on the ball. Irwin also pulled down several rebounds. Senior forward Melanie Johnson was perfect from the line (4-4), and junior center Jennifer Mims "took a charge" for the first time in her career, a feat which set the crowd on fire for the remainder of the contest. Sophomore reserve Catherine Clayton hit a jumper towards the end of the game which ignited a great deal of excitement as well. With eleven minutes remaining in the game, Coach Couture sent in the subs who performed with veteran poise and preserved the large margin of victory. Testifying to the depth which Coach Beth Couture has labored to develop during her six years at the helm of the Presbyterian women's program, junior Kristy Tarallo said, "When our subs come in, it's like the first string is still there."

The Lady Blue Hose faced Gardner-Webb again in the first round of the SAC playoffs on Tuesday night, and from there they hope to advance to the final rounds to be played at Wingate this weekend.

Confident men's team posts strong finish to season

by Margaret Ellen Pender
SPORTS EDITOR

Have you ever wondered why athletic programs may suffer such drastic fluctuations in their level of achievement? Take, for example, the Blue Devils of Duke University. Though they, like all teams, lost several key players to graduation, the Blue Devils still have the personnel needed to be one of the premier programs in the country. Why, then, have they fallen out of the rankings and into the depths of ACC despair?

The primary reason may seem to be the void created by the loss of their head coach to back problems, but his absence is actually the cause of another, intangible problem which has been the root of their fall from preeminence. Since the outset of the season, the Blue Devils have lacked confidence in themselves and their ability to meet the expectations of the public, and as a result they have been plagued by subpar performances.

Now, consider the plight of our Blue Hose. Like the Blue Devils, they certainly have the personnel to claim a position near the top of the SAC yet two months into the season the Blue Hose's record stood at 4-11, and they seemed to be repelling down the mountain of the SAC instead of climbing to the top. Why were the Blue Hose bounding in the wrong direction?

The answer to that puzzling question was quickly discovered as the Hose began to implement Coach Nibert's proposed remedy, the primary ingredient of which was simply working together. In late January, the Hose discovered the pivotal component of success which the Blue Devils still have not been able to develop. Unfortunately, there is no drill or no amount of coaching advice that can enable a team to secure the confidence needed to win ball games, yet the intangible air which surrounds a confident team is easily recognizable and can be a most intimidating force.

This attitude of conviction that winning is the rule rather than the exception first became apparent in the Blue Hose when they defeated the Indians of Catawba 86-74 on January 25th. Since that decisive victory, the Blue Hose have posted an 11-2 record and secured an appearance in the playoffs. More importantly, however, they have earned the respect of their fellow members of the SAC, which in turn has only increased their confidence.

In recent action, the Hose overpowered the Indians of Newberry by a score of 83-78; in that contest sophomore Andre Newman led the Hose with 19 points and 12 rebounds. Last Wednesday, the Blue Hose suffered a disappointing loss at Catawba (55-62) but then returned to Templeton to defeat SAC foe Gardner-Webb (84-80) on Saturday night. In both games, freshman center Steve Rydzewski, who is averaging 11.1 ppg, led the scoring with 12 points and then 20 points, respectively. Rydzewski also pulled down 16 rebounds on Saturday night to increase his average to 8.0 rpg.

Sophomore power forward Ronnie Cannon leads the team in rebounding with an average of 8.6 per game and is third in scoring 10.6 ppg. while fellow sophomore Andre Newman ranks first for the Hose in scoring with an average of 11.4 ppg. Rydzewski, Cannon, and senior guard Ernest Holliday are all shooting over 50% from the field and Holliday has proven to be quite accurate from three point territory as well, where he has hit 43.9% of his attempts.

With a record of 13-13 overall and 8-6 in the SAC, the Blue Hose head into post season play with great confidence that they can muster a strong finish to what seemed like it would be a terribly rocky season. On Tuesday night the Blue Hose faced Wingate in the first round of the playoffs and if victorious will advance to play at Wingate this weekend.

Students elect new SGA leaders Special Olympians visit PC

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

On Wednesday, March 1 the student body took to the voting polls to elect new officers for the Student Government Association. For candidates vying for the position as president of the 1995-1996 SGA, speeches provided a chance to present their respective platforms. There was also a question-and-answer period for students to learn more about specific issues. Two students sought the SGA presidency: Leigh Davis, a three year SGA member, proposed her agenda of increased communication between the college community and the SGA. Her opponent, Todd Laniff, sighted student apathy as PC's greatest weakness. He is concerned that PC is turning in to a "suitcase college" and would have sought to make PC more attractive socially.

In a time where there is much public outcry about "career politicians" some feared that Davis could be out of touch with student concerns, but she is quick to dismiss this argument. She asserts that her time on previous SGA's have served as necessary preparation for the position she will now assume. "I have worked hard during the past three years to gain to the respect of the students, faculty, and administration. I believe that experience is a vital element of effective leadership," said Davis. She sees the SGA as a common ground for every member of the PC community, and intends to make use of the connections she has made to better serve the interests of the student body.

Outgoing SGA president Dallas Olson expresses great enthusiasm toward the new SGA. "I think Leigh is a work horse. These new folks are going to get things done for the students," said Olson. Olson himself was an advocate of increased communication between members of the college community, and believes that Davis will benefit from the work of previous SGA's.

"Our council laid a solid foundation for future councils" stated Olson. "Our council worked hard to open the lines of communication, and I know that Leigh and the other new members will use those lines," Olson went on to say.

Davis will be supported by an executive council consisting of Vice President Susan Hagler, Secretary Brandi Casto, Treasurer Blythe Matheson, SUB Chairperson Lisa Tillman, and Judicial Council Chairman David Spivey. PC women dominated the recent elections, a trend all are happy to see. Some fear that the new members don't accurately represent the PC student body. Olson has confidence in the new SGA, but notes that the overwhelming majority of new members are Greek females. In last week's class elections, women were elected to every class representative and presidential position.

Davis greets the new SGA with excitement and enthusiasm. "The new council is sure to be a great one full of new and exciting leaders and their ideas. I can't wait to get started working with them!" said Davis.

For the 21st consecutive year Presbyterian College played host to over 300 athletes representing 10 schools from Laurens and Newberry counties for the Area Five Special Olympics. The games, held at Bailey Stadium, are a showcase of the area's physically and mentally challenged students who are striving to move on to the state games held later this year.

In the tradition of service synonymous with Presbyterian, over 250 students and staff members volunteered their time to assist with duties such as measuring distances, escorting athletes, serving snacks and lunch, and measuring distances. And in the era of political correctness, an Olympic Town was established for athletes to participate in non-competitive games under the supervision of campus organizations.

Jennifer Fouse, a junior and director of the Olympic Town, said, "It was a wonderful event. It was great to have Greeks and the other campus organizations participating together."

An anonymous freshman remarked about his first Special Olympic experience, "I didn't get to help anyone as much as I would have liked, but I at least helped." Sophomore Lori Lesslie said, "It was good because all of the groups on campus were able to do something together."

Brian Wessinger, a familiar face to all in the PC community, had the privilege of kicking off the '95 Special Olympics by carrying the ceremonial torch in the opening parade. Many Students believe PC 'becoming a suitcase college'

"Do you believe PC is becoming a suitcase college?"

In a recent poll of 32 randomly selected PC students, 65.6%, when asked "Do you believe PC is turning into a suitcase college?" have responded "Yes." The survey, conducted on April 4, shows that in many students' minds, the decreasing number of students who stay on campus is a noticeable problem.

According to Assistant Professor of Business Normin Scarborough, who teaches statistics, the results of this poll are significant. "One can be 90% confident that the true proportion of PC students who would respond 'yes' to this question is 66% plus or minus 14%."

Of the 21 juniors and seniors interviewed during the poll, all 21 indicated that, in their opinion, fewer students are remaining on campus on the weekend than in earlier years of their college career at PC. The students polled gave numerous reasons why they believe this trend is occurring, ranging from an "overrestrictive school administration" to a "lack of creativity" on the part of students.

Of the 21 upperclassmen interviewed during the random poll, all 21 indicated that, in their opinion, fewer students are remaining on campus on weekends than in earlier years of their college career at PC.

Cost increase of 5.5% announced for 95-96 academic year

In a recent letter sent out to students and parents, PC President Ken B. Orr announced that the College's Board of Trustees has approved the new fee schedule for the 1995-96 academic year.

The college's tuition for each semester has increased by $326, for a total of $652 per year. According to Orr's letter, the 5.5% increase in comprehensive student charges is the smallest percentage increase in over 19 years.

A new offering by PC next year will be meal plan. Students may choose from either 15 meals per week or the full 21 meals per week at costs of $1,015 and $1,190, respectively. Leigh Davis, the new SGA president said, "We were very happy to get the meal plan. We worked very hard for it."

Keeping students on campus during weekends needs to be college priority

Monday through Thursday, it is practically a dog fight to get a parking spot anywhere within easy walking distance of Georgia Hall, but come the weekend, the same parking lot transforms into a parker's dream: openings abound. Generally there will be several vacant spots on the very first row. A ride through the Georgia or Bailey Hall parking lots on a Friday afternoon clearly indicates that PC students aren't often the happy, full-time weekend residents they are pictured to be.

Defeated SGA presidential candidate Todd Latiff created controversy recently when he chose PC's "suitcase problem" as one of the primary issues of his campaign. While Latiff's style in handling the issue was questionable, the point remains--PC has a growing problem of keeping its students here on the weekends, one of the college's former trademarks and a key admissions sales factor. Students, this year more than ever, are heading home, to other colleges, or to other destinations to relax and play on the weekends.

Why are students heading away from the campus on weekends? Why is PC becoming a Sunday-Thursday institution? The Blue Stocking staff is incredibly frustrated over the issue, and finds shortcomings with the College for the weekend problem. The College does not provide adequate social facilities or activities for its students. While Springs Campus Center is officially open, the College promptly shuts down the grill and bookstore on Friday afternoons, along with Springs' indoor swimming pool, leaving only the exciting options of ping-pong and a vending machine snack for enchanted weekenders in the campus center. Other than fraternity houses, there are absolutely no social facilities for students on campus on weekends. With a campus that is a majority independent (58%), it is not the responsibility of the Greek system to provide PC nightlife--it is the college's responsibility, and the college, from the Blue Stocking's vantage, appears to have failed. SUB is unable to provide adequate student entertainment with its limited resources. No wonder 58% of the student body (and the 42% Greek population to an extent as well) find it necessary to sometimes go away--there is no place for PC students, Greek or independent, to socialize in a common area on campus. The Dean of Students' office needs to offer a more comprehensive activities program beyond SUB events, a movie channel, and occasional CEP events on Friday evenings.

In very recent years even, PC was a school where students invited their friends to come and visit and stay the weekend. Now, the tide seems to be flowing in the other direction as more and more students are venturing to neighboring colleges and universities to spend their weekends. Incidents, occurring even before classes were in full swing, set the tone early that arrests were to be common, that there was no place for partying, and that the school supported hard work and no play. It was learned early by this year's freshmen that the academics were to be rigorous... but not the social scene. To be fair, the episodes of the first few days have not been the norm this year, but rather the exception; however, the memory of those days is all too fresh in many people's minds.

Students also tend to separate on the weekends because they are not together during the week. Notice the next time you go into Greenville Dining Hall...students stick to their same dining partners at every meal. Other than freshman orientation week, graduation, and homecoming, this campus battles an uphill fight against indifference and emphasis on group activities rather than individual ones. Since we are not together during the week, it only makes sense for us to return to our refuges of safety and comfort on the weekends. For years fraternity court has been a primary place for social gatherings; Greek and non-Greek, alike. Though never the choice of all students, it was a place to meet people and play. This year, due to increased concerns of taking the blame for the action of anyone present, fraternities have unfortunately tightened their social circles as some no longer feel comfortable in a Greek environment, thereby eliminating the chance for intermingling and more attendance. Many students have come to feel uncomfortable with what they once considered a "friendly" system. Students staying on campus have no where else to go and turn to the dorms as a major party spot. In turn such activity repels even the most tolerant residents away from campus, for fear of fines and lack of rest due to such commotion.

The PC administration needs to heed the warning signs of our growing suitcase tendencies, rather than to dismiss the problem as the students and not the school's. Additional on-campus facilities for student socialization and congregation are desperately needed, as well as enhanced student activities from SUB and the Dean of Students office. Emphasis should be placed on community activities for weekend events, not individual groups. Additional resident directors and public safety officers should remain on campus on weekends to prevent vandalism and excessive noise from occurring in the residence halls.

The Blue Stocking commends those students who have the courage to stay on campus and find weekend activities by themselves. Sometimes, PC can be a very lonely place on a cold, weekend winter afternoon. We hope that the college will create and find opportunities to counter that sometimes lonely feeling.

Honor society for Greeks seeks to improve campus visibility and involvement

by Alison Barnard
STAFF WRITER

Currently in its first year, the Order of Omega, a national honor society which recognizes Greek leaders on campus, has 52 members who represent all fraternities and sororities on campus. Criteria for selection include a GPR at or above the average GPR of all Greeks on campus, and involvement in campus activities. "GPR is important, but leadership both in Greek organizations and on campus is even more important," said 1994-1995 Order of Omega President Ashby Lawton.

For an organization so young, the PC chapter of Order of Omega is very active. Members ran a clothes drive for the Laurens Safe Home, and are currently planning a Greek recognition banquet to be held April 23rd. Greek organizations and individuals will be rewarded for community service and academic performance. One senior from each fraternity and sorority will be awarded a scholarship. Fraternity and sorority advisors, Greek varsity athletes, and Greeks with a 3.6 GPR or above will be awarded also. "Membership in Order of Omega is a very high honor for a Greek, because members are selected by fellow Greeks. Our activities have just begun," said Order of Omega member Katy Ross. Honeywell project nears completion; students unsure of improvement

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

Georgia Hall residents returned from Spring Break to find new light bulbs in their overhead lights and new light fixtures in their bathrooms. Throughout the academic year, many students have had similar changes made in their rooms. These lighting upgrades are part of the Honeywell project, an effort to save energy and make the campus more environmentally efficient.

Many students have expressed dissatisfaction with the new lights. The new lights, though, provide the same amount of light that the old fixtures did, and in some places, the new fixtures provide more light. "The dimness of the new lights is due in part to the fact that many students placed high wattage bulbs in the fixtures on their own. Most overhead lighting fixtures were designed for 60-watt bulbs, but in many places students replaced those with 100 or 150-watt bulbs. I'd guess that about 90% of the bulbs we replaced were way oversized. Once the new fluorescent bulbs were installed, the light appeared dimmer. The new bulbs provide the same light a 60-watt bulb would," said Physical Plant Director Jack Robertson. "Since they are fluorescent lights, they take a few minutes to warm up. Most people expect them to be bright right away, but it takes a minute for the gases inside the bulbs to heat up. Once they do, the bulbs are just as bright. I think people just aren't used to the new type of light," added Robertson. "It was my understanding that part of the Honeywell project was to add a new type of lighting in the residence halls. In buildings like Georgia Hall, it was definitely needed. To be perfectly honest, after talking with various students, I'm not sure they see it as an improvement," commented Residence Life Director Andy Altizer.

Georgia Hall Resident Matt Miller affirms that the new lights are insufficient. "Personally, I preferred the old lights. I'm not happy with the light these new lights provide," said Miller. Sophomore Josh Lamkin agrees that the lights seem dimmer, but is glad the new lights save power. "I can live with a dimmer light. It's good to know that the school is saving some energy and money," offered Lamkin.

The Honeywell project, which began over a year ago, is nearing completion. The $1.8 million investment will provide the school with guaranteed energy savings. Most of the changes have been to air-conditioning and heating systems. Many of the large motors and compressors have been replaced with new, more efficient ones. In addition, air-conditioning has been added in Bailey and Laurens Halls, and the heating systems in both have been updated. "The old radiator-type heaters in Bailey were replaced with new blower-type heaters, which use up much less energy," said Robertson.

Vice President for Finance Skip Zubrod cited insured air quality and better regulated control as two important aspects of the project. "We have new computers that regulate temperatures all over campus, and we are currently training our personnel to use those systems," said Zubrod. Temperature sensors have been installed on walls in all campus buildings. Those sensors send information to the main computers and the computers automatically adjust the air-conditioning.

"These new systems will keep building temperatures between 72 and 74 degrees," stated Robertson. The computers also print reports overnight, so that when he arrives at work in the morning, Robertson can see what has happened overnight and make adjustments where necessary.

Zubrod and Robertson agree that there are minor details that need adjustment, but that the project has gone well. "It has taken a lot of time, but I think that overall, it has gone pretty well," said Robertson. "I think the installation has gone very well. The coming months will show us what to expect in terms of savings. I have no reason to believe it won't be successful," added Zubrod.

Choir tours the Northeast; chases stolen bus

Over Spring Break, the choir traveled north on their annual singing tour. This year's trip took them as far as Washington D.C. and New York City. Following their March 4th departure, the choir spent eight days travelling and sharing their music in several cities.

Under the direction of Dr. Charles Gaines, the choir performed numbers taken from the Broadway Cabaret. The purpose of the trip was, "to publicize the college and choir and get people acquainted with the college," said Dr. Gaines.

The choir sang not only in New York City and Washington, but traveled to Allentown, NJ; Alexandria, VA; and Greenville as well. They performed at many memorable locations including the steps of the United States Capitol in Washington and the chapel at Union Theological Seminary in Virginia. "I really enjoyed singing in the cathedrals because it was all so spontaneous," said choir member Ginny Lawton.

Though the trip was a tour of performances, there was also time for sight seeing and fun. Students visited Planet

Hollywood and the Washington Monument while in D.C. In New York, students were able to sit back and listen to some music as they visited such Broadway musicals as Phantom of the Opera, Miss Saigon, and Les Miserables. "The highlight of the trip was definitely Les Miserables and Phantom of the Opera," said Natasha Casada, an officer of the choir.

"No one believed it at first," said Margaret White. "The whole series of events made it all really bizarre."

"We were on a pretty tight schedule for most of the trip, but we had free time," said Casada. "It was fun to be able to relax and go out on our own," she added. "We went ice skating at Rockefeller Center, saw Radio City Music Hall and went to Strawberry Fields, the park where John Lennon was killed." As the tour continued, the choir visited Columbia University, St. John's Divine, and the World Council of Churches.

On Thursday morning, however, the unexpected occurred as the choir emerged from their hotel to find their bus missing, having been stolen during the night. "No one believed it at first," said Margaret White. "The whole series of events made it all really bizarre." Taken with the bus were a tuxedo, some concert dresses, sheet music, and personal items. Riding out of the city on a new bus, someone spotted the stolen bus being driven the opposite direction. The choir phoned 911, but the operator hung up in disbelief. Since then, little has been heard about the bus. Police report that at least five or six others have been stolen as well. Just recently, a Canadian bus driver was stopped, wearing the jacket of the driver of the choir's stolen bus.

"Overall, I came away from this tour with new friendships that I hope will last during my next three years of choir," reflected Lawton. "I definitely won't forget about that bus," she added. "Choir tour made me realize that life is very similar to riding a bus just when you get comfortable, someone comes along and disrupts a pleasurable journey by hot-wiring your mode of transportation," offered choir member Ben Summey.

Residence Hall Association to Replace Mens', Womens' Councils

by Beth Threadgill

Next year, PC students will have a new outlet for their concerns about residence life. The newly formed Residence Hall Association (RHA) will, as expressed in its Constitution's purpose, "represent the residents of all PC residence halls on all matters concerning the residence community. RHA shall be organized to facilitate communications and cooperation between residence halls, seek solutions to problems facing resident students, and to provide and coordinate programs which benefit the campus residence community."

RHA is taking the place of Men's and Women's Councils. "Nearly all colleges and universities have RHAs and RHA gives students a more active voice in all residential issues," explained Residence Life Director Andy Altizer. "The RHA will be an avenue for students to suggest changes to resident hall policies and rules. It will be an excellent way to improve communication between my office and resident students. For my office and the college, an active RHA will make for more efficient room sign-ups, activities programming, planning for new facilities, and developing new policies," he added.

RHA will be made up of students from each residence hall. Every residence hall will have a Hall Council, which will be made up of representatives from each floor or wing of the residence hall. Each Hall Council will elect a hall president, who will meet regularly with their respective Resident Director and conduct Hall Council meetings.

RHA will also have executive officers who will be elected by all residents during the first three weeks of the Fall semester. The RHA president, however, shall be elected in the Spring semester during regular SGA elections. When asked about RHA, newly elected RHA President Stephanie Hogan remarked, "I am especially excited about the new RHA, because it is going to provide so many opportunities for people to get involved. I hope that it will encourage new leaders. This association will prove to be an important addition to PC and I can't wait to get it off to a good start."

PC Public Safety Department recognized by FBI

The Presbyterian College Department of Public Safety was recently recognized by the Federal Bureau of Investigation/National Crime Information Center along with an origination agency identifier number.

PC's Chief Gray Mayson said, "Few private colleges and universities are identified by the FBI-NCIC. Previously we have been identified by the state law enforcement, but now we are officially recognized by the FBI on a national level. Federal, state, county, and municipal law enforcement agencies all over the country will now be able to communicate directly with our agency via the NCIC terminal. This should aid in recovery of stolen items which might be pawned in other cities and states. Any stolen items which have a serial number will be listed directly with the NCIC and identifiable nationwide back to PC."

Chief Mayson encourages all students who have not enrolled in Project ID to do so as soon as possible. The chance of recovery is greatly enhanced by enrolling in PC Project ID.

Judy Bailey makes life in Templeton easier for students, faculty, athletes

by Laura Jacobs
STAFF WRITER

Judy Bailey, familiar to PC students as the faculty secretary in Templeton Athletic Center, finds "something new every day. Different situations always come up. That's the unique part about my job," she said. Bailey works with many types of people and sees many people coming in and out of the facility, "most are hurrying, trying to get from here to there, but the kids are enjoying what they're doing," she said.

Her fondest memory from work is the retirement of coach Cally Gault. "After working with him as long as I did, it was great to do the retirement dinner and hear from successful people that he was appreciated. He really is a special person," said Bailey.

When it comes to work, Bailey is all business. "I do the business end of the athletic department, handling expense reports and getting invoices ready to be sent to the business office. I work directly for Allen Morris and do whatever he needs, correspondence or reports." Bailey's work often continues past normal hours—during football season she helps out at football games and organizes tickets for players' parents.

"She is very hardworking. You could say she lives and dies with the Blue Hose athletic teams and becomes very close to players, periodically giving them motherly advice," said Bob Struck, assistant professor of physical education.

Bailey, a native of Laurens County, spends plenty of time giving motherly advice to her own three grown children and recalls fondly her memories of raising them and the time they spent together. "We were always involved in our kids' lives, we've always felt it is important to be a spectator as well as part of the action," we've done that forever. We always asked how they felt and they were always for our involvement," she said.

Bailey continues her involvement with youth through teaching Sunday school for fifth and sixth grade girls at First Baptist Church in Clinton. She has also been a leader of the youth program in the church, eager to volunteer her services for every need.

When it comes to role models, Bailey's mother is top on her list. "My mom and sister are very strong people. I admire the fact that Mom did a good job raising her family. My sister has been through so much, but she doesn't complain. She has a great outlook and disposition," she said.

Bailey herself has a wonderful attitude when it comes to dealing with her job, said Jay Poag, an assistant football coach. "Judy is very hard working, very friendly, and very dedicated to the athletic department. She handles all the nuts and bolts of what we do down here. She makes our job a lot easier," he said.

When she is not supporting the Blue Hose on the athletic field, Bailey says she spends a typical Saturday "cleaning my house and doing yard work. A lot of times, we go shopping—I do that often!"

She also plays on a USTO Volvo team which competes with other town teams such as Newberry and Greenwood. "I love tennis, and I play as often as I can," Bailey said. In addition to the health benefits from physical activity, tennis gives her an opportunity to be with friends, giving "good fun and time to socialize and just a little bit of exercise."

Her enjoyment of athletics seems appropriate, considering her job at Templeton, as does her enjoyment of people. She takes the ribes of her jovial athletic department colleagues good naturedly, laughing as she says, "You see what I have to put up with?"

Comic coaches certainly are not the only thing this busy secretary contends with on a daily basis, but she handles her many tasks with finesse and proves herself to be an integral part of the college community by keeping Templeton running smoothly.

"People are what life is all about"

by Amanda Barnes
FEATURES EDITOR

It is absolutely amazing the influence we have over one another. When I stop to think about the results of influence, I am astounded in observing the world around me. I see that conformity, prejudice, and suppression of dreams and goals are among the results of this invisible domination.

I must admit to being too easily swayed by the words of others, a fatal flaw I recognize and work against constantly. However, when I look at this "fact of life" from a different angle I see nothing but opportunity. The fact that we do hold other people's opinions in high regard and value their ideas can be used for good and beneficial purposes. That should make us more increasingly aware of what we say to others if nothing else. There are many times I can recall saying things I regretted later, wondering how my words and actions affected that person and their day. There are so many avenues of helping we can pass through in this life, and so many of those paths affect more lives than we will ever know. I will always remember my senior English teacher, Mrs. Patsy Huey, teaching us "The Odyssey" by Alfred Lord Tennyson in which the speaker remarks, "I am a part of all that I have met." That profound statement has proven to be true in my life time after time.

I ponder what kind of influence, if any, I have had on other's lives, knowing that I have been influenced by many people throughout my lifetime. Do others see me as I see myself? Maybe I question too much, and then maybe that is a healthy way to learn about who I am and who I want to be. This is my second year at PC, and I remember how I felt this time last year as the campus hosted Special Olympics. As I looked at the scores of handicapped participants, I saw so many admirable qualities they possessed and I questioned the essential differences between us. I wondered what they could see in me that could bring a smile to their faces or warm their hearts a little. Who I am to others is important and the impression I make on them can make all the difference in the world.

Again thinking about the hundreds of Special Olympics athletes, I try to look at others and at life through their eyes. They depend on one another, they trust almost unconditionally, they give everyone the benefit of the doubt and always find time to enjoy the simple things in life. People are what life is all about—we need each other, and that dependance is a powerful tool, use it carefully.

Milligan to bike across country

by Brian Sacco
PRODUCTION EDITOR

It would be easy for the any member of the public to stereotype fraternity men based on the media's interpretation of Greek males. Fat, drunk, stupid, and lazy womanizers might be a description proposed by some members of our society. But Presbyterian College senior Michael Milligan challenges that stereotype and proves that there is another, more positive description of a fraternity man. This summer, Milligan and 64 other members of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity will spend sixty-two days of their summer vacation riding cross-country from San Francisco, CA to Charleston, SC on the seat of a bicycle. Each cyclist will ride 3,500 miles on the Eighth Annual Journey of Hope, the annual bike trek which is an awareness project of the fraternity's national philanthropy, PUSH America.

Milligan, a member of Pi Kappa Phi's Beta Chapter here at Presbyterian, is the sixth brother from this chapter to participate in the Journey of Hope. Each of the riders must raise $4000 to participate, and due to immense corporate sponsorship from Saturn and Nations Bank, all of the money which the cyclists raise goes directly to the physically challenged through the projects of PUSH America.

"Bicycling across the country is a great opportunity, but more important is the chance to raise awareness for those with disabilities," said Milligan, a chemistry major and football letterman for the Blue Hose.

The purpose of the Journey of Hope is to raise the awareness of physically challenged children, to raise money for the projects of PUSH America, and to give students the opportunity to volunteer their time to help others.

PUSH America is Pi Kappa Phi's national, non-profit organization dedicated to improving the lives of physically challenged children through service projects, such as building handicap accessible playgrounds and wheelchair ramps. Milligan and the members of Beta Chapter would like to encourage everyone to make a tax-deductible contribution to this worthy cause. For more information, contact Milligan or Beta's PUSH Chairman, Creighton Likes.

Special Olympics...

The weather held out long enough for the athletes to enjoy a beautiful day of track and field events ranging from a 50 meter dash to a softball throw. This was also a great opportunity for the PC community as a whole to come out, enjoy a beautiful day, and work together to help others.

Junior Cecilia Barksdale remarked, "Special Olympics really shows everyone how precious life is. It gave me a great feeling to know that I was helping out someone who was less fortunate than me. Special Olympics is great for PC and the community and I hope it continues for another 21 years."

The Special Olympics allowed students to participate in all facets of the Olympic games with some learning also involved.

"Working in First Aid I quickly learned I was qualified to do nothing. Nevertheless, it was still a joy to play with friends and athletes in the Olympic Town," explained junior Tobin Turner.

Cartoon strip character product of English instructor's imagination

Richie and Gina Prosch are very protective about the young girl in their lives.

After all Emma is a red-blooded American girl with the usual assortment of friends and neighbors. The couple coaxes her through difficult times, shares the joyous moments, and even experiences the day-to-day trials and tribulations of a rambunctious pre-teen.

The Proschs do, indeed, sound like proud parents when talking about their Emma Davenport — as proud as any couple can be of a young girl who has yet to take her first real breath.

Emma, a comic book character, is a creation the Proschs have taken from a bit part in a comic strip about farm life, developed a regular strip around, and now seek to make a star in her own comic book when it debuts in April. The public will have an opportunity to get a sneak peek at the character when the Proschs present "Introducing Emma" March 14 through April 25 in the Elizabeth S. Harper Gallery at Presbyterian College.

"As an artist, I get tired of walking into an exhibit and seeing a lot of art that I don't understand. I'm not sure where the artist is coming from and what he's trying to say," Richie said. "Sometimes, that's okay, but with Emma we're going to try to direct traffic in the exhibit, from the doodles on newspaper, to the comic strip she was in briefly in Edge magazine, to the aborted comic book, to the Comics Buyers Guide strips, all the way to the finished framed prints which are full-color representations of our covers for the first two issues.

"We would like people to see how it worked and go away with the feeling of 'wow, this is art and I feel like I actually know what the artist was thinking and how it all developed' rather than looking at something, thinking 'it's neat, and then leaving.'"

Richie, a free-lance artist, and Gina, an instructor of English at Presbyterian College, have shared their Laurens, S.C., home with Emma and her friends for years. She was originally part of a mini-comic book called "Farm Boy Funnies," which chronicled life on a farm in the couple's native midwest. Richie originally drew the character as a caricature of Gina, but "the character got more abstract and cartoonish looking, so by the time we had a chance to do a full-size comic book on the mini-comic, we made it clear that the character was not Gina and named her Emma," he said.

The novelty of a comic strip centered around a young girl proved to be a selling point to Maggie Thompson, editor of Comics Buyers Guide, who signed the strip to appear regularly in the newspaper read by professionals in the comic book industry. Emma has since developed a fan following across the United States.

"The thing that's different about Emma is that she is not different at all from anybody else," Gina said.

Pollock: Talent, determination, skill on and off the field

by Margaret Ellen Pender
SPORTS EDITOR

If you were being paid millions of dollars to play a sport professionally and your name was known in virtually every household across the continent, it would be difficult to avoid developing an inflated self-esteem. Indeed, arrogance is a characteristic of many of our professional athletes whose names are plastered across everything from billboards to shoes, but according to some such as Neon Deon Cockiness is the key to maintaining a competitive edge.

While it seems that all of us are fascinated by these guys with Barkley-like attitudes, we must admit that often we are, equally, if not more, drawn to the quiet type that simply gets the job done without the flare and flash that is powerful enough to affect the stock market. In a book I was reading recently, John Luther proposed a thought-provoking theory when he wrote the following: "Good character is more to be praised than outstanding talent. Most talents are, to some extent, a gift. Good character, by contrast, is not given to us. We have to build it piece by piece—by thought, choice, courage and determination."

In our midst here at Presbyterian, we have one who may possess the talent to have his picture on the Wheaties box someday. Already he holds the career records for triples (10), home runs (20), and slugging percentage (.599). He is currently tied for second in total bases (245) and batting average (.342) and, if he continues to perform as he has this far in

'95, he will most likely move to the head of those categories as well.

Amazingly, however, this Blue Hose teammates and opponents. He was named First Team All-SAC and First Team All-South Atlantic Region as a second baseman. Additionally, Pollock was tagged for the South Carolina All-State squad and was second in the SAC in triples and third in home runs.

This season, Pollock was dubbed Pre-Season All-American as an outfielder and thus far has certainly lived up to the billing. After 24 games, Pollock had 8 home runs and 19 RBIs. Junior pitcher/second baseman Jason Bradley described Pollock as one who "leads by example. He doesn't usually have a lot to say on the field, but everyone respects him."

If talent is hereditary, then Elton Pollock should have no doubts about the source of his raw ability. His uncle, Marion Reeves, was the first black athlete to receive a full scholarship to Clemson University where he played football. Ultimately, Reeves went on to play in the NFL for two years with the Philadelphia Eagles. Marion's brother, Percy Reeves, had a significant impact on the football program at the University of South Carolina, where he filled the running back's slot and was drafted to play in the NFL as such but elected not to pursue his career beyond the collegiate level. Another relative, Morgan Reeves, donned a Michigan State uniform and eventually joined the Baltimore Colts and then the Philadelphia Eagles. Currently, one of Pollock's brothers is playing football (sophomore cornerback) for the Duke Blue Devils and the other is continuing the family tradition of athletic excellence in football and baseball at Dutch Fork High School.

This senior sociology major was born and reared in Irmo, SC. Like many young boys, Pollock began his baseball career at the age of six in Pee Wee league where the coaches pitched and then progressed through the ranks of Little League to JV and then Varsity at Irmo High School. While a Yellow Jacket, Pollock played shortstop, second base, and pitched. Emerging from high school, Pollock was touted as a top recruit and signed to represent the Blue Hose as a dual athlete.

Since his arrival here at PC, Pollock has indeed received countless awards for his prowess on the diamond and the gridiron, but perhaps his most praiseworthy accomplishment has been development of character. By "thought, choice, courage, and determination" Elton Pollock has fashioned himself into not only an acclaimed athlete but a man of great character.

Track teams competes in various tournaments; breaks PC records

by John Scott
STAFF WRITER

Welcome to the world of shin splints and multiple sprints, sweating, and pushing, throwing and running. The Blue Hose Track team has opened yet another work filled season with two strong showings.

The first meet of the season was the Pembroke State College Invitational on March 18 in which the Hose placed seventh out of ten teams present, due largely to the fact that the football team was still in spring practice. Overall, the track team consists of athletes from other Presbyterian College sports such as football and soccer. At Pembroke State, aiding in the gain of PC's 18.5 points were the following: Tyrion Phillips placed third in the long jump with a jump of 22' 5 1/2". Dave Amisler took sixth in shot put throwing 41' 2 1/4". Patrick Proleau placed fourth in the 110m high hurdles. Matt Glenn captured second in the 800m run with a time of 1:58.63. Finally, Matt Mead placed seventh in the 400m run in 56.46 seconds.

The Hose's second meet, hosted by Francis Marion, Tony Davis won the shotput and Matt Glenn set a school record in the 400m run with a time of 48.67 seconds. Ultimately the Hose captured a fourth place finish.

The Hose's most recent success was at home on Tuesday March 27 when PC faced Morris College. Matt Glenn led the Hose to victory with three individual wins in the 1600m run, the 400m run, and the 800m run. He captured the 1600 in 8:38.58, the 400 in 50.53 seconds, and the 800 in 2:14.34. Patrick Proleau won the 400m intermediate hurdles in 1:04.12, and Vasio Smith won the long jump with a 21' 6 1/2" leap. The 4X100m relay team consisting of Vasio Smith, Patrick Proleau, Stephaun Newton, and Tommy Lewis took first with a time of 45.91 seconds. Other first place finishes included Tony Davis in the shot put, Jeff Buckman in discus, Vic Vickery in javelin, Zane Corrier in the high jump, Matt Mead in the 200m dash, and Eric Stribnick in the 3200m run. PC swept all but two events, rolling over Morris College 90-35 and notched their first dual meet win of the season.

The strength of PC track lies in the short sprints and field events, while they lack depth in middle and long distance events. Though the Blue Hose battle against much larger schools, they are consistently competitive with those scholarship giving teams.

Presbyterian College is one of two schools in the SAC-8 which supports a track program. Carson Newman is PC's only conference foe that also fields a track team. While other SAC-8 schools abandoned their efforts in this sport long ago, Presbyterian keeps its track program alive due to interest by the student body.

After what may have been the best fall season in Presbyterian history, the golf team is struggling to maintain its superb level of play. The Blue Hose found themselves atop the SAC-8 after big wins during the fall in tournaments at Francis Marion, Musgrove Mill, and Persimmon Hill in which the Hose secured no less than third place each outing. They entered into the spring season with the winning record in recent Presbyterian College history.

The Blue Hose, however, began the spring season with two frustrating defeats which were marred by inconsistent play. In those opening contests, the Hose faced several conference rivals, as well as several other newcomers, and finished tenth and fourteenth respectively. Despite the slump, Coach Tommy Addison is "still proud" of his men, who have "put more trophies in the trophy case this year than any other year in PC history."

Since suffering those initial setbacks, the Hose have performed well in their last two outings, the most recent of which was a tournament at Troy State University last weekend. PC faced eleven other teams from throughout the southeast such as Samford, Troy State, Jacksonville State, Mercer, Florida A&M, Virginia Commonwealth, and New Orleans. The tournament consisted mostly of NCAA Division I teams.

"We and Aiken were the only two Division II teams invited," said Coach Tommy Addison. "That says a lot for our program."

Golf team tops SAC conference

The Hose finished sixth of twelve teams after shooting rather inconsistently from round to round, yet they maintained a fairly low cumulative score.

Overall, the first round of the tournament was mediocre in comparison to the second round. Most PC players shot in the high seventies and lower 80's on the first round, and in the seventies on the second round. At the end of the third round, windy conditions combined with inconsistency, resulted in some bad scores on the back nine and may have cost the Hose a fifth place finish.

Jim Kent was the low scorer for Presbyterian, playing a superb three rounds (70, 74, 79) placing fifth overall. Chris Wilkins (84, 74, 80), Chuck King (78, 78, 83), Cliff Hicks (81, 77, 82), and Perrin Powell (85, 77, 82) aided in the sixth place performance. Presbyterian's final score was 938 strokes, forty six strokes behind the winner, Virginia Commonwealth University.

Last month the Blue Hose traveled to Burlington, NC to take on 25 other teams from across the southeast at the Max Ward Invitational, hosted at the Alamance Golf Course. The Hose finished sixth out of the twenty-six teams present, gaining victories over all participating SAC-8 teams.

Currently, the Hose are in a three way tie with Catawba and Elon atop the SAC-8, posting a 2-2 record against them both. PC stands 5-0 against Gardner-Webb and Mars Hill, and 4-1 against Carson-Newman and Lenoir-Rhyne. There are two more tournaments to play in the season, the A.G. Edwards Intercollegiate Tournament (hosted by Francis Marion) and the SAC-8 Tournament which will be played within the next three weeks.

Tennis team attacks tough schedule

by Laura Short

With the variety of men's sports at PC, the men's tennis team may often be left in the shadows of the crowd-drawing, revenue sports. Even though their record is only 6-7, this hard-working team is composed of quite a few young, talented players. Coach Bob McKee remarked, "This team has lots of spirit, but we're still trying to find a team leader. We haven't played together for a lot of time, and everybody is learning how to play new positions. Right now, we're just trying to learn how to play tough, close matches."

The squad consists of four upperclassmen- sophomore Will Sharpe, junior David Kemp, junior Chris Thomas, and senior Tyler van Leuven- and four freshmen- Tom Swift, Will Sharpe, Ronnie Setzer, and Ed Ridgeway. Senior Tyler van Leuven commented that "the team is younger than those of the past, but the freshmen do have potential." David Kemp is seeded first with a personal record of 4-6 and is followed by van Leuven who has a record of 2-6. Tom Swift is seeded third (4-4), Will Sharpe is fourth (4-6), Ronnie Setzer is fifth (1-4), Chris Thomas is sixth (3-2), and walk-on Ed Ridgeway has a record of x-x.

The Blue Hose are in the process of adapting to the new match system of the NCAA Division II in which they play doubles matches first and then singles matches. Even though this is the second year the Hose have competed under these rules, it is still an effort to adjust to a deviation from the traditional progression of singles matches followed by doubles.

Presbyterian has attacked a tough schedule this year, which included matches against Erskine, Wofford, Kalamazoo, and Coastal Carolina. Since the Hose are newcomers to the SAC, they have not yet established their relationship with conference opponents.

The Blue Hose have a mere four home matches remaining (March 29th, April 5th, April 12th, and April 13th), but through those matches their goal is to gain valuable experience that will prepare the younger players for the future which awaits PC Tennis.

opponents), and Wofford (a non-conference foe)," says junior Jennifer Brim.

The Hose are led by sophomores Dawn Dachelet and Dana Davis, both with personal records of 8-3. They are followed by junior Jennifer Brim and sophomore Chrissie Bolt with records of 10-1. Other members of the team include juniors Stacie Buttorff (9-2) and Jessica Clark (6-5). The doubles teams of Dachelet/Davis (9-2), Brim/Bolt (11-0), and Buttorff/Clark (10-1) are also performing remarkably well. Brim commented that "This is the second year that all of us have played together. We're all comfortable playing together." Clark added that the Lady Hose feel that they "are a close team."

When asked about the impending National tournament, Coach Arnold said, "It looks good for us right now to make it to the regional playoffs. We have to do that to get to the Nationals." Brim agreed in saying that "We have a real good chance of going to Nationals."

The women's tennis team has only four home matches remaining prior to the SAC tournament, so check out a schedule and come out to support our Lady Hose!

If you have ever wandered down the west side of campus in the afternoon, you have probably seen the PC women's tennis team "sweating it out" on the courts. And when the Lady Hose are not practicing their swings, these dedicated women are either sprinting, running long distance, or lifting weights.

Has all of the work paid off? Junior Jessica Clark says, "We're in good shape and condition. I feel like we've never just given out in the middle of the match; we can outlast just about anybody." Lady Hose tennis coach Donna Arnold remarked that "In order to play tennis at the collegiate level, you have to be in shape. All we with our workouts is to get in shape, build strength, and prevent injury. If you're not in shape at this point, you are not going to come through."

Well, so far this year Presbyterian's women have a nearly perfect record of 12-1 and are in second place in the SAC. "Our toughest competitor is Elon, and our major rivals are Wingate, Catawba, (both SAC

One second. That's all that stood between the Presbyterian basketball team and an opportunity to extend the remarkable turnaround of its season. Instead of overtime and a chance to secure an automatic bid to the NCAA Division II playoffs, the Blue Hose saw their season come to a heart-stopping halt.

Upon entering the South Atlantic Conference championship, the Blue Hose (15-14) had won 10 of their last 11 games and in the process had earned the respect of every team in the league. The efforts of the 1994-1995 squad may have been the greatest display of determination in the entire history of Presbyterian athletics.

Despite the loss of top returner Brian Franklin to a knee injury, and the departure of two other starters (Jonathan Bankhead and Layne Fowler), the Blue Hose overcame some seemingly insurmountable obstacles, to say the least.

With the help of S.A.C. Freshmen of the year, Steve Rydzewski, the Blue Hose staged a remarkable turnaround and salvaged what seemed to be a hopeless season.

"To go 11-2 the last half of this season means these guys never quit," Nibert said.

"It goes to show you what pulling together and character can accomplish. This is one of my favorite teams. I'll never forget them."

The Presbyterian women's basketball team notched a school-record 23rd victory in clinching a first ever S.A.C. tournament championship and an automatic bid the NCAA Division II playoffs.

The Lady Hose (23-6) got 18 points from tournament MVP Chris Mitchum, who broke the S.A.C. single-season record for 3-pointers during the game.

The Blue Hose finished the season strong, winning 14 of their last 15, and entered the tournament as the third seed, but they never trailed in knocking off the top-seeded Eagles (21-8).

Mitchum, whose five 3-pointers gave her 77 for the season, helped the Blue Hose build a 26-7 lead over Carson-Newman. Though the Lady Hose could never put the game away (the Eagles got within two late in the game), they maintained their lead by way of timely 3-pointers by Mitchum, who drilled one with 7:29 remaining to put them ahead by five and another with 1:53 remaining to help seal the victory.

Seniors Melanie Johnson, the S.A.C. player of the year who had 12 points, and Kaye Watts, who had 14 points, helped to ensure that the lead was never cut. Just as Carson-Newman seemed to be gaining the momentum, Johnson and Watts would engineer a great play to swing the tide back to favor the Lady Hose.

Coach Couture is now 110-59 in her six seasons here at the helm of Presbyterian's program. Mitchum gives Couture all the credit saying, "That says a lot for who she's bringing into the program and her work ethic."

Chemistry's Gouge voted Professor of the Year

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

The third floor of Richardson Hall is a quiet place at 8 a.m. on Friday mornings. But that's where you'll find Presbyterian College Professor of the Year Dr. Ed Gouge fast at work. Gouge, who has taught at PC for 19 years, was nominated by Sigma Kappa Alpha for the award, which is given to one professor each year for outstanding work in and out of the classroom.

Gouge came to PC in 1976, after completing his graduate studies in chemistry at Clemson University. He now lives in Clinton with his wife, a high school business teacher, and his daughter, who is studying special education at PC. Before beginning his doctoral work at Clemson, Gouge earned his bachelor's degree from Western Carolina University. He also served as an officer in the United States Army during the Vietnam war.

He says that his favorite things about PC are the quality of students and small student body. "I very much like the small size of the school. The small town atmosphere makes for excellent interaction between the students and faculty," said Gouge. One thing he is not satisfied with is the low level of interaction between faculty members. "I am very close with all of the professors in Richardson, but I don't get to see my friends in other buildings in campus as much as I would like. When we do all get together, we are a close group, but on a day to day basis, our paths don't cross much," he commented. He is indeed close to his colleagues in the chemistry department. Since coming to PC, Gouge has developed a love for fishing, and takes frequent fishing and camping trips with his fellow chemists.

He is not quite sure why he was chosen for this award. "I really don't know what makes one professor more worthy than others for this. I certainly don't think I deserve this any more than any other instructor here. We are fortunate to have so many great minds at PC. I am deeply honored," said Gouge. "I try to make it easy for my students to learn. I go slowly, and I am very deliberate in class. I want my students to master what I teach," he added.

Recent professors of the year have been Dr. Ron Burnside, Dr. Dean Thompson, Dr. Jim Skinner, and Dr. David Gillespie. After being selected as PC Professors of the Year, Gillespie, Thompson and Skinner were also chosen as South Carolina Professors of the Year. "I think that tells a lot about the quality and strength of our faculty," said Gouge.

In the past, Gouge wrote articles and essays for science journals rather prolifically, but recently he has found himself with less and less time to write. "This is definitely a take-home job," said Gouge. "I spend afternoons and most evenings reading and preparing for class. It's definitely full-time employment. If it weren't for the weekends, I don't know what I would do," he added. Gouge took his last sabbatical in 1986, during which he took graduate level chemistry classes at North Carolina State University. "That was a very refreshing experience. It was most gratifying," he said. Gouge points out that since science is ever-changing, "you can never know too much. As soon as you think you know something, some new door is opened and you have to reconsider what has been previously accepted. Being in a class as a student was very satisfying."

Despite his love for his profession and for our school, Gouge believes that if he weren't a college chemistry professor, he would be a cabinet maker. "I think I'd get a lot of satisfaction out of making cabinets. I've always liked doing stuff like that. I enjoy refinishing furniture in my sparetime. I think I could do cabinets. I don't know if I'd be any good at it, but I think I could do it," he said. Gouge attributes his interest in furniture to the number and proximity of furniture mills to his childhood home of Marion, North Carolina. For now, though, Gouge is happy where he is. And indeed, PC is very happy to have him. "He's an excellent professor," said senior Michael Milligan. "He definitely deserves this award. He cares a lot about his students."

College committee looking for alternatives to counter 'suitcase college' claims

by Leighton Hart
NEWS EDITOR

In response to PC's growing status as a "suitcase college", student and administrative leaders have taken action to work through the problem. The April 7 of the Blue Stocking contained a staff editorial that called for increased emphasis on community among students, and the need to keep students on campus during weekends. The issue also contained two other articles alluding to what has become known in discussions as "the suitcase problem." The recent flood of controversy about "the suitcase problem" has roots that run deep through the course of the academic year. The problem gained priority status as a vital issue during the campaign speeches for SGA president. At that time that passionate arguments about the problem began to surface. Blue Stocking followed up that discussion by voicing its opinion about the issue and by providing statistics showing an alarming 65.2% of surveyed students ascribing PC's suitcase college status. Following the publication of the April 7 issue, a Food for Thought program, sponsored by the Office of the Chaplain, was designated specifically for discussion of the statements made in the newspaper, and as a forum in which to reach a consensus about what can be done to solve the problem.

Over the course of the Food for Thought meeting, discussion shifted frequently from topic to topic. A common theme throughout, though, was college and community attitudes toward alcohol and its place on campus. The "suitcase problem" seems to be very closely related to tightened restrictions on alcohol possession and consumption at the fraternity houses, according to the comments made at the meeting.

The recent social life survey given by the SGA's social life committee contains numerous responses which show dissatisfaction with present policies. "Because I am an independent, fraternity court is the place I go to socialize, but when SLED appears once, twice, or ten times throughout the year telling people who are of age that they can't step on the asphalt or on the sidewalk without being arrested, it drives people away. I think that anyone who cares about facing these charges would stay away," responded one student. This idea also came up in the Food for Thought program. Sophomore Robin Billington noted that the majority of students who leave campus on weekends are independent.

Only 25% of all students on campus are legal drinkers. Approximately 80% of students list themselves as drinkers.

By identifying the serious problem of PC's suitcase college status, students and administrators have taken the first step toward finding possible solutions, say student leaders.

"The Social Alternatives committee, sponsored by SGA and by college administration, is looking for ways to provide alternatives for Greeks and independents alike. We realize that student input is necessary for any real development to take place," said Billington.

"By discussing the problem and finding solutions now, we can stop it and turn it around. SGA's open forum on the issue is the best place to start. Our objective is to find, among other things, a place where beer and wine can be served to a few individuals on campus," she said.

The SGA forum to discuss campus social life will be tonight at 7:00 in Springs Campus Center. College officials and SGA leaders will be present to moderate and field suggestions.

Letters to the Editor

Hill says goodbye to PC

Those who greet the future must—in ways small and large, welcome and unwelcome—say goodbye to the past. Inevitably, both sadness and joy are met as past and future intersect in these early days of May. The annual tides of anticipation and melancholy would be upon me in any case, but the degree to which I am caught in their tug and pull is much heightened this year because, like our 1995 graduates, I am about to leave Presbyterian College. I announced my impending move to my classes in January; nevertheless, I am aware that many of my former students have not yet heard (at least not firsthand) of my plans. Please permit me a few words of explanation and farewell.

First, I want to make it clear to all that my departure is not motivated by dissatisfaction with Presbyterian College. I believe in this institution; I would not consider it in any way unworthy of a lifetime's association. I have greatly enjoyed my job, my students, and my faculty and administrative colleagues. I have not sought a change of employment; indeed, in the past two years I have turned down requests for application from several other schools.

So, why leave? The issue is not situation but vocation. I have become convinced that I am called to a different, although complimentary, task, that of teaching in a seminary. Specifically, I feel that I must accept a professorship offered to me by Wesley Theological Seminary, the largest graduate school of theology in my denomination (the United Methodist Church). I am keenly interested in training future church leaders, and I am strongly drawn by the challenge of masters- and doctoral-level instruction. Also, I place a high priority on writing, and I cannot escape the conclusion that I am better suited to an institution with a strong research emphasis (and a correspondingly lighter faculty teaching load).

So, I am leaving, but not leaving easily. I feel so strong an attachment to so many people at PC. It has been a great privilege to be a member of the Department of Religion and Philosophy, the most harmonious and dedicated company of scholar-teachers that I have known. I shall miss them—as indeed I shall miss my many other friends on the faculty and administration.

To my PC students: On reflection, I think that it is you that I shall miss most. I want you to know that I have grown very fond of you. Of course, all of you will eventually graduate (I trust!!); goodbyes are inevitable. But I shall say farewell to all of you at once, and I shall not be here when you return to visit. It is difficult to let go.

Not that we can't stay in touch. I would love to hear from you along the way. You can write to me beginning in June at the following address: Wesley Theological Seminary, 4500 Massachusetts Avenue NW, Washington, DC 20016.

Speaking for my whole family, let me close by saying thanks to all for their encouragement, understanding, and love that we have received while living in Clinton. You will remain in our hearts.

Nixon responds to suitcase college claims

I appreciate the concern and frustration expressed about the "weekend" problem in the article and editorial in the April 7 issue of the Blue Stocking.

The issue of providing weekend activities which would keep more students at PC on weekends is a very high priority and concern of the entire Student Affairs Department, especially the Student Activities Office and Dean of Students.

A committee chaired by Randy Randall has met several times since January of this year to discuss the issue and to make recommendations for next fall. This committee includes several students and Student Affairs staff members. This committee has been addressing short term solutions. During the same time period another committee chaired by Laura Meyers was addressing long term solutions (building a new facility). During the last two weeks some members of both committees met together and discussed concerns and solutions.

The questionnaire about weekend and social activities which was distributed in Spring April 19, 20, and 21 was developed jointly by members of the two committees. I hope that significant numbers of PC students have completed the survey. The results of the survey will be available at the open forum on reading day in 7:00 p.m. in Springs.

I feel obligated to respond to a few points in the April 7 editorial which were inaccurate. The editorial states that "the Dean of Students' office needs to offer a more comprehensive activities program beyond SUB events, a movie channel, and occasional CEP events on Friday evenings." The Dean of Students' office has nothing to do with scheduling CEP events. That is the responsibility of the Lectures and Fine Arts Committee which is under the auspices of the Academic Affairs Council and the Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs. Within the Department of Student Affairs, the responsibility for recreation, intramurals and social activities is vested with the Office of Student Activities, Springs Campus Center, and SUB. This office has a budget of approximately $50,000 for student entertainment, not including intramurals which has its own budget. The indoor swimming pool in Springs is open on Saturdays. The editorial stated that, "Other than fraternity houses, there are absolutely no social facilities for students on campus on weekends." Inklings was open on weekends for almost the entire semester and hardly anyone entered the door. Inklings is a place for PC students. Greek and independent, to socialize in a common area on campus. However, I think the true issue is whether or not alcohol is permitted at a location or an event. It is true that this campus battles an uphill fight against indifference and emphasis on group activities rather than individual ones. How many of you attended the Spring Swing concert on the IM Complex or the IFC dance at the armory last week?

The administration (the Department of Student Affairs) is certainly not dismissing this problem as the students' and not the school's. The editor of the Blue Stocking stated in my office recently that there is no easy answer to the problem. His fraternity and guests were in Charleston for a major social group event during the Spring Swing concert. He stated that the opportunity for alcohol to be present is a key point in attracting students and that many students from PC go to the University of Georgia because it is a crazy place. I'm sure that PC cannot compete with all the options available at the University of Georgia but I'm open for suggestions and ideas to make PC better for all its students, weekdays and weekends.

Joseph O. Nixon
Dean of Students

*Editor's Note: The editor apologizes for missing the Spring Swing, but the event was published only two weeks before it took place. The trip to Charleston had been planned for over five months. In the above meeting, the Dean of Students stated that having alcohol present at on campus events, such as in the basement of Georgia Hall, is a possibility, and the editor shared his personal opinion on such a suggestion. The editor and the entire Blue Stocking staff join Dean Nixon in looking for ways to improve PC in all areas and will help in any possible way.

The Blue Stocking Editorial Staff extends its many thanks to all of the Blue Stocking staff reporters, PC administration, and the Office of Public Relations for their hard work and support during this academic year.

Stallworth calls it quits after 36 years of service to PC

by Gray Lesesne
MANAGING EDITOR

When Rev. Tom Stallworth, PC's Dean of Alumni Affairs, came to Presbyterian College in the summer of 1959, he had no idea that he would remain at his alma mater past the two years he agreed to teach religion while leading the religious education professor Dr. Pete Hay completed his doctoral degree. Those two years he stretched into a 36 year career which Stallworth announced an end to last Tuesday. Stallworth, 62, has worn many hats since he first came to PC in 1959. He has served as college chaplain, Dean of Students, professor of religion-philosophy, soccer coach, coordinator of night and summer programs, and now as the Dean of Alumni Affairs.

"I see a lot of changes coming in to PC—we began to see the female population really grow. I'd say that almost all of the college's growth since that time has been women," he said. "I've been in on a lot of firsts here, and I've tried a lot of different things."

While Stallworth is well known for his tough academic and practice requirements of his students and athletes, he insists that they're not the only ones who have learned from their experiences at Presbyterian College. "I've learned a lot teaching and working here. I've learned that you're a lot better off by being yourself in whatever you do...I've learned to respect and appreciate other people's abilities, differences, and roles that they play," he said. "It's been fun working here, and in a sense, being at PC has been a kind of payback for me. PC helped me get out of the south side of Atlanta. Two weeks before I came to PC as a student, I had no idea I'd even attend college. I got an indirect grant in aid and the rest is history," Stallworth said.

While Stallworth has no immediate plans for his retirement, he intends to remain active in college life as an alumnus and will live in Clinton with his wife, Mary, who works in Thomson Library. He will lead an alumni trip to Scotland in June and will spend time after his retirement in August between Clinton and his vacation home in Montreal, N.C.

"I certainly will miss my colleagues, and the alumni I've met over the years. But I will really miss the students...that's what PC is all about," he said.

Stallworth was responsible, in addition to his classroom duties (then a Monday-Saturday job), for coordinating three weekly chapel services for PC's student population. He recalls that chapel, conducted in Neville Hall until 1960, was required for all students except seniors, with only three cuts allowed.

Among the biggest challenges Stallworth has faced were his duties as Dean of Students during the Vietnam and Kent State killings era, he said. He has also witnessed many changes at the college, including the substantial growth of the female population. "As a student, there were 12 'coeds', as we called them, on campus. When I came back to the college in 1959, there were about the same amount of women. In the 1960s, my wife and I served as houseparents for 16 of the 30 or so women students on campus. They all lived on the second and third floors of our house. With the construction of Clinton Hall in 1965, when the college began to seriously recruit women, we began to see the female population really grow. I'd say that almost all of the college's growth since that time has been women," he said. "I've been in on a lot of firsts here, and I've tried a lot of different things."

While Stallworth is well known for his tough academic and practice requirements of his students and athletes, he insists that they're not the only ones who have learned from their experiences at Presbyterian College. "I've learned a lot teaching and working here. I've learned that you're a lot better off by being yourself in whatever you do...I've learned to respect and appreciate other people's abilities, differences, and roles that they play," he said. Two weeks before I came to PC as a student, I had no idea I'd even attend college. I got an indirect grant in aid and the rest is history," Stallworth said.

Single college ring proposed by students, administration

by Alison Barnard
STAFF WRITER

Recently, college officials have discussed the idea of having a single, official, Presbyterian College class ring. With this single ring concept, the college would be able to design the style of the ring as well as designate the qualifications that students would have to meet before being able to order their class ring. Dean of Alumni Affairs Thomas Stallworth advocates a single ring policy, sighting its success earlier in the history of the college. "In the 1960's, we had a single ring, but we got away from that tradition in the 1970's. I think it would be beneficial for the school to have some sort of ring policy. Whether or not we adopt a single ring has yet to be determined, but we do need to have some kind of standard," said Stallworth. Stallworth noted that presently, even non-PC graduates are able to purchase rings with the words, "Presbyterian College" on them. Stallworth also stated that other schools such as Emory University and The Citadel have adopted single rings.

If the single ring policy is approved, the college would then contract a company through a bid selection process and would then proceed to design the ring. Stallworth quoted estimated prices ranging from $250 to $300 for a woman's ring and $325 to $400 for a man's ring with the price depending on whether the student choose to use 10 carat or 14 carat gold.

An informal survey of several students showed mixed opinions, but general support for an official ring. "I like the idea, and I think a single ring would give a sense of unity to each graduating class," said junior Paige Saylor. Sophomore Natalie Stachiw agreed that an official ring would help unify graduates, and also recognized its incentive value. "It would be uniform, and it would also be a reward for your hard work. Having a PC class ring would be a true achievement," said Stachiw.

"Like the uniformity, and I like the idea that only PC students would be able to order," said Drew Latimer. Other students support the idea of having at least some choice about the design of their ring. "I like the idea of eliminating outsiders from being able to order the ring, but I think that the students should have some choice, maybe having two or three styles or being able to choose what will go on the sides of the ring," said sophomore Jennifer Morris. Brandon Pressley expressed a similar opinion. "I don't like the idea of having just one style. I think students should have some options such as choosing either a stone ring or a signet ring...I think a little variety is needed," said the sophomore.

"Most of the action regarding the class ring policy will occur in conjunction with the Student Government Association. They will form a committee to explore the practicality of returning to an official ring, and that committee will also be responsible for developing a class ring policy," said Stallworth.

Senior class donates intramural service center

by Beth Threadgill
STAFF WRITER

In the past, seniors have given the school only small gifts, but this year the college officers have asked the senior class to start a new tradition. The PC Financial Development Office has asked that the seniors pledge a designated amount of money to give to the school for the next five years. The money raised will go toward a specific project. At their five-year class reunion, the class will have the opportunity to renew their pledges. This brand new way of alumni giving will allow each class to maximize the amount of money they can give as a class.

The Development Office provided the senior class with five choices for projects. The senior class chose for their project the construction of a service center at the intramural complex. While the service building may not be the most glamorous gift, the seniors decided that it was a much more practical gift than the other alternatives. First, over three-fourths of PC students play intramural sports. Second, many students and Clinton residents use the track. In addition, there are plans for more outdoor concerts and SUB sponsored activities on the intramural field. The service building will have restrooms, water fountains, storage space, vending machines, and a covered sitting area. The senior class looked for something that was needed and that would benefit a large percentage of the student body.

To pay for the building, the senior class has held fundraisers, and each senior has been asked to contribute twenty dollars a year for five years, beginning their payment next year. This project will allow the seniors to contribute to the school as a class. Senior Class representative Katy Ross added, "As incentive to donate, we have been given the opportunity to donate something that is worthwhile that will benefit both the students and the community." In conjunction with the seniors, the school has agreed to cover the extra cost of the building. Another added benefit to the seniors will be that if they make the pledge, the school will not contact them to ask for more money, he senior class will be presenting its gift to the school at the Senior Program, which takes place on the eve of commencement.

"This way the senior class can give money to the school, know where the money is spent, and be recognized as a class," explained Senior Class Representative Amy Becker.

Seniors have mixed reviews about the gift. Natasha Casada commented, "I would rather it be something small because I can't say that I will have twenty dollars to give for the next five years." Lee Maynard agreed, "It is a good idea, but I think it is too much to expect from many of us, because some of us don't know what we will be doing next year." Other students like Lori Patterson felt that "it is a good idea, but there are a lot more things we could spend our money on that would benefit more people." She added, "I think the suggestion should have come from the entire class."

"Not only does it help to complete the intramural complex, but also our contributions to the school will help increase the value of our degrees. The more competitive PC is, the more respected our degrees will be. I believe it is a good investment," said David Strosnider.

Mark Albertus has active, rewarding four years at PC

by Alison Barnard
STAFF WRITER

Mark Albertus, a senior Social Studies major from Columbus, Georgia, is ending an impressive four years at PC. Albertus has been actively involved in ROTC and soccer and plans to pursue a teaching career. When asked why he chose Presbyterian, Mark admitted that he had already planned on going to a different college. However, Coach Polson, realizing Mark's talent, successfully recruited him, and so Mark came to PC. Mark became the alternate goal-keeper for the men's soccer team during his freshman year, and he has been the starting goal-keeper for the past three years. Some of Albertus's many soccer awards and honors include, All Conference First Team for two years, First Team All-South, NCAA Division II National Goal Keeper of the Year, and being named team captain. "I could have never won any of those awards without all the other players on the team. I've played with some really great guys, and I give them all the credit to them. I think the greatest honor was being team captain because that is awarded by your peers," said Albertus.

Mark is also very involved in Reserve Officer Training Corps. "I really wanted to serve my country in some way. I began taking ROTC classes as a freshman and I really enjoyed them and decided that ROTC was the best option for giving service to my country," says Albertus when asked how he became involved in ROTC. Mark plans to remain in the United States Army for at least five years, perhaps longer, and he hopes to be stationed in Colorado for his first tour of duty. "Through ROTC, I've learned a lot of leadership skills, but the most important thing I've learned is how to work with people in stressful situations such as ROTC Advanced Camp. ROTC has greatly broadened my horizons and I have been influenced by many of the ROTC cadre. They've been really great teachers." Following the completion of ROTC Advanced Camp the summer before his senior year, Mark returned to PC to become the Battalion Commander of the ROTC Scottish Highlander Battalion. Albertus was also recognized at the Honors Day Convocation on April 18 as the recipient of the George Marshall Award which is given to the top cadet in each ROTC battalion in the United States. As part of the Marshall Award, Mark travelled to the Virginia Military Institute to interact with other cadets and various military leaders from around the country.

However, Mark's activities do not end with ROTC and soccer. For the past three years, Albertus has been a Resident Assistant. "Being an RA has been a good experience. Sometimes you have to work odd hours, but being the RA of 'The Jungle' [4th floor of Georgia Hall] has really been a lot of fun," Albertus said.

Another new horizon opened for Mark when, in September of 1993, Mark dislocated his shoulder. He was sent to the training room for therapy and met his girlfriend, Rebecca Hardman who was also receiving treatment for a soccer injury, at the time. "We've been dating now for 19 months, and Rebecca is a really neat girl," said Albertus as a smile crossed his face.

Dean Sheorn: The Man Behind the Mission

by Brian Sacco
PRODUCTION EDITOR

If there was to be an argument about the graduating senior who most exemplified Presbyterian's motto, "While we live, we serve," Dean Sheorn would be a candidate deserving a resounding nomination. As he has proven throughout his college career, Dean has made an undying commitment to serving others through a variety of campus activities.

Wanting to "adjust and survive" when he arrived on campus, Dean thrust himself into the wealth of opportunities offered to PC students. He has served as a project coordinator for SVS's Bailey Buddies and One-On-One Tutoring, a Freshman Orientation Leader, and a Stirling tour guide for admissions. Dean points out, "Working with Student Volunteer Services has been the best experience for me at PC. Being a part of SVS as a coordinator gave me the chance to work with incredibly caring people, volunteers and other coordinators."

An English and business administration double major from Camden, South Carolina, Dean was recently awarded PC's Community Service Award and the American Legion Award during the Honors' Day ceremony. Dean has also been recognized by his peers for his service as SUB's secretary and vice-president; STAC's vice-president; Pi Kappa Phi fraternity's vice-president and secretary; the Order of Omega; and as Freshman Representative to SGA. Adding to the pressure already placed on Dean's schedule, he was selected by the faculty to serve on the Faculty Appeals Board during his junior and senior years and on the Dean of Student's Long Range Planning Task Force continuing from his sophomore year through 1997.

Dean has thrived on his service-oriented career at PC. "My four years at Presbyterian have been the greatest four of my life. The friendships I have made with other students, professors, and administrators mean so much to me."

He singled out Dr. Dean Thompson as a professor who has had a significant impact on his life. "Many times his support and friendship have kept me from snapping under the pressures of academics and extracurricular activities. PC is lucky to have professors like him; it's what this college is so special."

Dr. Thompson remarked, "The simple truth is that he makes me proud to be another Dean. During his freshman year he showed immediately that he has a big heart and a love of helping others, the awards on Honors Day confirmed that his big heart and altruism have earned the respect of the entire campus."

Dean was recently named Presbyterian's Fraternity Man of the Year for 1994-1995 which indicates his intense commitment to his school and his brothers at Beta Chapter. "I have enjoyed helping my group thrive as it taught me valuable lessons of leadership." He also added that his experiences with the fraternity's national cross-country bike ride have had an great impact on his life.

Dean's contributions to Presbyterian's campus community have not gone unrecognized and his accomplishments and character will remain with the men and women which he has been involved with for the rest of his lives.

To meet the requirements for his Social Studies degree, Mark is currently doing his student teaching. "I'm not a math and science person, but I also knew that I wanted to teach either history or something related to that field and with Social Studies, I can teach several different subjects," Albertus explained about how he came to choose a Social Science major. His student teaching experience, has presented new challenges for Albertus. "It's been very demanding, but it's also been enjoyable and I've learned a lot. I want to give credit to all the teachers at Laurens High, because they have made the experience nothing but positive, and they have been very helpful."

Mark plans to stay busy during the summer by being a counselor and coach at various soccer camps. Albertus will return in the fall to complete his degree. Of his PC experience, Mark said, "the four years here have been very challenging yet rewarding, and if I had to do it over again, I would do it the same way."

Youmans: Country girl makes good

by Tobin Turner
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

After four years of hard work at PC, it is with a great sense of pride that Marie Youmans, known affectionately as "Pork Rind" by her closer friends, looks back at her collegiate experience.

"Except for my two semesters of Organic Chemistry, my time here was a ton of fun. It all just flew by," admits the bustling Chemistry major.

Though the time may have flown by, there is no doubt that Marie has made the most of her stay. As secretary of SGA's executive council, secretary of Omicron Delta Kappa, an SVS volunteer, a Stirling, a member of Sigma Kappa Alpha and the American Chemical Society, a Public Relations assistant, and Dean's list student, Marie contributed to her school in countless ways. "Like being active and feeling as though I have added something to my community."

However, if Marie is known for any one thing on campus, it is for her tenure as the evil one, Judicial Council Chairperson. According to Marie, the hardest part of the stressful job was not the many afternoons spent organizing trials, conferring with college officials and students, or being swamped in paperwork and complaints.

"Without a doubt, the aspect of the position that I disliked most strongly was freshman orientation. The first impression that freshmen had of me was of a stern, hateful authority figure misbehaving. I was obligated to make sure they were aware of their responsibilities but after the orientation, they were so frightened by my presence that they never really got to know how much fun I can be. But don't get me wrong, I consider

by Amanda Barnes

Amid four years of memories, Angie Richardson, a senior education major from Lawrenceville, Georgia, holds most dear recollections of those times spent with friends she has made at PC. "The thing I will remember most is Westminster Fellowship, because that is where I met most of my friends," says Richardson. Looking back to the "key to her contentment" here at PC, Richardson identifies friends to be the sole reason has learned to enjoy being at PC. "The [feelings of] safety and security of being at PC," describe Richardson's sentiments regarding her time spent here on campus. This solid foundation is the stepping-off point for Richardson as well as many other graduating seniors who don't quite know what to expect from the future.

Since her freshman year Richardson has remained an active member of Sigma Sigma Sorority, Westminster Fellowship, and the Blue Stocking. In addition, Richardson has held many leadership positions including the Service chairperson for both the Order of Omega and Westminster Fellowship. Not only has she worked to be a part of the on-campus activity, but also outside of campus Richardson has worked to exemplify the "acceptance and encouragement" that she finds among the student body here at PC. During the summers of 1993 and 1994 Richardson worked with Project Yes, a youth outreach program sponsored by the Methodist church. In this program college students and other volunteers are trained for youth leadership roles and experience a "crash course in youth ministry," says Richardson. Trained specifically for a job in the clowning ministry, she feels it can be a great way to reach kids and teach them things about themselves as well as people in general. Clowning is "a neat way to show someone God's love because there is symbolism in many aspects, like the make-up. The red represents blood, the black and white represent death in ourselves, and the other colors are symbols of new life." This unique ministry is also special in that it teaches lessons about mankind, "by laughing at ourselves we realize we're not perfect, in this way we are able to humble ourselves..." Richardson explains. At the end of the training period this outreach resulted in a trip taking 15 clowns between the ages of 5 and 11 to a nursing home and putting on a program for the elderly citizens.

In light of her most recent involvement in the student teaching program here at PC Richardson reveals just where her affections lie. "I can't imagine doing anything else, the kids are what make it worth it." As a new addition to the Laurens County public education system, Richardson's earnest desire to help children learn is the motivation she runs on. Richardson works to offer kids a chance to be themselves, never trying to perfect them, but wanting to give each child the chance to be the best they can be. Richardson feels that, "I can do all this by helping them learn."

As for the future Richardson does not know what she might be doing but she hopes to be able to teach for a while and gain experience through dealing with the children. However, apart from teaching "in the future I see myself with a family, maybe two or three kids, ... and volunteering to help with youth at church," Richardson predicts. No matter how her time is spent however, Richardson is aiming toward making a difference in people's lives through teaching and helping others understand the world around them, beginning with the youth and children of today.

Foster 'finding happiness each day'

by Laura Jacobs
STAFF WRITER

"The most amazing thing about Liz is the quickness of her perception," says Dr. Jim Skinner, professor of English, speaking of Liz Foster. "Her most outstanding quality is her analytical reasoning ability," says Dr. Gouge, professor of chemistry. Foster, a senior English and chemistry major from Valdosta, Georgia, describes herself as "intuitive, driven, and outgoing."

It seems that all these descriptions apply to the busy Quattlebaum Scholar who chose her majors, "by accident," simply stated by Foster. "Dean Moncrief suggested chemistry, and I had British Literature with Skinner. I was most stimulated by these two classes as a freshman," says Foster. Having chosen PC "because of the power of the few students I met during tours and the professors I met during interviews," Foster soon became one of those influential students, giving tours as a Stirling and making numerous speeches to groups of prospective students.

Foster is also involved in the American Chemical Society, Zeta Tau Alpha, and the Student Alumni Council. Extracurricular activities, "gave you human interaction, and human interaction lets you learn more than any book would. Involvement lets you gain skills and develop friendships," says Foster.

During her junior year, Foster studied in Edinburgh, Scotland, but not in the traditional manner. She was not on a program but went on her own, feeling, at first, "really alone because I didn't have a group of Americans with whom to relate." Showing the independence that Skinner says is one of her outstanding features, she soon "felt fairly assimilated with the culture." In Scotland, "I learned about my inner strength and appreciated my family. I also got to do spontaneous things because there was not a lot of academic pressure."

Her sense of fun has contributed to her fond memories at PC, many of which she says, involved "dancing with my girlfriends until the late hours and talking to chemistry professors as buddies."

Foster shows obvious proficiency in both science and the humanities. "Liz is extraordinary to the degree that she has been able to make bonds between science and language. She exhibited... an extraordinary ability to see language study as a science," commented Skinner. According to Gouge, "She thinks independently, her mind races ahead of what you, the professor, are saying. She is also very enthusiastic about everything."

Foster is certainly enthusiastic about her PC experience. She feels here "a sense of community, a very strong PC spirit." In addition, "PC has taught me that I can do anything I set my mind to do. Life has no meaning unless it is connected with the lives of others," she says when asked about her years here on campus. It is evident that through her involvement at Presbyterian Foster has affected the lives of many others. Says Dean Bill Moncrief, Liz "never meets a stranger. She is very outgoing. Vibrant and intelligent are two words that describe Liz." According to Gouge, he has "never seen Liz depressed. She is happy about life, and she makes people feel good."

Foster attributes much of her success to her family and teachers who "never said there was anything I couldn't achieve. My only limitations are the ones I've put on myself." Very few limitations apply to the future doctor who offers this advice for the success of others: "decide what success means to you. For me, to be successful isn't to have the highest GPA or the biggest checkbook, but to find happiness each day in doing things that make a difference."

In her quest to make a difference, Foster has decided to attend the Medical College of Georgia in Augusta after graduation from PC. "I think I'll be working hard and preparing myself to do whatever it is I'm meant to do," says Foster, looking ahead to the next several years. When asked why she has worked so hard thus far, she replies, "Dr. Skinner once told me 'from those to whom the most has been given, the most shall be expected.' you're given gifts so you can use them. No matter how hard I'm working, I know I can always work harder."

Owens adds enthusiasm, experience to PC Public Relations

by Tommy Reiser
STAFF WRITER

Promoting a college's image takes an individual with enthusiasm, a good nature, and a love for their institution. Presbyterian College is very fortunate in having such a person. Filling this vital role for PC is Steve Owens, News Service Coordinator.

Steve grew up in Fayetteville, North Carolina. He attended UNC-Chapel Hill for a while and graduated from Methodist College in Fayetteville. After graduation, Steve moved to Laurens to become a sports editor for the local newspaper. While working with the paper, Steve came into contact with Grant Vosburgh, who was then serving as editor-in-chief. In '89, Vosburgh became the director of Public Relations here at PC. Soon after, when the position for a News Service Coordinator became available, Vosburgh recruited Owens for the job.

"I had previously come into contact with PC through covering athletic events as sports editor," said Owens. He and his wife later moved near the college and would frequently take walks on the campus. Steve Owens and PC seemed to be a perfect match and it was as if meant to be when he began work here in January of '91.

In his capacity as News Service Coordinator, Steve maintains contact with local, regional, and national media. "I see myself more as a guardian of PC's image, rather than as a seller of it," commented Owens. He is responsible for hometown press releases, working with the graphic design of brochures, and taking photos, as well as writing for PC publications. "From a PR standpoint, our job is fairly easy. The excellence of the school really sells itself," said Owens.

At home, Steve and wife Debbie have two dogs and a cat. They recently moved to Fountain Inn, where Steve enjoys spending his free time with photography and keeping up with minor league baseball. Formally an avid fan of the Spartanburg Phillies, "I'm looking forward to getting season tickets for the Alley Cats, who are moving into town," said Owens.

Presbyterian College is very fortunate in having an individual like Steve Owens who takes such pride in serving his institution. He feels fortunate to be able to come and experience the campus 365 days a year. "When you work around great people everyday, it makes it a pleasure to get up and come to work in the morning," reflected Owens.

Even though I am only finishing my second year of college, and have still quite a long academic road ahead of me, I seem to concern myself with thoughts of my future during this time of year. For many people, graduation marks an achievement that leads to yet more preparation for the "real world," but for others it is a moment of truth full of hard decisions. I have fallen prey many times to the worry and consuming thoughts that pertain to life beyond college, but I also recognize that any energy spent dwelling on that anxiety is futile. Although I believe it is hard to totally conquer the art of worry-free living, it is possible to think to maintain a viewpoint that helps us learn to be more confident of the future and not be intimidated by what might lie ahead.

A line from one of my favorite songs states, "the weight of worry is never worth the price," and I completely agree. Instead of sacrificing my peace of mind for mental anguish, I work to see things step-wise. I've seen people become devoured by academic pressures of college life; they seem to try to worry themselves into good grades or other successes. In my experience, the more energy I devote to the preparations for something the better results I receive. Taking any thing we have before us one step at a time, is much more fruitful than fixing our eyes on what we want and ignoring the way to get there. This applies to many aspects of life, and especially to time of life-changing decisions such as graduation.

When I look beyond the borders of PC's campus I see a big world full of exciting ideas, people and places, and like anyone else I want to know where I fit into the world's network. However, before I am a part of the working world I am here, and I am on route to where I will be. The things I learn daily, not purely academic, but socially and spiritually, are the tools that prepare me for what lies ahead. Therefore, more time needs to be allotted to the process, and not the product. The hardest part is the waiting, but if we realize that we can't get there any faster on our own accord, it helps to remind us to concentrate on the task directly before us. So, as I work toward my own graduation, I hope I can keep my eyes fixed on each day and how to make it a success. I do not want to worry too much about what happens in the end, because we will all get there eventually. Watching PC's graduating class, with its many dear and familiar faces, is encouraging to me in that I see so many examples of achievement. Nevertheless, each and every day of life can be considered achievement within itself, and with that viewpoint we all can find what another of my favorite songs calls "a joy in the journey."

by John Scott
STAFF WRITER

The three way tie in SAC golf has finally been broken thanks to the last two tournaments of the season. Elon, Catawba, and Presbyterian have had even records against one another until recent action at the SAC Tournament on April 21-23 in Kannapolis, NC snapped the tie. The tournament would determine which squad would receive a probable NCAA division II bid; therefore, the stakes were high and the scores were close.

During round one of the tournament, the Blue Hose shot what may have been their best round of the season, and thus gained a slight edge over both Catawba and Elon. Presbyterian posted a low 291 strokes for the first eighteen with Catawba and Elon trailing closely behind with scores of 293 and 294 respectively. In the first round Jim Kent was the PC's medalist, shooting a four under par round of 68. The Blue Hose would not shoot this well the rest of the tournament.

The results of the second round would ultimately determine the outcome of the tournament. Chris Wilkins drove his way to a SAC course record with an incredible round of 66, six under par. Unfortunately, the rest of the Hose did not shoot as phenomenally. The team total was 296.

Despite the respectable sum, it paled in comparison to Catawba's sensational second round effort in which the Indians finished ten strokes under par as a team. With almost unheard of consistency, the Catawba team tallied a mere 278 strokes, undercutting Presbyterian by eighteen and jumping ahead by sixteen strokes going into the third round. Elon also improved on the second trip around the course, shooting 291, bounding into second by two strokes. Presbyterian then fell into third place temporarily.

In the third round, play resumed in the rain and resulted in less than ideal conditions. The course proved to be a challenge but yielded a chance for the Hose to make up some lost ground in the standings. "We knew we had to come back in the rain and catch Elon," commented freshman Chris Eassy.

The Blue Hose surpassed Elon and made a dent in Catawba's lead, but their efforts fell short. PC again topped the scorecards on the third round, making up three strokes to Catawba, and regaining second place over Elon. The scores were totaled as follows for the third round: PC 308, Catawba 311, Elon 314. The Hose ended the tournament in second place, thirteen strokes behind Catawba and four strokes ahead of Elon. Final scores showed Elon in third with a total of 899 strokes, Presbyterian in second with 895 strokes, and Catawba at the top of the SAC with a low 882 thanks to their nearly unbeatable second round of play.

"We played the numbers we thought we needed to shoot," said sophomore Chris Wilkins.

Freshman Cliff Hicks was one of the newcomers who helped the Blue Hose golf team secure 2nd in the SAC.

Presbyterian put together what was possibly their best three rounds of the season and won two out of three, but the Hose could not muster enough power to win the conference tournament. In individual standings, Chris Wilkins placed third overall, and Jim Kent placed second. Both men made all tournament team.

Elon, PC, and Catawba have been in a race all year for the SAC title, but only two of the three had a chance for a NCAA tournament bid. "We knew it was coming down to a three team race," said Perrin Powell. "But we and Catawba had the chance to go to nationals." Because of the outstanding play of both Catawba and Presbyterian over the fall season, both were nationally ranked going into the spring season and well placed for a bid to the NCAA tournament. The Hose have engaged in a season-long quest for the second position in District three north, but they have had to contend with a strong Catawba team throughout the spring. Additionally, the Hose hit a slump in the first three tournaments this spring, but finished strong in the last two. The Hose recently placed third, behind Anderson College and Catawba, in a twenty four team field at the A.G. Edwards Intercollegiate tournament before going on to claim second in the SAC playoffs.

Overall the Blue Hose enjoyed a good year, but the slump proved detrimental to attaining a bid for the NCAA tournament. "We started the fall well and we finished the spring strong," said junior Jim Kent. "We finished off where we started."

Though NCAA tournament bids have not gone out yet, district rival USC-Aiken, a model of consistency and competitiveness, will almost certainly be a pick for one of the two district three north NCAA tournament slots. With this in mind, Presbyterian had hoped to defeat Catawba in the SAC tournament in order to secure the other district NCAA tournament bid. Most likely USC Aiken and Catawba will represent District three north, but the Hose can certainly be proud of their best season in Presbyterian College history as the runner up in the conference.

Lady Hose Tennis Team Captures 3rd in SAC, Regional Bid hopefuls

by Lucy Mahon
STAFF WRITER

The 1995 Presbyterian College Women's Tennis team has enjoyed quite a successful season. After their last home match on April 10th against Wofford, Presbyterian's record was an impressive 15-3 overall. Heading into this past weekend's SAC Tournament in Salisbury, N.C. the Lady Hose were ranked #19 in NCAA Division II and #2 in the East Region.

The team ladder is comprised of Dawn Dachelet playing #1, Dana Davis playing #2, Jennifer Brim at #3, Chrissie Bolt at #4, Stacie Buttorff at #5, and Jessica Clark at #6 spot. Unfortunately, Buttorff was unable to play at the tournament in Salisbury this past weekend due to an injury. As a result, the Lady Hose solicited basketball standout Chris Mitchum to trade in her high tops for a racket and a tennis skirt and accompany the team to the SAC playoffs.

The Lady Hose enjoyed an eight game winning streak at the outset of their season, but the string of victories was broken when the Hose suffered a tough loss at Elon (0-7). However, a quick recovery prevented this slip from becoming a fall, and the Blue Hose won five more before losing again in a tough match against Wingate (3-4). The only other blemish on the Hose's record came against Wofford at the end of the regular season.

The Lady Hose turned in an impressive performance last weekend at the SAC playoffs as three players (Davis, Brim, and Bolt) posted undefeated tournament records. Also, Brim and Bolt won their flight as doubles partners for the season. Brim and Bolt played the number two spot and compiled an 18-0 record over the regular season. Other doubles partners Dachelet and Davis went 13-5 for the season and 2-1 in the tournament, and Buttorff and Clark went 15-3 for the season while Mitchum and Clark went 2-1 in the tournament.

Individually, Dachelet notched an 11-7 mark for the season (1-2 in the tournament). Davis recorded 14 wins and 4 losses (3-0 in tournament), and Brim notched a 17-1 / 3-0 record. Bolt finished 17-1 and 3-0, Buttorff closed at 14-4 for the season (with Mitchum filling her spot in the tournament claiming 2 of 3), and Clark completed the season 10-8 and 2-1.

The Blue Hose average of 5.4 wins per set versus their 1.5 losses per set reveals the dominance of this squad, which crushed many of its opponents. Ultimately, the Lady Hose, who are coached by Donna Arnold, placed third in the SAC tournament. Currently, the squad is waiting anxiously to learn if they were successful in their attempt to secure a bid to the Regional tournament.

Blue Hose Claim Four First Place Finishes at Pembroke

by Margaret Ellen Pender
SPORTS EDITOR

Though PC offers no track scholarships and none of the team members have ever been featured on the front page of the Clinton Chronicle, the Blue Hose track team continues to labor enthusiastically, and under the leadership of several key seniors the Hose have recorded some noteworthy individual successes.

On Saturday, April 22nd, the Blue Hose competed in the 3rd Annual Carolinas Intercollegiate Track and Field Championships at Pembroke State University. Though Presbyterian finished 5th (with 53.5 points) in a field of six teams, Blue Hose athletes performed well in the events which they entered. Herein lies part of the struggle for the Hose. With limited van space and a limited number of team members, the Blue Hose ranks are often thin in some events. "We are strong in short distance and field events, but we don't really have many long distance runners," explained freshman Eric Stribnick, who ran both the 10K and the 5K for PC.

Senior Matt Glenn's performance certainly testified to Stribnick's assertion. Glenn captured first place in the 400m with a time of 48.23 seconds and in the 800m with a time of 1:57.8. The Blue Hose also claimed top honors in the javelin and shot put events. Senior Vick Vickery secured first place in the javelin with a throw that measured 166' 3.5" and Tony Davis reaped top honors in the shot after heaving it 42' 6.75".

The meet at Pembroke brought the Blue Hose season to a close. Despite their lack of recognition, the Hose, who are coached by assistant football coach Mike Owens, should certainly be congratulated for their efforts which resulted in two first place finishes in home meets against Morris College and the fifth place finish at Pembroke State.

Baseball Team Sets New School Record with 27 Wins

by Margaret Ellen Pender
SPORTS EDITOR

The front page of virtually every sports section across the country was plastered with news of the Major League Baseball strike for months. To the average person, it has all seemed quite ridiculous.

Fortunately, for die-hard baseball fans, many diamonds across the country were not been tarnished by such foolishness. Instead they have seen regular action beginning in February, just as they have for decades. Where might these fields on which highly talented yet pure athletes, who are not yet infected by the insatiable desire for six-digit salaries, still compete? Though it may sound as if the answer should be "in the middle of a corn field near Kevin Costner's house," the truth is that almost any college with an athletic program can provide this endemic American entertainment.

In the year 1988, Presbyterian College once again joined the ranks of schools which supported baseball teams. Under the direction of Coach Tim Corbin, now an assistant at Clemson University, PC revived its once shelved program, constructed a new stadium, and embarked on the road to restoring the reputation that PC baseball had earned in years past. That inaugural team, which was selected from students already enrolled at PC, posted a 4-20 record.

Over the past six years, Presbyterian has made great strides in developing its baseball program. Last year's squad, under the direction of then first-year coach Doug Kovash, closed the season with a record of 25-22, which was the best winning percentage for a PC squad to date. This season, the Blue Hose who notched a record of 27-24 overall and 13-11 in the SAC continued their ascent of the ladder of improvement.

Though they suffered some disappointing losses in which runners were stranded on base, the Hose have also notched some impressive victories. Over the weekend of March 18-19, the Hose defeated the Indians of Catawba, who were at the time 7-2 in the SAC and in 2nd place, twice in a three game series. Additionally, the Blue Hose staged a monster comeback against USC-Aiken, then ranked #21 in the nation. After trailing for most of the game, the Hose, led by senior Paul Bushway's grand slam, launched a scoring spree in the top of 48 runs, recorded two triples and 12 doubles, and was batting a .337 average.

Sophomore Ryan Kane, an Olympic hopeful who was selected for Team USA, was also turning some heads at the plate. Prior to suffering a stress fracture in his back and being forced to sit out for the remainder of the season, Kane was batting .346, with 8 homeruns, 15 doubles, and 41 RBIs. Junior and earned the respect of their opponents.

Junior right hander Jason Bradley led the way with eight complete games and a record of 7-4. Bradley fanned 70 batters while walking 41 and posting a team-best 3.81 ERA. Bradley also enjoyed an impressive end of the season at the plate and closed with .305 average. Senior lefty Matt Tebbets finished with a record of 4-5 which included wins over Emory, Newberry, and Catawba. Junior right-hander Damon Sanders who started nine games for the Hose ended the season with a record of 2-4. Sanders was second on the squad in strikeouts with 52 and had an earned run average of 4.74. Freshmen Chris Stinger (2-2), Clay Hall (4-0), and Brett Evilsztor (0-1), and sophomore Anthony Losey (2-3) provided some valuable time on the mound as well. As expected, senior Glen Bergeron proved himself to be a reliable closer and tallied 5 saves.

Defensively, the Hose were blessed with two solid performers behind the plate. The quickness of juniors Jamie Garland and Sean McCarthy, who shared the catching duties, was a crucial factor in several contests. Junior leftfielder Albert Mitchell, freshman shortstop Gene Gobbel, and freshman second baseman Damian Patrick stepped up to fill key positions for PC.

Last weekend, the Hose travelled to Salisbury, NC to compete in the SAC tournament. On Thursday, the third-seeded Hose downed sixth-seed Carson Newman 3-1. Bradley allowed five hits and struck out five in nine innings. Andress blasted a two-out, two-run homer to provide the margin of victory.

On Friday, the Hose fell into the losers' bracket after being defeated by second-seeded Catawba (9-2) and then faced fifth seed Gardner Webb. Despite three homeruns (Pollock, McCarthy, McAlister), the Blue Hose were edged 7-6 and thus finished their season at 27-24.

Senior Elton Pollock and sophomore Ryan Kane were named First Team All-Conference while senior Paul Bushway and junior Jason Bradley were selected for the second team.

Senior All-Conference centerfielder Elton Pollock blasted a school record 14 homeruns this season.

the seventh and ultimately claimed to victory by a score of 10-7. Freshman Clay Hall recorded the save to nudge his record to 3-0.

The Blue Hose of 1995 boast a list of twenty returning lettermen, which is highlighted by a pair of senior outfielders. Centerfielder Elton Pollock and rightfielder Paul Bushway bring a wealth of experience and much power to the squad. After 36 games, Pollock (apre-season All-American) was batting .363 with 17 doubles, 60 runs scored, 34 RBIs, and a single season record 12 homeruns while Bushway had driven in first baseman Eric Andress has also made an impressive offensive showing; his final average stood at .318 and included 8 doubles, 7 homeruns, and 38 RBIs. Notably, left fielder Albert Mitchell was successful in 18 of his 19 steal attempts and pounded 10 doubles.

After losing three starting pitchers, the Hose may have viewed the mound as a slightly weaker point in their otherwise solid defense, but the remaining pitchers and the new Blue Hose hurlers, who had a combined average ERA of 5.90, displayed much determination

While the SAC tennis tournament may not receive the exposure of Wimbledon, it is nonetheless an opportunity for each athlete to display his skills. Heading into the playoffs at Salisbury, North Carolina, PC was seeded 5th and thus was slated to battle #4 Catawba on Friday, April 21st.

Strong singles performances carried the Hose to a 4-2 victory over the Indians. Junior David Kemp, playing in the number one slot, crushed Charles Suber 6-3, 6-2. Tom Swift, PC's number two singles performer, easily disposed of Chris Juergens 6-3, 6-2 as did number three man Will Sharpe who rolled over Jeremy Soliday 6-3, 6-4. Ronnie Setzer posted a 6-4, 6-4 win in the number five slot, and Chris Thomas was awarded a victory after his match was cancelled. Setzer and Swift combined to capture the number two doubles contest as well.

In round two, the Blue Hose advanced in the winners' bracket to face the #1 seed Elon College. Unfortunately, the relative youth of the PC squad spelled their defeat as the Hose fell 7-0. Presbyterian (9-13) simply could not match the power of Elon (15-7).

After slipping into the losers' bracket, the Hose were scheduled to engage second-seeded Wingate in a contest that would determine which team would claim third place in the tournament. Blue Hose players captured the victory without having to set foot upon the court as Wingate defaulted for reasons unknown. Presbyterian finished the season with an overall record of 10-13.

SGA, FOB usher in largest class in college's history

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

On Friday, August 25th, the largest freshman class in recent years arrived on campus for 5 days of orientation. Freshman Orientation Board leaders were waiting at the doors of freshman dorms to unload cars full of clothes, televisions, stereos, microwaves and refrigerators. The leaders, who arrived at school on August 23, spent the previous two days in meetings and were anxious to see new faces and greet the new students and their parents. Freshman and their parents spent the remainder of the days in programs and meetings with college officials.

"Orientation is designed to familiarize new students with the campus and really make the new folks feel like a part of the school," said Leigh Davis, president of PC's Student Government Association. "It's also important that the new students interact with each other and gain a sense of class unity. We engineered orientation this year to encourage more of that unity," she said.

This year's freshman class is the largest in recent history, a fact admissions officials are proud of. "We were extremely pleased with the number of students who applied to PC, and were even happier with the number of students who opted to enroll," said Margaret Williamson, PC's dean of admissions and vice president for enrollment. "We were aiming for a freshman class of about 300. Luckily, we have the housing and classroom space to accommodate a bigger class. We in admissions are proud of the fact that so many students chose PC over so many other good schools. We think that says a lot about the college," said Williamson. "This year's freshmen come from thirteen states and have proven their excellence in leadership and athletics. 54 freshmen were captains of their athletic teams. 139 were members of Beta or National Honor Societies. 15 are Eagle Scouts. 23 were class presidents. 11 attended Girls' State, and 17 attended Boys' State," said Williamson. "I should also point out that 85 freshmen have relatives who attended PC, ranging from brothers and sisters to cousins, grandparents, aunts and uncles."

Along with the large class size came greater responsibility for the 32 male and 32 female FOB leaders, who found themselves in charge of groups with 12 to 15 members. "We were hoping to have 8 to 10 freshmen in each FOB group, but we wound up with a little more. I don't think that took anything away from the experience, though. Our leaders did a great job of carrying the extra weight and were very successful with the bigger groups," said Davis.

Roll. "I don't think it ended there," Davis commented. "Our FOB leaders have really gone out of their way to make friends with and become close to the people in their groups. They have built friendships that will last for a long time. To me, that indicates that freshman orientation was a success."

Freshmen agreed that they were better off for having been through orientation. "It was very enjoyable, except for the weather. I liked seeing the same people everyday. I got to learn their names instead of just their faces," said freshman Tonya Dauce.

Campus social facility to offer alternative

by Brian Sacco
Managing Editor

The prospect of a new, alternative social facility for the entire student body at Presbyterian has finally become a reality as the Student Government Association in conjunction with the Dean Of Students Joe Nixon have secured such a facility and are currently preparing for its grand opening. Named "The First House on the Left," the facility will be a renovated and improved version of the old Women's Social Hall, said Nixon. The house will serve as an alternative to the fraternity court which has long served as a central area for socialization on campus.

The facility was intended to serve as not only a place where students could gather in a social setting, but also as a place where students 21 years of age and older could engage in the responsible consumption of beer and wine. The Social Life Committee, under the direction of senior David Spivey, has worked very closely with the administration to make this opportunity a reality.

"After the open forum last spring, the administration took off with the idea we had. They have bent over backwards for this and been very helpful," said Spivey.

"This social facility has been discussed at many of the meetings and retreats this past spring and summer, including the officers' and directors' retreat in May and was also included on the administrative objectives list for this year," Nixon said.

While much of the debate over such a center involved the consumption of alcoholic beverages in an on-campus setting, Nixon stressed that no student will be allowed to become intoxicated nor engage in any irresponsible behavior in The

The school has contracted with Terry Vaughn, owner of Terry's Fine Dining in Clinton, to provide food, soft drinks, beer, and wine for the facility, but Vaughn has encountered difficulties with insurance coverage causing a delay in the opening of the house.

However, SGA President Leigh Davis said that SGA and the school are hoping to open the facility by Homecoming, with the possibility of opening it with a "BYOB" policy for those students 21 of years and older.

The intent of the facility's operation is to provide a social outlet where Greeks and non-Greeks alike can socialize together and to promote school spirit on the campus, according to Nixon.

POINT

Student government undergoes attitude transformation

PC's Student Government Association has undergone a total attitude transformation that has reinvigorated campus. Thanks in large part to president Leigh Davis, members of the organization have worked harder than ever to ensure a successful FOB/TOB event and continued unity building activities as the academic year progresses. SGA members have also been largely responsible for bringing social alternatives to fraternity court to the spotlight, especially the proposed "pub" to be located behind Jacobs Hall.

The new SGA is part of the PC community, with representatives from virtually every area of campus life. Its diversity, creativity, and perseverance will result in a more equitable and open-minded student government process for years to come.

New look, new commitment for campus newspaper

You've undoubtedly noticed a few changes around the Presbyterian College campus. The new Mathematics and Social Sciences Center is nearing completion, new faces are in staff and faculty offices, and the largest group of freshmen ever in the history of PC are unpacking their last bags and settling in for a semester full of many challenges and memories.

One other important change you'll find this semester is in your Blue Stocking. Harrington's early departure from graduation ruffles feathers

Dr. Frank Harrington, a PC graduate, is a busy person. In addition to his duties as head minister of Peachtree Presbyterian Church (USA) in Atlanta, Ga., one of the largest Presbyterian churches in the United States, Harrington serves as chair of PC's Board of Trustees, among other responsibilities. With all of his obligations, occasional scheduling conflicts are expected and inevitable.

However, Harrington's early departure from PC's May commencement ceremonies was in poor taste. During the ceremony, Harrington left to perform a wedding in Atlanta, prefacing his departure with a statement which gave the hard-working graduates little consolation.

While Harrington certainly has a responsibility to his church and congregation, he also had an obligation to the graduates and their families who had invested well over four years and countless dollars to reach that important date and deserved his recognition.

Faulkner took the "good 'ol boys" system head on

The front page of the State newspaper on August 26, 1995 explains it all—photographs of Citadel cadets cheering, smoking cigars, and chanting at the August 25 departure of Shannon Faulkner, the first woman ever to enter the Charleston institution. That Friday, it was not the story of a woman who had tried her best and encountered a significant roadblock; rather, it was the story of the classic "good 'ol boy" system winning again.

Faulkner was an obvious and dangerous threat to that "good 'ol boy" system. She was the first woman ever to publicly come forth with her desire to attend a state institution that both of her parents' tax dollars had paid for. She badly wanted to be a part of an institution which, after completion, instills a sense of self-worth and leadership that no alternative program could provide. She represented change, something the system too often runs from. Citadel advocates are correct in saying that the institution would never be the same with women in the corps of cadets, just as, for example, Wofford College and Clemson University are not the same since admitting female students. Despite their changes in student population and composition, those institutions continue to prosper. No, The Citadel would not be the same. Faulkner's mission was to change an institution which prided itself on a strength which could withstand anything, including women within its hallowed walls.

Instead of treating Faulkner as a "worthy opponent" in an argument of dialogue, her opponents elected to run her reputation—calling her anti-feminine, unpatriotic, dishonest, and an attention seeker. Sound familiar? The same adjectives have been used by advocates of "tradition" as buzzwords of discredit for hundreds of years. The criticism of Faulkner can also be found in Rosa Parks, Gandhi, and Nelson Mandela in their attempts to achieve equality and change institutions in history. Is Faulkner unpatriotic? Surely, it must be patriotic to hold up to the light to those institutions that publicly discriminate. Is she anti-feminine? For want ing what she is equally and constitutionally entitled to.

My Turn

Why is it difficult for our society to accept people like Shannon Faulkner? Under the mask of "tradition," we are able to categorize those persons who wish to change institutions that have become as comfortable to us as an old pair of blue jeans. What are real traditions? They can be found as close as our backyard, on this campus. Things like the Code of Honor, Sunday dinner with Clintonians in GDI, or the Special Olympics held each year in PC's stadium. Tradition is not exclusion, oppression, or elimination. Rather, it is the celebration of the ideal, the institutions and activities that bind human beings together. That ideal cannot exist at a male only, publicly funded school.

I've been thinking about Faulkner for the past few weeks. What a terrible time to have worked so hard against a system only to be shut out at the sight of the light at the end of the tunnel. Despite the legal battles, public scrutiny, criticism, and piles of hate mail received at her Powdersville, S.C. home, who could have been prepared for the cheers of hate, arrogance, and rage directed at a woman by Citadel advocates who could easily be her brother, sister, friend, or spouse? I do not blame her for leaving. While Shannon Faulkner lost her battle to become the first woman to graduate from The Citadel, she unknowingly won a battle to start the process of change to a system in this state which has, for too long, found itself celebrating with cigars and cheers that which must be eliminated to achieve a higher ideal.

Davis thanks FOB leaders, participants

On behalf of the Student Government Association, I would like to welcome each of you back to Presbyterian College! Freshmen and Transfer Orientation was a huge success for 1995, and if Orientation is any indicator for the upcoming academic year, then I feel very confident that this will be one of the best years in Presbyterian College's history.

Beginning in early April, the Student Government Association selected 64 men and women for the Freshmen Orientation Board. Along with SGA, these two groups worked extremely hard to make FOB a could go on campus from a welcome from President Orr, apocryphal with parents and various members of the staff, placement tests, Field Day, and so much more.

All of the pre-planning, however, could not have warned us about our welcomed visitor—the RAIN! The freshmen and their FOB leaders did not let this dampen their spirits and continued to have a wonderful time adjusting to their new homes away from home. In fact, several brother-sister Orientation groups even used the rain as a type of outdoor mixer for several of their activities.

Again, welcome back to school! Please let the Student Government Association know how we can help make this year the best for you. I look forward to seeing all of you on campus this year. GO BLUE HOSE!

Admissions counselor relates PC facts, personal experiences to prospective students

by Gray Lesesne
Editor-in-Chief

When one stops in Smith Administration Building to say hello to PC admissions counselor Laura Meyers, they know to budget at least thirty minutes of their afternoon for an engaging and humorous conversation with the loquacious 1993 PC graduate. Meyers, 24, joined the admissions staff in the summer of 1993 after completing her degree in elementary education.

"I had given only one tour the whole time I was a PC student, but I was always 'unofficially' telling people about PC. I wasn't planning on working in admissions—I was always going to teach. This job is still in education, but at a higher level. It gave me the chance to stay at PC and talk about what I like and what had affected me the most," said Meyers.

"The thing I like most about my job is being able to keep in contact with the PC family. The PC students make it exciting for me to work in admissions. I am able to relate to when I was here as a student, and I still have friendships with students and professors that keep building. As an admissions counselor, you tell a lot of facts about PC, and then fill them in with your own personal experiences," she said.

Meyers recalls her first day in the admissions office in the summer of 1993. "I got a really small desk to work at, and I shared an office with Patrick Christmas (a former PC admissions counselor). Patrick was interviewing with a family and they needed to use the phone in his office. So I let them use my phone at my desk. The family told Patrick that it was so nice that he had his own secretary!"

As part of her job, Meyers travels throughout the southeast visiting high schools, college fairs, and doing private visits. She and Eddie Rogers, associate director of admissions, share the state of Florida in the recruitment process. "The whole office picks on me for having Florida, saying that I spend my afternoons on the beach instead of working. So one afternoon when I was off, I took the PC admissions banner and some brochures out to the beach, put on my bathing suit with my PC nametag, hung the PC banner over a volleyball net, and got some guys out on the beach to pose as prospective students in a picture to prove that I really was working."

On the road, Meyers meets thousands of students each year. She travels through out South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee, Florida, and Georgia. "It's easy to talk about PC—our academic reputation, the lifelong friendships, the experiences during the four years here. I guess the two hardest things to sell about the college are our location and the amount it costs to go here."

Laura Meyers, PC admissions counselor, proudly shows her South Carolina personalized license plate complete with Blue Hose spirit. Meyers joined the PC staff after graduating in 1993.

It's not always easy when you first give prospective that total amount, but I really try to work with students to find on and off-campus scholarships and financial aid."

When Meyers isn't selling PC's higher education to high school students, she's busy pursuing a higher education of her own. Meyers is enrolled in an accelerated Master's degree summer program in children's literature at Hollins College in Roanoke, Va. She spent six weeks at Hollins this summer studying the history and criticism of children's literature and taking creative writing classes.

"I'd eventually like to publish children's books. I'd also like to teach all different grade levels, especially college courses in children's literature." But for now, I like to write and illustrate children's books in my spare time," she said.

Meyers also finds time to waterski, be a pledge advisor to PC's chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha, coordinate a summer leadership camp for high school students on the PC campus, cater the occasional party, and make plans for groups of all kinds. "The other admissions counselors I travel with to college fairs call me Julie McCoy, cruise director, because I like to plan activities for the group so much," she said.

"I've learned from my years at PC that it takes more than one person to get a job done. I'd much rather work with a team. I've also learned that students sometimes don't appreciate what they've got here until it's gone. When I meet alumni, prospective students, and others on the road, they always tell me that students here don't know how good they have it. I've also learned that everybody can make a difference, as long as people are open-minded for change and improvement," said Meyers.

For now, Meyers plans to continue with her job in admissions, giving tours, contacting prospective students, and talking with her friends as she passes them on the campus that has been her home for the past six years. L.B. White writes of the spider Charlotte in Charlotte's Web: "It is not often that someone comes along who is a true friend and a good writer. Charlotte was both." Like the spider in one of the books which Meyers holds closest to her heart, she hopes to be the same to those in her life.

Bishop joins student affairs staff

A 1991 PC graduate has joined the students affairs staff as assistant dean of students. Allison Bishop, who holds a Master's degree in counseling from the University of North Carolina-Charlotte, replaces Resa Walch. Bishop can be reached at ext. 8322.

Building completion slated for December

PC Treasurer and Vice President for Financial Affairs Skip Zubrod said that construction on the new academic building will be finished by October. Furnishings will arrive in November and move in is scheduled for December. The College is on budget with the 5.2 million dollar building, according to Zubrod.

Dillon Fence to appear this afternoon

The rock band Dillon Fence is scheduled to perform an afternoon concert from 3-5 p.m. sponsored by the Student Union Board. The event, to be held at the Intramural Complex, is free and is open to PC students with their PC ID.

According to SUB president Lisa Tillman, students 21 and over may also bring one of the following: one six-pack of beer, one bottle of wine, or one four-pack of wine coolers. They must check coolers in at the designated checkpoint and may only consume their alcoholic beverages after presenting their valid PC ID.

"This event is a test for future events. If there is underage drinking, we won't be able to do this type of event with 'BYOB' again. We hope students will consider this when attending," said Tillman.

Judicial Council suspends student for plagiarism violation

A Judicial Council hearing was held on April 24, 1995 at 6:30 p.m. in Chapman Conference Center in Jacobs Hall. A student was charged with plagiarism, a Code of Honor violation. The student pled guilty to the charge with mitigating circumstances. The Council then proceeded to determine the appropriate penalty for the violation. The defense, citing scheduling conflicts, called three character witnesses out of order, the Council and prosecution not objecting.

The hearing then proceeded in the normal course of events. The prosecution made opening statements and called two witnesses. The defense called three witnesses and presented written material into evidence. Closing statements were made, and the Council went into deliberation.

The Council voted to allow the student to complete the remainder of the academic semester, with the exception of imposing a "WF" in the course in which the violation occurred. The Council then voted to impose the normal two semester suspension for the fall and spring semesters of the 1995-96 academic year.

The defendant returned and was read the sentence and reminded of their right to appeal the decision of the Council. Procedures were followed as outlined in the Knap-Sack.

The defendant filed an appeal on April 24, 1995 and the Board of Appeals met on April 26, 1995 at 1:00 p.m. in Chapman Conference Center. The Appeals Board upheld the decision of the Judicial Council and dismissed the appeal. Procedures were followed as outlined in the Knap-Sack.

Freshman/Transfer Orientation kicked off last Monday morning bright and early at 8 a.m. After moving their goods and getting settled into their new homes, freshmen took in their first meal at Greenville Dining Hall. Following lunch, new students and their parents were greeted by Dr. Orr and the Student Affairs staff. Following the President's Welcome, freshmen were introduced to their faculty advisors and spent an hour discussing academic matters. Parents and new students then attended a picnic, which was moved in to GDH due to inclement weather.

Day two of orientation started with an early breakfast and a presentation by the college ROTC officials. The new students then determined their academic fates by taking placement tests in math, English and Foreign Languages. The day concluded with dinner on the town and a band party in Springs Campus Center. Sunday began with a continental breakfast and a presentation by Student Volunteer Services. A worship service followed in Belk Auditorium. The highlight of the afternoon was the annual "field day", a euphemism for the "big, wet shaving cream bonanza." Students packed the fountain to clean off Sunday evening, freshmen dressed up and were received at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Orr. Guitarist John Paul Walters gave a concert in Edmunds Hall following the President's Reception.

Monday was the concluding day for FOB/TOB activities. After breakfast in GDH, students registered with their advisors and attended a presentation given by public safety. A diversity program was then presented in Edmunds Hall. An FOB/TOB awards ceremony followed. Freshmen were then given a formal dinner in GDH, where they were briefed on the Honor System. FOB/TOB then officially concluded with the signing of the Honor Roll in Belk Auditorium. The event was a long four days, but most freshmen agree that they benefitted greatly from the experience.

Blue Hose look to end eight year drought

Newport News first hurdle for young team

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Sports Editor

The year was 1987, an era of parachute pants and Panama Jack hats, when the Blue Hose last won their opening contest and posted an overall record above .500.

Last season, the Hose notched impressive victories against foes such as heavily favored rival Wofford College but ultimately finished the season tied for sixth place in the SAC with a 5-6 record (2-5 in the SAC). According to fifth year head coach John Perry, 1995 should be the year to end the drought. With 17 returning starters, the Hose should be solid on both sides of the ball.

For Perry, however, rebuilding is not uncharted territory. After serving as an assistant under Dick Sheridan at Furman University, Perry was named head coach at Lenoir-Rhyne where he initiated a rebuilding program that ultimately resulted in the Bears capturing a part of the league championship.

"Any time that you play in a conference, one of your goals is to win the conference," Perry noted. This year, however, the Hose are trying to focus primarily on themselves and some more immediate goals. "We want to win our first game and then go from there," Perry explained.

With 5 of 6 starters returning to the offensive line, both the running and passing game should be potent. The offense will be directed by junior quarterback Randy Sullivan, who earned SAC Freshman of the Year accolades in 1993. Last season, Sullivan topped the SAC with his 568 completion percentage en route to amassing 1481 yards in the air. Sullivan also demonstrated his mobility as he rushed for 418 yards.

Seniors Steve Gornie and Chris Yonce will anchor the backfield for the Hose. Both Gornie, the fullback, and Yonce, the tailback, displayed their versatility in 1994 as two of Sullivan's most sure-handed receivers. Junior Chris Thorpe and senior Kevin Lindler will get the starting nod at the wideout positions with juniors Ulysses Eaton and Vaso Smith vying for minutes as the reserves.

During the 1994 campaign, the offensive component of the Blue Hose squad established a new school record for total offense in a single season, and though their names may be less familiar to fans and their pictures rarely seen on the front page, the members of the offensive line should receive much of the credit for that achievement. Serving in positions which Coach Perry would tag as "crucial but seldom recognized," these Blue Hose quietly defy the stereotypical conception of the "dumb" linemen as they attempt to convert countless different blocking schemes from paper to reflex. Seniors Chris McGaha (center, second team All SAC), Brian Estes

Although the special teams units are generally composed of a medley of various players, the Blue Hose kicking game should be solid with sophomore Brian Gornie returning to handle the placekicking chores and junior Matt Shelby serving as the punter.

Defensively, the Blue Hose may have had a few more question marks in the starting lineup. Returning to terrorize opposing quarterbacks is senior Kevin Cox, an end who paced the Hose with six sacks in 1994. Senior John Ory also returns after having notched 60 tackles (10 TFLs) last year from his left tackle position. Senior Earl Guidry will most likely fill the other end position, in 1994 Guidry recorded 24 tackles (4 TFLs) in eight contests. Two sophomores, Chad Gleaton and David Snyder, will battle for time at the right tackle slot.

If the Blue Hose coaches were asked to name the one position which will pack a punch every game regardless of all conditions, they would probably agree that PC has a dominate group of linebackers. Returning leading tackler Antonio Merriweather will prowls at the outside linebacker's slot again this season and has a good chance of becoming the all time SAC leader for career tackles; currently, he is second in the standings with 211. Senior Raymone George and sophomore Tony Davis will fill the other slots with a slew of talented backups waiting on the sidelines.

After losing Elton Pollock, Quincy Eigner, and All-SAC performer Tyrone Phillips from the secondary, fans will see some new faces at the safety and cornerback positions. Sophomore Chris Hamilton is the lone returner to the defensive backfield, and he will most likely be joined by fellow sophomores James Carswell at the other corner, Stephane Newton at strong safety, and Kevin Terrell at weak safety.

Although 62 freshmen joined the Blue Hose squad this season, Presbyterian fans should not count on watching a group of inexperienced, slightly out-of-synch players. "We should be good this year. We've got a lot of freshmen but we also have many experienced guys returning. In fact, several of the freshmen may step up into starting positions and really help us out," junior Vaso Smith noted.

Perry is also confident that his Hose will wage some intense battles against SAC foes this season. According to Perry, Carson-Newman has dominated the SAC for the last several years and the Eagles were ranked #1 in the preseason poll again this year, but the other seven teams should be rather evenly matched.

Blue Hose quarterback Randy Sullivan is expected to lead the team to success this season. Sullivan, after an outstanding sophomore season, returns for his junior campaign.

Hose volleyball tabbed #1 in preseason poll

by Ellison Manley
Staff Writer

Coming off of yet another successful season in 1994, the Lady Blue Hose volleyball team returned to campus this year with high expectations. Four starters are returning from the squad which posted a 30-9 record and won a fourth consecutive South Atlantic Conference tournament last season. In addition, the team returned All-Conference performer junior Watoma Williams. "I feel that we will be successful this year because of our experience. Nine returners and two last-paced freshmen will help us with our progress," Williams said.

The team began the long road to a conference championship two weeks ago with preseason conditioning and two-a-day practices. Second year coach Allen Ansley has been impressed with the team's work ethic thus far. "They really came into preseason well-conditioned. Everyone ran the mile in under seven minutes and I'm impressed with how hard they have worked during practice."

Ansley has a talented group of athletes this season, headed up by senior captain Brooke Fleming. Fleming, who averaged 2.0 kills per game last season, will be seeing time at the middle blocker position along with Williams who led not only the team, but the entire conference with a 4.4 kills per game average. Fleming will be starting for the Blue Hose for the third season and is looking forward to a successful ending to her career.

"Although we've had a lot of obstacles to overcome, the past 3 years have been filled with great accomplishments. I look forward to another successful year and I hope it will be the best out of the four," Fleming said.

The hitter's positions will be filled by several players. Juniors Amy Couch and Amy Lindell have both seen time in the last two years and are expected to contribute this year.

Sophomores Mary Kruse, Beth Mann, Sarah Nichols, and Erin Olson are returning with a year of experience under their belts. Mann saw action last season as a starter and averaged 1.9 kills per game. Additionally, Kruse started last season and was second on the team in digs with 3.73 per game. The hitters are rounded out by newcomer Lauren Axson who played at Daniel High School.

At the setter position, Ansley is relying on two young players to carry the team. Sophomore Jenny Frieling returns, having finished second on the team in assists last season. She is joined by Jennell Sanders, a freshman from Lexington, SC. Ansley said, "Young setters are having to step up to take a lot of responsibilities for this team. I have a lot of confidence in both of them."

The Lady Blue Hose were selected by conference coaches to finish first in the conference. One vote separated PC from second place team Wingate College. The voting, according to Ansley, was very tight and the season will hold very few easy victories.

"In addition to our tough conference, we've beefed up our schedule among non-conference teams. We will be playing in several tournaments against top-ranked teams in the South Region. We're not playing anyone out of the region this year," said Ansley.

In order to maintain the level of success the program has grown accustomed to, Ansley is relying on strong defensive play. He said, "I think our offense will be a key, but defense will be the difference between winning and losing this year."

The squad opens up the 1995 season tonight in a tournament hosted by Elon College. The Lady Hose will face four strong teams this weekend as they face the field composed of USC-Aiken, USC-Spartanburg, Pembroke State University, and Francis Marion University.

Experienced Lady Hose soccer team expected to dominate conference

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

No one would argue with the assertion that the Lady Blue Hose Soccer team enters the 1995 season on the heels of completing their best season ever. The Lady Hose won a record 15 of 18 matches enroute to capturing the SAC regular season championship and advancing to the NSCAA Tournament. Coach Brian Purcell, a 1987 PC graduate, returns eight confident starters to the squad as he enters his seventh season atop the Blue Hose women's program. Purcell earned the 1994 NSCAA Division II Coach of the Year for the third time in five years.

Though the loss of Senior midfielder Charity Brazzel, a second team All American in 1994 who has elected not to play this year, will create a gap, the Blue Hose return several other outstanding players who will undoubtedly continue to provide offensive spark. Junior Rebecca Hardman, who has been dubbed first team all conference and all region, led PC in 1994 with 39 points on 15 goals and nine assists. Brooke Wright, the SAC Freshman of the Year last season, was second on the team in scoring with 32 points on 13 goals.

Seniors Carey Bailey (twice named to the All-SAC Tournament team), Liz Roe (four points in 1994), Cobi Shale (five goals in 1994) and Carly Peterson (18 starts in 1994) also return as starters with juniors Lisa Becker (five points in 1994) and Emily Campbell (0.89 goals against average, four shutouts in 1994).

While the athletic prowess of the Lady Hose is readily apparent, their ability in the classroom is equally impressive. Two Lady Hose have received national recognition for their academic accomplishments. Junior Rebecca Hardman was named third team GTE Academic All America. Hardman, who led the Blue Hose in scoring and earned all league and all region honors, carries a 3.98 grade point average while majoring in biology. In addition, senior Elizabeth Roe (4.00 GPA) joined Hardman on the GTE Academic All-District team. Roe is a chemistry major.

The Last Word: What your FOB leaders didn't tell you

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

Orientation can be a daunting experience. Being away from home for the first time with a fresh set of freedoms can lead to some dangerous habits and sticky situations. That's why your friendly FOB leaders had every moment of your first weekend planned out. FOB life is so very different from real, everyday life at PC. So here we are to fill in the gaps left by your FOB leaders.

You'll find that life here is actually startlingly similar to MTV's The Real World. We were even fortunate enough to have a budding young country music star on our hall, just like on the TV show. Bill Wham, we thank you. Yep, there's really no difference between PC and The Real World, except that we don't get paid and we don't live in big fat apartments, and MTV doesn't hook us up with cushy, high-paying jobs after the show is over. Life's a grind... jump aboard.

Getting along with your roommate is essential to a happy time at PC. You should start by bonding with your roommate in some fashion. We feel that nothing does more to prove one's true identity than a healthy rivalry. Competition builds bonds that bombs can't destroy. Instead of challenging them on a basketball court or a golf course, bring it closer to home. Wage war inside the confines of your dorm room. Dirty tricks and pranks will make you inseparable. And what could be better than the look on someone's face when they find out that you set fire to their car? If competition fails to create a wonderful bond, we suggest that you simply freak 'em out. Name the walls. Talk to them before bed. When your roommate questions you, blame everything on "that jealous ceiling."

You should also try to bond yourself to the folks that help the school run on a day-to-day basis. Not just the faculty or administration, but the people who do the sweaty, dirty work that federal law prohibits anyone else from doing. Those gals that best uphold PC's creed of "Dum Vivimus. Servimus....corn nuggets." We're speaking, of course, about the Blue Ladies. They are the kind-hearted vixens that prance around GDH in their smocks of blue. Blue Ladies are famous for talking to the student body, learning names and helping their favorite students to extra portions. What a lot of people don't realize is that the Blue Ladies are a bunch of kidders just like the rest of us. They are connoisseurs of practical jokes. After work, they've been known to let the air out of students' tires and make obscene phone calls to students' rooms. Rumor has it, back in the 60's they carried a VW Bug up the steps of Neville and left it in the lobby. But, perhaps the most surprising bit of information about our Sweet Guardians of GDH is that an amazing 99% hold national titles in arm-wrestling. You wouldn't think so just by looking at them, but you sit 'em down and stare 'em hard in the eyes, and all you can see is fire and rage. They're dangerous folks. Watch your step in the cafeteria.

So FOB'ers take heed, and remember all of these wonderful tips as you stroll down those halls of garnet and blue. Just remember that all the cool classes start after ten, that GDH is pretty lenient about letting you eat without your card, and that the seventh frat house is across the street with a big "Ken Orr" written on the mailbox. You'll be on your way to the best five and a half years of your life.

Pep band no longer to play for home football games

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

On Saturday, September 16th, 105 Clinton High School students took to the PC football field. Why, you ask? How could 105 students get on the field? Mass protest? Not exactly. A closer look at these students would reveal matching uniforms and arms full of musical instruments, as the Clinton High School band took to the field to provide halftime entertainment for the college's matchup against Carson-Newman. The Clinton band and others like it will replace the PC Blue Thunder Pep Band at the college's home football games.

The pep band, which has traditionally provided music for PC football games, was composed of about 19 members. This year, however, it will only play at basketball games, according to PC athletic director Allen Morris. Morris thinks the band isn't appropriate for the atmosphere of a football game. That feeling prompted his decision to remove the band.

"The Blue Thunder Band does an outstanding job, but I think the football setting doesn't do them justice. It's hard for them to play over the crowd outside, at least, with the equipment we have right now it is. I feel that they are better able to entertain a crowd inside a gymnasium," said

Blue Thunder Pep Band members, pictured above, have been replaced with local high school marching bands at PC football games. Band members will still play during PC basketball games, according to Allen Morris, director of athletics, who made the move.

Morris. "So, they will play for all of our home basketball games this season."

By inviting local marching bands to play during half-time, Morris hopes to make PC football games more entertaining and create more of a college football atmosphere. "Entertainment is a very important aspect of any football game. I was looking to spice up the PC halftime show," said Morris. The athletic department stands to benefit financially from Morris' decision, though that was not a motivating factor, he said.

Local bands are excited by Morris's decision. Clinton and Laurens County High Schools were the first schools to be invited to play. Clinton High School Band Director Glenn Cason enjoyed playing at the Carson-Newman game. "We had a great time. It's always great to be able to get out and play in public. It was a great time for us to play, too, because we are currently gearing up for competition. Getting out and playing our set in front of an audience should help us be better prepared," Cason said.

Laurens County High School Band Director David Mauldin knows that the performers get a lot out of the experience. Mauldin himself played for halftime shows at PC when he was a band member at Laurens. "It's a great treat to be able to play at PC. I played there as a student, and it was a wonderful experience for me. My students are looking forward to it. We are very excited and very honored to have been invited," said Mauldin. Mauldin's 139 piece band will take the field September 30th, during PC's Homecoming game against Wofford.

While Morris' decision may delight local band leaders, some Blue Thunder members are not pleased with the decision.

"I'm really disappointed not to be able to support my team. I enjoyed playing in the pep band (at the football games)," said Pam Warren, a senior member of the band.

"It's too bad that was taken away from PC students. I think it is a shame that he (Morris) cannot rely on us to play," said Megan Ewald, a senior band member.

Faculty council to improve communications, voice concerns

by Beth Threadgill
Staff Writer

When administrators and faculty members gathered last fall and spring to evaluate PC's strengths and weaknesses in the college's self-study, they discovered a missing link in communication between those who manage PC's classrooms and those who manage the school's bottom line. The faculty and administration began looking for ways to improve communications between Neville Hall, Richardson Hall, Jacobs Hall, and Smith Administration Building. As a result, the senior faculty council was established Sept. 11.

The council is composed of two members of each academic division: Dave Gillespie (Political Science), Meredith Holder (Business Administration), Dave Needham (History), Jim Skinner (English), Jim Stidham (Biology), and Bill Yarbrough (Physics/Computer Science). It will meet at least once a semester with the entire faculty to address issues that need to be discussed with the administration.

In addition to the faculty-only meeting, council members will attend the college's monthly officers and directors meetings and hold a monthly meeting with the officers of the college to report the faculty's concerns.

"The administration has many regular channels to talk with the faculty, but the faculty has fewer opportunities to discuss their needs with the administration. The faculty desired a direct channel for communicating with the administration," said Gillespie, who is chairing the council. The group met Sept. 11 prior to its Sept. 13 meeting with the administration.

Council members determined that they would be the faculty's "instructed delegates" rather than "trustees." "An instructed delegate reports the concerns of the faculty at large to the administration as opposed to a trustee who would lead the faculty with its age and wisdom," said Gillespie.

Dr. William J. Moncrief, PC senior vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty, expressed his support for the council. "With 75 faculty members, it is difficult to know how the faculty as a whole feels on an issue and the senior faculty council can serve as a mechanism to make communication more effective," Moncrief said.

Issues that may be discussed by the council include the requirement for faculty members to be Christian, the construction of new buildings, and salary adjustments. Both Gillespie and Moncrief agreed that much remains to be determined of the full duties and roles of the senior faculty council.

POINT

Homecoming a time to reflect, unify

Homecoming on the Presbyterian College campus is a time for celebration, reunions, and reflection upon what makes this institution so vastly different from any other. The parties, games, meetings, and presentations bring to life so much of what this institution embodies—people. Amidst the celebration and spirit, The Blue Stocking encourages each member of this community, alumnus, student, faculty, staff, or friend, to take a few quiet moments, whether at Lake Orr or on the steps of Neville Hall, to examine what Presbyterian College has been and is to you. So often, between the meetings, games, parties, and tests, the true meaning of Presbyterian College is lost in the transition. How has this institution fostered your personal growth? Your commitment, in one form or another, to service? What larger principles is this school seeking to teach?

This is a time for a celebration of Presbyterian College as a whole...not a particular graduating class, sorority, fraternity, organization, or aspect of this college. For well over a hundred years, this institution has instilled the principles of education, honor, and service to thousands who have entered its doors. It is for that reason we gather to celebrate this weekend.

Morris: No more pep in band's step

A goal of the PC administration and college student government this academic year has been to increase campus unity, strengthening the historic ties between PC students, organizations, and the college administration. It therefore comes as a surprise that PC director of athletics Allen Morris has replaced the performance of the college's Blue Thunder Pep Band with local high school bands. The decision was a slap in the face to the PC students who have worked hard to ensure the pep band's successful performance each week in the past. While the high school bands may provide more visual entertainment, the fact remains that they are indeed high school students, not PC students. In a year where efforts and overtures have been made to ensure a stronger school spirit and more unified efforts in all of the college's areas of interest, it is disappointing that a college administrator would eliminate a tradition involving PC students to bring in those not affiliated with the school.

Pac saC editor retires $25,000 debt

Since 1989, Presbyterian College's yearbook, Pac saC, has accumulated a debt of over $25,000, thanks in large part to missed deadlines and excessive spending by former editors. Last week, current Pac saC editor Jay Therrell officially paid the debt off to the annual's former publisher, NewsFoto Yearbooks. Therrell has trimmed costs and streamlined the book to save enough to finally retire a debt which has burdened the college for over five years.

Therrell is to be commended. He has managed to cut costs while at the same time producing a high quality yearbook with little or no noticeable difference to the casual reader. At the same time, Therrell has missed no deadlines and has eliminated spending not directly related to the yearbook's production. His efficiency and financial prudence are exemplary.

Blue Stocking editors often face dilemma between "news" and "fluff"

Recently, noted journalist William Raspberry visited the campus to speak at a Russell Program convocation. Raspberry is a syndicated columnist with The Washington Post and an observer of the world of the media. Raspberry spoke of the growing problem with the perception of the media as "bad news reporters." The problem, he explained, is that today's journalists are obsessed with reporting only stories of conflict, controversy and corruption. He said it is difficult to report positive stories because they are perceived as "fluffy" and "soft." In this day, good news often loses out to bad news in the world of competitive media.

No one in the world of journalism is untouched by this dilemma. Each journalist struggles with the questions of what good news is and what people want to see or read. Though I hardly consider myself a journalist, I have devoted a great deal of thought to these issues, which often affect us here at The Blue Stocking. Is it the responsibility of The Blue Stocking to report "hard news" or "soft news"? Should we do our best to pry deep down into campus affairs and report the dirtiest news we can, or should we report only the highlights of campus life? Should our newspaper strive to break hard, controversial news, or should we be a public relations instrument, reporting only the things that make PC look like a wonderful, perfect society?

Part of me wants to be that hard-hitting journalist. I want to expose controversy. I want to put issues that face each of us in the spotlight for everyone to see. I want people to know that this place is sometimes not as perfect as it seems. I suppose it's that journalistic instinct in me. But that instinct to report only "bad news" is what Raspberry spoke against last week. That instinct is most of what is wrong with the media today, he claimed. What good would it really do, in a community as small as ours, to dig deep and expose controversial stories? What purpose would be served by bringing controversial information to light? The answer? It may be information that you need to know.

My Turn
Leighton Hart

I have a feeling that it is my responsibility to report the cold, hard news. Outside PC, freedom of the press is protected by law. And while The Blue Stocking is protected by that law, our newspaper is often not a free press. We have the burden of living in a tightly-knit community, where at the end of the day, we must go back to the dormitories and attend classes with the same people we report on. It would be nice to think that we can report any legitimate news we want to, but we have the people of this campus community to consider. It puts us in an awkward position.

We like to run stories about the people and events that make PC an outstanding small college. It reflects well on the school. But there are dangers in reporting only "good news." This year's first edition of The Blue Stocking was distributed the Friday after freshmen arrived on campus. In that situation, we ran many positive stories about the college. We had an article about the freshman class, an article about the campus social facility, and several other optimistic articles about PC athletic teams. I think the paper gave freshmen a warm introduction to campus events and issues, and it happened to be free from controversial subject matter. But what if it had contained controversy?

The question is: is it right to slant a paper to fit a particular group of readers? Cold, hard news, or distorted happy-go-lucky truths? I wonder which is better, and which is worse for you the reader.

I remind you that The Blue Stocking always welcomes your feedback on this and any issue or article.

Homecoming emphasizes unity, success

Homecoming is certainly a time to welcome back to campus many of our alumni, but it is also another great opportunity for us to show our school spirit and unity. I would like to congratulate all of the organizations who have actively participated in Presbyterian Council and who have worked to make sure that as we honor our visiting friends this weekend, we will also emphasize our common bonds at Presbyterian College. The Student Union Board has worked hard to create campus-wide activities which should appeal to all of the student body. From the Blue Sox Festival and the band party afterwards, to the Homecoming football game with the Grand Homecoming Court, and all of the activities that will follow, I feel confident that this will be another weekend to remember at Presbyterian College.

I want to also like to commend you, the student body, for a great job in the new academic building. You have taken part in a campus-wide effort to make sure that the new building is not only a place of learning, but also a place of community. You have been an integral part of the building's success, and we are proud of you.

Have a wonderful Homecoming Weekend! Welcome back graduates of PC, we look forward to seeing you, remembering past events with you, and learning from your Presbyterian experience. Go PC! Beat Wolford!

PC's newest landmark is only weeks away from completion. The state-of-the-art Mathematics and Social Sciences Center will house professors and classes from Neville, Richardson, and Jacobs Halls beginning in January. The top two floors of the building will provide professors with office, storage, seminar space, as well as a large faculty lounge. Each faculty office floor is designed with a furnished waiting room for students.

Four classrooms are designed similar to the state-of-the-art classrooms at Wolford College. These rooms include video projectors and screens, as well as video monitors. The building is also equipped with a 30-station computer lab, however it will open with only 20 stations. The majority of the basement floor is designed specifically for use by the psychology department. This floor features specialized labs, an animal holding room, and a sound and light-proof room to be used for sensory deprivation experiments. One particularly unique feature of the building is that two classrooms will remain open 24 hours a day. The rooms will be accessible by two card-entry doors.

While the college has made no official announcement of the building's name, sources confirm that the building will be named the Herrington Peachtree Academic Center. Herrington is the pastor at Peachtree Presbyterian Church in Atlanta and chairman of the Board of Trustees. Herrington and his church made a sizeable donation to the costs of the project, which have been estimated at $5.2 million. The building is scheduled for completion in October. Classes will start in the building in January, and the building will be formally dedicated in February.

PC IN BRIEF

Track program may fall victim to athletic budget cuts

As the athletic and college budgets tighten with additional emphasis on academics and campus facilities, the Blue Stocking has learned that the college may seek to eliminate the men's track program later this fall.

According to director of athletics Allen Morris, no definite decision on eliminating the program will be reached until he and the Faculty Athletic Committee meet in mid-October to discuss various proposals. The FAC, which was created by the self-study team which evaluated Blue Hose athletics, is composed of chairman Dr. John Inman, faculty athletic representative Dr. George Dupuy, four faculty members, three student representatives, and Morris. Ideally, this committee will serve as a liaison between coaches and the faculty, Inman said.

Glenn Miller Orchestra to perform Sunday

The Glenn Miller Orchestra will perform Sunday at 3 p.m. in Belk Auditorium. The program, a performance event, features such highlights as the "Chattanooga Choo Choo" and other favorites from Miller's over 1700 compositions. The present Miller Orchestra has been playing since 1956.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for students. For additional information, call the Fine Arts Box Office at 8317.

SGA inaugurates new freshmen officers

Laura Keely, a Rock Hill, S.C. student, was inaugurated Monday into office as freshmen class president. She defeated several other candidates in general and runoff elections last week. Also taking office Monday were freshmen class representatives Mary Frances Patrick and Karin Miller, both Greenville, S.C. natives.

Alternative social facility opening delayed

The opening of an alternative social facility behind Jacobs Hall has encountered zoning difficulties, causing delay and difficulty in its establishment, according to Joe Nixon, Dean of Student Affairs.

"Originally, we planned to have Terry Vaughan of Terry's operate the facility. However, we were informed that would be a violation of the city zoning ordinance," said Nixon.

The plan now, according to Nixon, is to have Springs Campus Center assistant director Brian Madden operate the facility. Phone orders will allow quick delivery of food from local restaurants, and students of legal age will be able to bring limited quantities of alcohol, Nixon said.

Nixon said the college plans to open the facility before fall break, although his office has not set a specific opening date.

Career, graduate school fair planned for October 12; internships available

A career and graduate school fair will take place on Oct. 12 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Mabry-Smith-Yoncos Center. The fair will feature representatives with employment information as well as admissions counselors from major graduate and professional schools. The fair is open to all PC students.

In addition, the Career Planning and Placement Office is now seeking interested students for participation in the "LIFE" internship program. The program allows sophomores, juniors, and seniors to work in Laurens County businesses and services to gain vital "hands-on" career experience. For additional information, contact Andrea Long in Career Planning and Placement at 8380.

Land deal could provide location for senior apartment village

by Laura Jacobs
Staff Writer

PC may be on its way to solving the on-campus housing crunch. In mid-August, a deal negotiated by Skip Zubrod, vice president of finance and treasurer, was approved by college president Kenneth B. Orr, secured the purchase of eight acres of land surrounding the Brown Cultural Center. The land is located directly across Maple Street from fraternity court. The purchase, which brings the total acreage of the college to 220, has students wondering what the college plans to do with this land and how soon they plan to do it.

"One of the things we're talking about is a senior village, which may be built on this land. The land, however, was not bought with a firm plan in mind," said Zubrod. Such a plan might include apartments for PC seniors similar to a senior village proposal.

"Plans for the start of development depend on outside organizations putting up the money. A company would build apartments and lease them to us for twenty or twenty-five years. The rent of the students would pay the lease, and, after the specified time, PC would own the apartments," explained Zubrod. "The idea is to give seniors a place to live other than off-campus apartments or dormitories while at the same time alleviating the on-campus housing problem," he said.

PC acquired this land in three separate plots from various landowners. "We have been talking with them for a number of years," said Zubrod. "Finally, the conditions were just right. Matters such as these go slowly in Clinton. This land goes back historically, having been passed down through families for generations. The children of these families are just ready to sell now." Zubrod would not release the names of the landowners or actual purchase price of the land.

Those who originally owned the Brown Cultural Center planned to build a retirement facility there for the elderly of Clinton. The plans, however, were never realized in the form of such a center, and PC bought the house with plans to acquire the surrounding land in the future. The house now serves the Minority Student Union. "Since the recently-acquired land is adjacent to the property on which the Cultural Center stands, it was the logical choice for the next purchase," Zubrod said.

According to Zubrod, the college is keenly interested in preserving the integrity of the PC campus, and concerns about outside developers have led college officials to purchase land surrounding the campus to avoid the construction of undesirable structures that might be detrimental to the value of college property and to the well-being of PC students. "Part of the long-range plan for the college is to purchase property next to the college to protect college interests. Property on both sides of Maple Street would do that," said Zubrod.

The effect of the land purchase on the college "depends on how we use [the land]. It is initially land for long-term development without hard and fast plans. If we didn't buy it, someone else would," he said. In other words, PC's move to buy now, even without solid plans, will give the college control over the decision of how to use this acreage in the future.

There is the possibility for future land purchase in close proximity to the land that the college presently owns, but Zubrod declined comment on specific purchasing plans. As for the present, Zubrod did not know which company the college will contract to build the proposed senior village, as negotiations have only just begun.

"It is a little early to be specific on how this land purchase will benefit students," said Zubrod. "Should it be used for a senior village, it will give housing options, and it will protect the campus from undesirable outside uses." Zubrod does not foresee any problems with the proposal, nor does he expect objections from residents of Clinton.

PC students do not seem likely to raise any objections to more housing options either. "If the apartments are maintained better than the male dormitories, I think a senior village would be a good idea," said senior Brandt Rucker.

"Living in an apartment 'village' setting would be really cool, because it would be close enough to get to campus easily," said Erika Torrey, a junior.

"I would consider living in a senior village," said sophomore Mollie Gratz, "because most upperclassmen want to live off campus, and if the school would provide that opportunity, it would be beneficial."

While the students quoted will have already graduated by the time the senior village is a reality, this alternative to off-campus housing and to dormitory life may be the perfect option to future PC seniors.

If or when the senior village is constructed, its tenants will have the privilege of living in close proximity to a young pine forest, thanks to the reforestation efforts of former PC Athletic Director Cally Gault and his family.

A forested area behind the intramural field was cut earlier in the spring. The pine trees on the land, belonging to Gault's family, were harvested for timber and pulpwood, but, according to Gault, several of the large hardwoods were left standing on the land, which was formerly a farm. "You have to harvest pine trees. An ice storm three or four years ago did tremendous damage that could not be seen from the road. Also, pine beetles had become a problem. Several trees were already on the ground," Gault said.

Bearing environmental as well as college interests in mind, the Gaults have definite plans to reforest the land within the next year. "Once the trees are replanted," said Gault, "it will look even nicer than it did before. In good land management, you have to tear it down to build it back up."

It may be PC's turn to tear down a few trees in the future when the construction of the proposed senior village gets underway. Many students hope, however, the apartments that are "built up" in their place, will be of benefit to the future seniors of PC.

of responsibilities as director of alumni affairs. While he held this position, he started the PAR program, which uses alumni to recruit prospective students; the annual fund phone-a-thon; and the Student Alumni Council. In 1989, Randall left to start a career in commercial printing, but returned to PC two years later, and once again took the position of director of student activities.

Randall has contributed much to PC and the community in his spare time. He has acted in the play "The Fantasticks" in the stadium announcer for home football games, and also has announced PC basketball and football games on the radio. Outside of Presbyterian, he is active in the I Am a Boy County Community Theatre and in the Palmetto Master Singers, an 80 to 100 voice male choir based in Columbia.

"Working for Randy is an enjoyable experience. Even when the work is overbearing, his positive outlook makes things easier," said Amy Marie Gault, a PC student who works for Randall's office.

"I've known Randy since he was a student here, and he has always been an outgoing, nice person," said Helen Hall, a textbook buyer for the school.

Randy Randall, PC director of student activities, is familiar to many old and new faces on the PC campus. In addition to serving as director of Springs, Randall has also directed the college's alumni affairs office.

Randall experiences PC as student, director, administrator

by Nathan Cain
Staff Writer

Anyone who has been through Springs Campus Center or attended a Student Union Board sponsored activity has benefited from the work of Randy Randall, director of student activities here at PC. Randall's responsibilities include managing Springs, organizing and supervising orientation trips for freshmen and transfer students, and working with the Student Union Board to plan activities. Randall has a long history here at Presbyterian, beginning as a student in 1971.

Randall graduated from PC in 1975 with a degree in psychology. He went to the University of Georgia to pursue a Master's degree in recreation, and returned to Presbyterian in 1976 to take on the position of director of student activities. For seven years Randall coordinated intramurals and coached the women's basketball team he founded. During that time, he met his wife, Kim Randall, who is also a Presbyterian graduate. They now have two daughters, Kelley, 12, and Taylor, 7.

Stallworth successor takes pride in college, new assignment

by Charles Smith
Staff Writer

PC administrators' search for a new director of alumni affairs eventually led them overseas.

Butch Woodward was awakened in the middle of the night in Germany by a phone call from PC. He was offered a chance to return to his alma mater and succeed Tom Stallworth as Director of Alumni Affairs.

"I am pleased to have Butch Woodward. Like having an alumni in office who appreciates what PC did for him during his four years here and who is dedicated to the goals and spirit of PC," Stallworth said of his successor.

Woodward

Woodward had a modest upbringing in Graniteville, S.C. Woodward had very little money for college, but was assisted by a generous PC administrator who enabled him to attend PC. After graduating in 1960, Woodward taught and drove a school bus for one year. "At Aiken High School, I was at the low end of the totem pole. I taught American and World History, coached JV football, and drove a bus to support a wife and young child," he said.

Then he moved on to a successful thirty-four year career in business. Woodward began with General Mills, and moved four times in the ten years that he worked for the cereal company. "General Mills was a very good company, and I kept getting promotions. But to get these promotions we had to keep moving from town to town, and I finally got tired of it," he said.

After leaving General Mills, Woodward became a stockbroker with Merrill Lynch in 1971. Woodward's twenty-four year career with the giant financial firm led to his managing Merrill Lynch offices in Charleston, S.C., Scottsdale, Ariz., San Diego, Calif., and Jenkintown, Penn. During his last three years as a stockbroker, Woodward managed a 175 employee Merrill Lynch office in Baltimore, Maryland.

Upon taking an early retirement from Merrill Lynch, Woodward moved to Clinton, where he purchased a house built by the grandson of PC founder William Plumer Jacobs. Woodward has spent the last three months remodeling the home.

"After retiring, I missed dealing and interacting with people like I had at Merrill Lynch. I always loved and supported PC. The Alumni Office is also an exciting place to work because you get to keep alumni posted on the events and goings-on campus," said Woodward.

Woodward has always been interested in serving PC in some capacity. Upon hearing of Tom Stallworth's retirement, Woodward expressed an interest in Stallworth's position. Woodward received the offer while traveling in Germany. The new Director of Alumni Affairs has given PC a five year commitment. However, he would like to continue in his position if he enjoys his new post.

"I have a great love for Presbyterian College, and I look forward to working with the Alumni," he said.

"I am delighted to work with Butch Woodward in the Alumni Affairs Office. In the twenty-seven years that I have worked in Alumni Affairs, he has proven to be a loyal alumnus," said Mary Lehman, Administrative Assistant in the Office of Alumni Affairs.

Woodward has two sons and two grandchildren. He likes to fish, pickle with cars, and travel in his spare time, he said.

"Clinton has been an easy town to move into because the town revolves around the family, church, and the college," he said.

PC's "wonderwoman" takes time to enjoy homecoming

by Heather Antos
Staff Writer

A familiar face to both alumni and PC students this weekend will surely be PC senior Angelique Cunningham. Since her arrival in 1992, Cunningham has been involved in various aspects of PC life, influencing and joking everyone she comes across.

"Angelique is Presbyterian College's wonderwoman. I don't know how she finds the time to do everything she does," said fellow senior Ty Henson. Henson co-chairs Youth Day for Student Alumni Council with Cunningham, a sociology major from Woodruff, S.C.. In addition to Student Alumni Council, Cunningham is also Minority Student Union President, and a three-year resident assistant. "Being an RA makes me remember all the excitement and energy of being a freshman. It gives me a high— that's why some people would say that I'm over-involved," she said.

Cunningham also finds time to work in Student Volunteer Services as an administrative assistant to Chon Glover. "In a lot of ways, Angie's my right hand. With the personality she has, she can never say no to anyone," Glover said. In addition, Cunningham serves on Student Government Association and the central spirit committee of the Student Union Board. "If there is something that can be changed, I don't see how [I] could justify not getting involved. It's just my personality," Cunningham said. She devotes the rest of her time to the gospel choir, Stirlings, and playing percussion in the wind ensemble.

"Homecoming is an opportunity for alumni to give back to PC in return for the life-long experiences the school has provided them. It allows for an interaction between current students and alumni; it's a kind of networking of people who have shared the PC community," she said. She looks forward to homecoming each year and sees it as a great way to show school spirit, which she believes is an essen-tomorrow during the homecoming celebration.

"Angie is an incredible person who I feel honored and lucky to work with both in STAC and residence life," said senior Suzanne Jowers.

Cunningham is proud to be a PC student, but says her immediate goal is to "graduate with my sanity." She often recruits students without realizing it as she meets and converses with college-bound high school juniors and seniors, she said. "I tell them that professors here really care. They'll suggest study sessions, invite you to their homes, and even call you by name. Administrators hear your name one time and don't forget it," she said.

She sits back to reflect for a moment on some of her first experiences as a PC student. "I remember I met Dr. Ramsey at Winter Conference and didn't see him again for the rest of the semester. Then he went on sabbatical for an entire year. When I saw him again a year and a half later, he called me by name," she said. Cunningham likes the small size of PC's campus because there is ample opportunity for everyone to get involved.

"Angelique is extremely reliable; you can depend on her for anything. She's always on the go, but she's always cheerful, always smiling," said Jowers. There is no doubt that Cunningham will smile during Saturday's halftime activities as she reflects upon her last homecoming as a PC student.

"There is room at PC for everyone to get involved. You have to have something to stand for. Mine's to get involved and help people. I want to meet as many people as I can," said Cunningham.

This year, Cunningham is representing SGA on the homecoming court. Although she was not initially selected as a candidate, enough people wrote in her name for her to become a candidate. "It was all done unbeknownst to me. I do feel like my contributions have been noticed. Looking back on my entire PC career, I really can't think of anything else that made me this excited; I'm ecstatic," she said. Her father will be her escort

Mens' tennis rigorous fall schedule will prepare team for spring

by J. R. Wright
Staff Writer

Blue Hose men's tennis coach Bobby McKee doesn't know what to expect from his squad this fall because he has seen them perform only in practice. In fact, of the fourteen players on the team this year, only three have college experience. McKee recruited nine freshmen during the off-season last year in hopes of taking a stronger, deeper team to the court. "I'm really excited about the team this year," he said.

Though they posted a 9-12 record last spring, PC closed the season strong with a third place finish in the South Atlantic Conference tournament.

Based on the talent level which pervades this squad, the 1995 Blue Hose, however, should be able to challenge any opponent from the top of the ladder to the bottom, McKee said. "The disappointing record from last year was basically my fault so this year I wanted to do something to change the overall atmosphere of the team," said McKee. By bringing in so many young, new faces McKee has rekindled the competitive fire in his team. "Every player is hungry for a starting spot and everyone will try and do what it takes to make the lineup," he said.

Of the newcomers, freshmen Zach Loftis and Preston Menning are expected to see the most action this fall. Travis Rentz, Todd Roemmich, Will Stewart, and Chuck Webb have also been impressive early this season, but the Hose will undoubtedly be lead by sophomores Tom Swift, Ronnie Setzer, and Ed Ridgeway. Swift was All-Conference last season as a freshman and is hoping to have an outstanding year in 1995-96. "We've got a good chance of going to nationals this year if everybody works hard in practice and keeps a good attitude throughout the season," said Swift.

The team will be competing in a number of tournaments this fall. On October 6-8 the Blue Hose will be involved in the Rolex national singles tournament. On Oct. 13-14, the Hose will be competing in a doubles tournament at Gardner Webb; and on Oct. 27-28, PC will hold an intercollegiate tournament of its own, so mark your calendars.

On November 3-4, the Hose will travel to Augusta for a tournament and will then complete its fall season with an intercollegiate Davis Cup tournament from Nov. 8-11.

This rigorous fall schedule should prepare the Hose for the important spring season when match play begins. The abundance of youth on this squad should men's tennis team has a bright future, but when asked about his expectations, Coach McKee really doesn't know what to expect right now. "I hope that we have a winning season, but more importantly I hope that a spirit of togetherness can be instilled into this young, inexperienced team," he says.

Larger womens' tennis team boosted by freshmen, recruits

The Blue Hose women's tennis team is entering the 1995 fall season with a new measure of confidence, due largely to the increase of members on this year's eleven player squad. Last season, the six PC teammates could have traveled to away matches in a Yugo. Under the direction of Coach Donna Arnold, however, those six individuals posted a 19-5 record and received a bid to the Nationals, a feat which would remain a dream for many teams.

With a top twenty pre-season ranking this fall, Coach Arnold hopes to match and perhaps even surpass last season's accomplishments. "We were in an unreal situation last year with only six players. But this season we have all the starters returning and five newcomers," Arnold said.

Returners from the 1994-1995 squad are seniors Jennifer Brim, Stacie Buttrif and Jessica Clark and juniors Chrissie Bolt, Dawn Dachelet and Dana Davis. With the assistance of PC basketball player Chris Mitchum, who joined the Hose to help them complete the season despite never having played organized tennis, these Lady Hose earned the respect of opponents with twice as many players.

The five newcomers who will complement Arnold's existing players are sophomores transfer Kimberly Hampton and freshmen Martha Correll, Lindsay Keogler, Kelli Kirkland and Robyn Loveless.

"We are solid all the way down the ladder and I am looking toward having a great season," said Arnold.

"Old team members will help new team members out with their game and demonstrate leadership on the court," said Loveless.

The Blue Hose will compete in the Rolex Tournament in Spartanburg from September 30-October 2 and then travel to Georgia College to enter a tournament during the weekend of October 13-15.

"This tournament (at Georgia College) will include many of the top ranked teams in the country including defending national champion Armstrong State. We have received a strong freshman class that will help boost the team this year, and we should have a great season," said Dachelet.

freshman midfielder Heather Jones broke a toe. When asked how the gaps were being filled, Susan Cook said, "The freshmen are stepping up to play really well." All of the Freshman have seen action in at least four out of five of the games, and midfielder Rebecca Monroe has started once.

The glue of this team definitely seems to be the leadership of its captains, Bailey and Peterson. All players agreed with Becker when she commented that they always seem to keep the team focused. "Sometimes we just get too intense," Becker said. "They make us laugh and relax so nobody gets stressed out."

The Soccer team will face their toughest opponent yet when they travel to Jacksonville, Florida on Sept. 24th to face the second best ranked team in the nation, Barry University. PC is currently ranked number seven in the nation and will look forward to proving that they do in fact have that "little more" that it takes to be champion.

The Blue Hose play Mary Hall at home on October 2nd. They play Gardner Webb October 5th.

Volleyball scores victories in conference, tournament play

by Ellison Manley

With the loss of one senior and three upperclassmen, the Presbyterian College volleyball team could have approached this season with a dim outlook. Instead, the Lady Blue Hose have started out the season in the tradition the volleyball program has become known for - winning. Standing at 4-1 in the South Atlantic Conference, the Lady Blue Hose are 17-1 overall.

The SAC victories include an important road win over the consistently strong Catawba College team, 15-10, 15-7, 11-15, 15-10. Later that week, the Blue Hose defeated Carson Newman College easily by a score of 15-8, 15-8, 15-8. Last weekend the Blue Hose hosted a midseason conference tournament and suffered their first loss of the season to Wingate College. PC has developed a fierce rivalry over the years with the Lady Bulldogs of Wingate and fought hard before going down 16-14, 15-13, 15-6. The team will have an opportunity to avenge their loss this week as they travel to Wingate. The Lady Blue Hose rebounded after their loss and went on to defeat perennial powerhouse Elon College in five games and then Lenoir-Rhyne College.

In non-conference play, the Blue Hose have defeated two of the top teams in the Peachbelt Conference. PC defeated USC-Aiken in the season opener 15-5, 13-15, 15-3, and 15-8, and have defeated USC-Spartanburg twice: 15-13, 9-15, 15-9, 15-6, and 13-15, 15-12, 15-13, and 15-11. Additional wins have come over nearby Columbia College, Anderson College, and Erskine College.

The seventeen victories have come under the leadership of senior captain Brooke Fleming. Fleming was named the SAC Player of the Week last week after helping the team to three victories. She tallied 37 kills, 8 blocks, 26 digs, and had an impressive .500 hitting percentage. She leads the conference in hitting percentage with a .356 average and also ranks eighth in both kills per game and digs per game. Fleming attributes the team's success, however, to sheer teamwork. "The only way we have been able to be so successful is through working together. When we quit working as a team against Wingate, we lost. We've got to maintain a high level of teamwork if we want to contend for the conference title," Fleming said.

Junior Watoma Williams has also compiled some impressive statistics and has been named to two All-Tournament teams already. She is fourth in the SAC for hitting percentage (.318) and third in kills per game with 3.54. Standing at 6'2", Williams powerful play at the net is impressive and crowd pleasing.

Another force at the net for the Blue Hose thus far is sophomore Beth Mann. Mann is thirteenth in the conference in hitting percentage with a mark of .245. She also ranks twelfth for kills per game with 2.44.

Defensively, the Blue Hose have been paced by junior Amy Lindell. She leads the league in digs per game with 4.27. Additionally she leads the team with 96.43% serving. Lindell has overcome illness which prevented her from playing as effectively as she would have liked last season. "Last season I went into every game scared. Now my confidence is up. I also feel like the team is really clicking. We're not playing like six individuals, we're playing like a team," Lindell said. The Blue Hose are also getting solid backrow play from sophomore Mary Kruse. Kruse is first on the team in passing percentage with a mark of 92.59%.

Sophomore Jenny Frieling and freshman Jennell Sanders have been sharing the load at the setter position. Frieling averages 4.7 assists per game while Sanders averages 3.62 assists per game. In addition, the two setters lead the team in service assists with 5 per game.

The volleyball season is drawing to the midway point and the Lady Blue Hose enter the second half with a lot of momentum-momentum that will hopefully propel them to the Conference Championship and a berth to the NCAA Playoffs.

Womens soccer team determined to take championship

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

Someone must have explained the Champion Athletic clothing slogan to Presbyterian Women's Soccer coach Brian Purcell a long time ago. The team's season performances get better and better, and Purcell is proving once again this year that he and the Lady Hose definitely know that "it takes a little more to make a champion."

Off to a 5-0 start, the Blue Hose have benefited from many hours of practice devoted in the summer months. They have tallied up a list of wins over Erskine, Queens, Coker, Carson-Newman, and Wingate Colleges. PC shut out Coker on September the 11th as Brook Wright scored two goals and Rebecca Hardman, Heather Jones, and Elizabeth Welborn added one a piece, and they shut Carson-Newman five days later on the 16th as Lisa Becker, Susan Cook, Hardman, and Renee Bevil supplied the offense "kicks" to secure the first conference game of the season. The wins over Carson-Newman and Wingate make them 2-0 in the conference.

PC's defense has performed admirably considering there have been two shutouts and only 5 goals allowed so far this season. Much of the credit for these accomplishments can be given to junior goalkeeper Emily Campbell. With a career total now of nine shutouts and a GAA of .86, Campbell is currently ranked third on Presbyterian's all-time goalkeeping list. Campbell has made 14 saves this season, and has only let three goals get past her in five matches.

Campbell's defensive efforts are complimented by an outstanding backfield of tenacious defenders who have been performing at an exceptional level. Senior co-captain Carly Peterson is the backbone of experience and determination on defense. Named PC's Most Valuable Defensive Player last year, Peterson teams up with junior defender Lisa Becker to provide the Blue Hose with an excellent part of marking backs. Former midfielder, Liz Roe, has strengthened the backfield with an intense defensive spark at sweeper this year. The move from midfield to sweeper has been a smooth adjustment for Roe and, quite obviously, a beneficial move for the team overall. The team finished third in the region in defense against scoring last year, and should see similar results if their performance continues on its course.

Junior forward Rebecca Hardman ranked 5th on the all-time scoring list at PC with 20 career goals at the start of the season, but Hardman has already managed to add nine more to her tally this season in just five games. Hardman and senior Elizabeth Watson led the offensive frontrunners. Welborn, along with co-captain Carey Bailey, provide a great deal of experience to PC's offense. Bailey and Welborn have both made two goals, and had two assists thus far along with Junior Lisa Becker. Junior Susan Cook has seen an increased amount of playing time this year, starting in all five games and knocking in two goals so far.

Injury has unfortunately been a part of the Blue Hose's season as SAT Freshman of the Year Brooke Wright sustained a hip injury that will keep her off the field for a week or two more, and

Team to take on USC in Columbia Sunday

Mens' soccer team battles to number 17 in nation, number 5 in south

by Brian Sacco
Managing Editor

Attempting to prevent a second year of frustration, the 1995 Presbyterian College Men's Soccer team has attacked the first half of their season with the determination and pride of an established champion. Rolling off an impressive record of six wins against no losses, and tying fifth-ranked USCS on September 16, the Blue Hose have once again proven their dominance on the soccer field and have achieved a national ranking of #18 and #5 in the South region for Division II.

Led by the expertise of thirteenth-year head coach Ralph Polson, the Blue Hose have excelled in nearly every phase of their game, giving Coach Polson a reason to be pleasantly surprised. "Injuries and attitudes hurt us last year, but everyone worked hard during the spring and the team came into the season the most physically fit we had ever been," he said.

The Blue Hose hosted the first annual Adidas/Presbyterian College Invitational this past weekend, where they captured the team championship. In the opening match, Wingate crushed Anderson College, 4-0. In the second match of the weekend, the Blue Hose held on to defeat Florida Southern University, 2-1. Senior forward Chris Napior contributed a goal and an assist, while junior defender Dick Hiller added another goal in the game.

Florida Southern toppled Wingate in Sunday's first match and then PC faced Anderson College; the Hose again prevailed in a convincing manner, 6-1. Sophomore midfielder Todd Anderson and freshman midfielder Javi Roman each scored a goal while junior defender Kevin Smith scored two goals, junior forward Stefan Svards added a goal and an assist, and junior midfielder Jimmy May knocked in a goal and contributed two assists on goals. Senior defender Brian Blackwelder, and freshmen John King and Ryan Williamson also added assists on goals. Napior, May, Smith, and Hiller were named to the all-tournament team for their outstanding play over the weekend.

"Overall, I was pleased with the team's effort in the games. The conditions for the first game kept us from playing our usual ground game. In the second game, we were able to get a lot of quality playing time for our non-starters, which made it a fun day of soccer," said Polson.

With nine starters returning from last year's squad, the Blue Hose have been able to play effectively on the basis of experience and the leadership of senior co-captains Brian Blackwelder and Mark Martin. Martin, a starting midfielder, said, "There have been a number of reasons for our success, mainly that we had a change of attitude and we have had several guys take up a leadership role when others were struggling. Chris Napior has really been a great leader for us this year especially through his performance on the field."

After struggling through the preseason in games against Furman and the University of South Carolina, the Blue Hose opened the regular season with a tough road win at Thomas College. Winning by the final score of 3-2, PC dominated the game but found the home team less than willing to concede an easy victory. Svards scored the game-winning goal, while Anderson and May each added a goal.

On September 6 the Blue Hose travelled to Due West to take on rival Erskine College in a non-conference game, where the visiting Hose once again escaped with a narrow win in overtime, 1-0. After dominating most of the game, PC found themselves unable to put the game away early, but a goal by Napior, on an assist from Anderson, allowed the Blue Hose to escape in overtime with a victory.

In their first home and SAC game of the season September 9, the Blue Hose hosted rival Carson-Newman on the Ponderosa and sent the visitors packing after a late goal by Napior sealed the victory for PC. Coach Polson said, "We needed to show that we were a better team against a quality opponent and we succeeded." The Blue Hose were rewarded for their hard work with a #23 ranking in the ISCAA national Division II poll and a #6 ranking in the South region.

"Teamwork has definitely helped us this season. We have been much more dedicated to our goals that we set back in November," said Napior. "We are just taking it day by day and we have a much more positive attitude this season."

On September 13 the Blue Hose played host to Belmont Abbey, and once again, as if by requirement, PC played well throughout the game but posted a narrow 2-1 victory. Goals by Napior and senior midfielder Tyler Boulware solidified the victory for PC, but as Coach Polson remarked, "We looked past this game to USCS." The stage was set as the Blue Hose prepared to battle the favored USCS team on September 16.

Playing in front a large and intensely animated home crowd, the match could not in to play a full 90 minutes and two overtime periods where USCS came away with a tie.

"The talk in the locker room showed that we were confident of ourselves and that gave us the motivation to play hard and step up our game. After the first overtime, I told the players that it would be no consolation just to say we played well, so we knew we needed to come out of the game with at least a tie," said Polson. Once again the team was rewarded for its outstanding play as the Blue Hose moved up to a #17 ranking nationally and to a #5 ranking in the South region. Individually, sophomore goalkeeper Jeremy Ransom was named Player of the Week for the SAC based on his undefeated record and a 0.60 goals allowed per game average.

"The unity of the team and the togetherness has allowed us to be successful this season," said junior Clint Galloway.

Napior has led the Blue Hose with four goals this season, while contributing a team high 10 points. Anderson, May, Svards, and Smith each have added two goals apiece in PC's successful campaign this season.

On Tuesday, the Blue Hose did receive some disappointing news for the first time this season when they found out that although they won both of their games over the weekend, they dropped in the national coaches' poll to a #18 rank in the nation. They did, however, remain ranked number five in the South region. Currently, the Blue Hose are enjoying a week of preparation before they travel to The Graceland at the University of South Carolina to take on the highly touted Gamecocks this Sunday.

Blue Hose football turnovers doom upset bid

by John Scott
Staff Writer

Coming off their best start in sixteen years, the Blue Hose football team approached their contest against powerful SAC foe Carson-Newman on Saturday, September 16 with a 2-0 record and high hopes of extending their undefeated streak. Ranked #14 in NCAA Division II, the heavily favored Eagles strolled into their first South Atlantic Conference game with a first class running offense which consistently broke over 200 yards per game. On the other side of the ball, the Eagles' aggressive defensive front was led by the 1994 All-American nose guard Steve Mellon.

The game was expected to be a high scoring offensive battle as the versatile Presbyterian offense led by quarterback Randy Sullivan and fullback Steve Gornie sought to surpass the impressive stats which the Eagles traditionally post.

In the first quarter Carson-Newman received the kickoff and began the series on their own thirty one yard line. On first down, Eagle quarterback Matt Penland hit wideout Jimmy James for a 34 yard gain and as James evaded the startled Blue Hose secondary, Carson-Newman quickly moved into field goal range at the PC 35 yard line. Ultimately, Eagle kicker Standfest booted a 37 yard attempt through the uprights to cap a drive which lasted less than three minutes.

A Blue Hose fumble at the outset of their first drive returned the ball to Carson Newman on their own 28 yard line, and the Eagles quickly punched in a touchdown to go ahead 10-0 with 10:43 remaining in the first quarter.

The Blue Hose offense continued to suffer their first quarter woes as the next three possessions proved fruitless due to a fumble, an interception, and a failure to convert on a third down. The Hose defense, on the other hand, succeeded in holding the Eagles to a mere two first downs throughout the end of the first quarter and the beginning of the second and forced a punt to give Presbyterian the ball with 10:41 remaining before the half.

The Hose began the drive on their own 20 yard line. With two options around the left end, PC moved the chains and set up a spectacular sweep by tailback Chris Yonce who scampered for 32 yards around the left end. Carson-Newman then held the Hose to four a fourth down field goal attempt by Brian Gornie. Though the kick was good, a Carson-Newman penalty for roughing the kicker gave PC the ball and a fresh set of downs on the Carson-Newman 10 yard line. On fourth and goal, Gornie pounded through the line for a touchdown, putting Presbyterian on the scoreboard and back in the game with 5:43 left in the half.

At halftime the Eagles enjoyed a 10-7 lead, but the Hose had gained momentum from the success of their last drive. Defensive tackles John Ory and Duane Thompson were plugging the holes and denying the Eagles any running room up the middle while Stephen Newton at strong safety and Chris Hamilton at free safety kept Eagle pass yardage to a minimum.

In the third quarter, Carson-Newman racked up another touchdown, but the Blue Hose retaliated. Near the end of the third quarter quarterback Sullivan handed off to Gornie around the left side for a sensational 28 yard touchdown run which kept Presbyterian in the game. With 2:51 to go in the third the score was Carson-Newman 17, Presbyterian 14.

On the Eagle's next possession, it was evident that the momentum of the game had shifted. On second down, Carson Newman's Morton scrambled for an eighteen yard gain, but was pummeled on the play and fumbled the ball on the Carson-Newman 45 yard line. After six plays and a first down, Gornie delivered another six points, and PC took the lead for the first time. Gornie's point after put Presbyterian ahead 21-17.

Unfortunately, the Hose seemed to lose their concentration and the momentum shifted once again. After a series of defensive battles which were enlivened by several fumbles, Presbyterian recovered the ball and quickly drove into field goal range. Held at the Carson-Newman 25 yard line on fourth down, Gornie was forced to attempt a 42 yarder. To the Blue Hose's dismay the kick veered wide left.

Carson-Newman took the ball on their own 25 yard line with 6:31 remaining in the game. On first down, Eagle quarterback Penland took to the air once again and connected with Cedric Cherry for a first down on 36 yard line. Penland threw the ball again and hit James for a big 34 yard gain. Eventually the Eagles would have a first down at the Presbyterian five yard line and score their last touchdown to go ahead 24-21.

Presbyterian's final drive provided disappointment to team members. A holding penalty on the kick left forced the Hose to start on their own 12 yard line. Sullivan was sacked twice and then threw incomplete on third down, leaving the Hose no choice but to punt out of the end zone. Carson-Newman took over on the PC 38 and the game was over.

Though the loss ended PC's streak, the Hose held the Eagle offense below their rushing average, allowing a mere 168 yards on the ground.

Key offensive linemen enabled Gornie (151 yd.) and Sullivan (59 yd.) to run the ball up the middle enroute to contributing the majority of PC's 278 rushing yards. Terrance Grant and Chris Yonce were also instrumental in the running game gaining 28 and 47 yards respectively. Center Chris McGaha and other members of the Blue Hose line blocked Eagle All-American nose guard Mellon so effectively that his impact on the game was virtually negligible.

Sullivan was 11 of 21 for 92 yards on the afternoon and connected with an array of Hose receivers including Vicki Vickie, Chris Thorpe, Kevin Lindler, Steve Gornie, and Chris Yonce.

Though the Hose were able to adjust their defensive strategy successfully, Coach John Perry admitted that the Hose had not anticipated such an attack. "They caught us a little by surprise since their game is usually 90% run," said Perry. "We hadn't seen a drop back pass in any of their games this year." Despite the absence of their starting quarterback, the Eagles still mustered 208 yards on 12 of 19 attempts.

"We have created a championship atmosphere," Perry said. "We're focusing on the championship in the opening of the season." With a 2-1 start which included this respectable performance against a nationally ranked team, the Blue Hose should be inspired to continue their efforts.

The Hose lost to Lenoir-Rhyne (28-35) on the road last week and play Wofford here in Clinton in the homecoming contest. "Our team spirit is high, and team unity is strong," said Perry. "Our confidence level and talent level will help us in the following games."

The Last Word: A newcomer's guide to PC Homecoming

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

It's that time of the year again, boys and girls. The time when all past Hose of Blue pay homage. The time to make the pilgrimage back to Clinton, USA. It's the time when the fountain will no doubt be overflowing with suds, when more than a handful of people on campus will know the alma mater, and when we'll see adults out at fraternity court without having to surrender our name and ID number. (Perhaps if we gather all the students, alumni, faculty, Clinton residents, and a couple drifters at the houses, we can outnumber the SLED agents.) That's right, it's Homecoming time. So what is PC Homecoming all about? That's what we're here to explain. Consider it a first-timer's guide to PC Homecoming.

"But Tommy and Leighton, what's the big deal with Homecoming? It's just a football game, right? Why make the drive all the way back just to see the game?" Oh, you poor lost souls. There's so much more to it. Alumni don't come back simply to visit PC. They also come to visit Clinton. They come to relax on the sun-drenched beaches and take in the cultural sights.

The football game is the main attraction. People start to reminisce when they walk in to the stadium and smell the fresh cut grass. They walk around with big, open eyes, taking in the sights and smells. The concession stand serves up cokes and hot dogs...if you're lucky, they'll slip you a corn nugget or two. Alumni go crazy for corn nuggets. You will no doubt see the Blue Hose, our proud mascot. You can't miss him, he's the wicked little Scottish bagpipe freak. He has a huge head. We found out (and a lot of people don't know this, so don't go telling any one) that when it came time to choose a mascot for the school, the two finalists were the Blue Hose, as we have him today, and a drunk, naked Irish guy. So, when you think about it, a guy in a skirt with a big head really isn't so bad. One tradition we're not proud of is the annual stadium fight. Just like a European soccer game. Our alumni take it upon themselves to be tough and stand up for "Ol' PC" and wind up picking fights with college-aged fans on the other side of the field. It's not a pretty sight.

Tommy and Leighton grill up more than satirical delights, as seen above in one of their afternoon expeditions to Whiteford's. Tomorrow, they will cheer Homecoming Queen candidate Chen-Lu on to victory.

Just when you think there couldn't possibly be more excitement, there is. What would Homecoming be without the glamour and glitz that a parade of beauties provides? That's why we like the halftime show. Alumni no doubt come back to see who will be bestowed the honor of Homecoming Queen. And if this in itself isn't enough, this year's fierce competition is rumored to have a late entry, and probable favorite for the title. CHEN-LU! Sources tell us that she will be in the competition, though we don't know which club sponsored her.

Let us take a moment here to break from the topic at hand and offer our personal unbiased editorial on the Chen-Lu saga. Chen-Lu entered the freshman presidential elections as an underdog. Most had never heard of her. Many didn't care. But Chen-Lu made people care. She brought life back into the elections with her slogans, "For the love of god, Vote Chen-Lu," and "Vote Chen-Lu, because she don't look like you." We are told that her campaign was managed by the same clever individual who told George Bush to pick Dan Quayle as his running mate. Perhaps her only fault was choice in running mate. Not enough people respected the political prowess of Sammy Davis, Jr. Since Mr. Davis, Jr. is no longer among the ranks of the living, she carried much of the campaign on her own shoulders. We'd just like to say, "Thanks Chen-Lu," and best of luck in the Homecoming Queen competition. Do it for PC. Do it for Sammy.

We hope this novella has offered some insight into the dark and mysterious world of PC Homecoming. Among the traditions we didn't tell you about in this article: the time an alumnus got his face caught in the wheel well of a Public Safety golf cart, PC's "video Homecoming" for incarcerated alumni, and "Leftovers From When You Graduated", the alumni program sponsored by GDH.

Additions, new buildings top college's development list

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

By the year 2000, the campus of Presbyterian College will be better equipped to serve the needs of the college community. The Board of Trustees has approved a long range plan that calls for almost $20 million dollars of expansion and development. To put that figure in perspective, consider that the new academic center costs about $5 million to build and equip. The next four to five years will bring many changes to the appearance of the school. Templeton Gymnasium will undergo an extensive expansion. Springs Campus Center will gain a workout room. A new residence hall will appear behind Barron and Grotnes Halls. The Development House will be remodeled and expanded. And finally, a restroom pavilion will be built on the intramural complex.

An addition to Templeton Gymnasium is the top priority for school officials, according to Ted Brown, the college's vice president for development. When Templeton was built, PC had no women's athletic teams. Since then, several women's teams have been established and the current facilities at Templeton are not adequate, Brown said. The addition plan calls for a team complex and sports medicine center to be constructed behind the existing building. The facility will include new locker rooms and offices for team coaches.

"We really launched the campaign at homecoming. At that time, we had about $355,000 already collected, and we pre-tablished.

In the area behind Barron and Grotnes Halls, a new residence hall is slated for construction. This project is also contingent on location of funds. "We are ready to go with all of these projects, all we need are the funds," said Zubrod. "Dr. Orr and I are going to make calls to people next week to solicit a donation to cover the cost of the new residence hall," said Brown. The estimated cost is between $1.5 and $1.8 million. The 88 bed dormitory will provide housing for male and female students.

The class of 1995 coordinated plans for the construction of a restroom pavilion to be located on the intramural complex. Last year's seniors were asked to make small donations to support this project. The cost of construction has been estimated at $38,000. Class participation was not great enough to cover the cost. "About 60% of the class participated, which is a pretty high number. If the whole class would have participated, the costs would have been covered. But, 60% is about what we expected," said Brown. "So now what we might do is go back and try to get the parents of the class of 1995 to donate the remaining costs," he continued. The new facility will provide restrooms, water fountains and drink machines for users of the intramural com-

Footing the bill...

The college's administration has established four buildings as priorities in physical plant development. The college is in the process of raising funds to pay for the new facilities, according to Ted Brown, PC's vice president for development.

Project

- Templeton Center locker facilities for women, additional office space for coaches
- Springs Campus Center weight/exercise facility
- New residence hall behind Barron, Grotnes Halls
- Restroom pavilion for Intramural Complex

Projected Costs

- $1.2 to 1.3 million
- $400,000
- $1.8 million
- $38,000

"When Templeton was built, it fit the school's needs perfectly. But since the addition of women's sports, things have been getting crowded in there," said Vice President for Finance Skip Zubrod. The addition will carry a price tag of around $1.2 to $1.3 million.

"Architectural plans for the addition are complete, and construction is contingent on the location of funding," said Zubrod. The college's financial development office is responsible for locating funds for the construction and college officials launched their fund raising cammented our need to the alumni," explained Brown. Brown anticipates sufficient funds will be raised by the end of this academic year. "The building could be in use by 1997," said Brown.

Brown says that his office is very close to having funds in place for an expansion of Springs Campus Center. "There's nothing in place yet, but we are talking to one individual who we feel might be willing to fund the construction," said Brown. The project, which will cost around $400,000, should not take long to complete after funding is es-

Taking the plunge...

Freshman Beth Cathey was tackled with hugs and cheers as she made her way to her new sisters of Zeta Tau Alpha last Sunday in Bid Day ceremonies in front of Neville Hall.

Over 100 women participated in the rush process, with 79 pledging into sororities, according to Alison Bishop, assistant dean of students.

POINT

Common areas should remain common— college should find permanent space for sororities

Students hoping to find a quiet place to study in M. and L. Brown Commons, Crossroads, or Chapman Conference Center last week were abruptly halted by the all too familiar "reserved" signs slapped across the locked doors of those facilities. The college's three sororities, forced to hold their rush parties in the cramped rooms, were also forced to turn away students needing the common areas to study and meet. It was a major inconvenience not only to the sororities who play the annual "musical buildings" game, but to anyone needing to gain access to the buildings their tuition and fee dollars pay for. Common space is common, not for private use over a five-day period.

The college urgently needs to address the problem of the lack of meeting space for clubs and organizations, particularly for the school's three sororities. If the college can provide adequate facilities for male Greek students, it also has the obligation to provide comparable permanent meeting space for female Greek students. What's fair is fair.

Parents deserve a "thank you" for moral, financial support

So often, parents this weekend are herded from one building to another, one event to another, that the few moments of quality time with their student end up being spent in quick snapshots on the front steps of Neville or a serious discussion about a low test grade. Before we know it, Sunday morning arrives and a mass exodus from PC occurs on Interstates 26 and 385.

However, before the last goodbyes are said and checks for spending money are slipped into our pockets, we should pause and give thanks to those who make our attendance here a reality.

Presbyterian College is not a cheap institution to attend by any means. For parents who pay even a fraction of the costs for their student to attend here, the sacrifice is a serious financial commitment and substantial portion of many family budgets. Think about it—how would you raise the thousands of dollars it costs to attend this school (not to mention the additional money required for clubs, books, transportation)?

Often, for a parent to hear a simple "thank you" can be repayment enough for many years of effort, sacrifice, and cheerleading.

Public television a cost-effective, valuable alternative to modern media

This summer, I had the privilege of interacting with South Carolina Educational Television and Radio. South Carolina's public television and radio network. It was a long and hot summer, due not to the elevated temperature outside ETV's studios, but to the verbal bruising public television and radio suffered at the wrath of a Republican majority in Congress. One of our nation's and state's most valuable assets, public broadcasting is now in serious jeopardy of falling victim to the budget axe of Congressional and South Carolina state government leaders. Indeed, SC ETV was forced to eliminate positions in its radio network in July due to decreased funding from the South Carolina General Assembly.

What caveat is being sent to our culture? In a society of multimedia conglomerates and commercial advertisements at virtually every corner, are we doing ourselves a favor by eliminating the only true non-commercial, objective news, education, and entertainment media source we have? In the age of the information superhighway, public television has pioneered valuable satellite and media technology and made it available for public use. Are we comfortable leaving control of the information superhighway to those who control it for their own benefit?

Conservative leaders like Ralph Reid, executive director of the Christian Coalition, have presented public television as a costly and financially burdensome program to maintain. Public television provides opportunities for learning, sharing, and free expression like no other forum in our society today, costing South Carolinians roughly $1.50 per person, per year. How much is your home cable bill each year? For the average American family, cable costs over $500 yearly, according to Corporation for Public Broadcasting research. And public broadcasting unquestionably offers more intellectually stimulating alternatives to much of what is found on cable today.

For rural and poor families in South Carolina, public television is the only venue available for cultural and instructional programming. Do we not have an obligation to provide those citizens with the same learning and entertainment opportunities urban citizens have? With a low annual cost to taxpayers and availability in over 90% of American homes, public television is our most valuable and cost-effective resource for communication.

Parents are the reason for Parents' Weekend

As everyone settles in from Fall Break and Women's Rush, it is time to turn our attention to another special event at Presbyterian College—Parents' Weekend. This is sure to be a great weekend to stay on campus.

During the past four years, I have learned the value of my parents. They are the ones who get the calls at 11:30 at night when I feel like I might not do as well on an exam as I had hoped. It is our parents who encourage that extra studying time which eventually leads to a "B" on that test instead

My Turn
Gray Lesesne

Perhaps the most redeeming quality of public broadcasting is its non-commercial, non-violent, self-esteem building programming for children. My generation was raised on programs like "Sesame Street," "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood," and "3-2-1 Contact." I fear for future families who may have no alternative to media moguls like Disney, Oprah Winfrey, or Ted Turner to provide quality programs to supplement their children's development.

Conservatives have also illogically waved the red flag of "family values" against public broadcasting. It seems ironic that leaders like Reid wish to eliminate broadcasting that advocates the strengthening of children and families through concepts like sharing, friendship, learning, and acceptance without violence or fifteen minutes of commercial interruption. Studies have shown that children who watch programs like "Sesame Street" are more prepared for schoolwork when they enter the first grade. Providing quality programs for children and families is family values, Mr. Reid.

Public broadcasting belongs to each of us. We paid for it and it is something we all have as a common resource. In an era of discord, separation, and focus on group rights, is it a wise move to eliminate things like public television that bring our society together? Politicians like Reid thought public broadcasting would be an easy target for media attention. But the outpouring of support from American families (84% of which have indicated their support for continued or increased Congressional funding of public broadcasting, according to a recent Gallup poll) and moderate political leaders have, for the time, prevented a major cultural loss.

But public television and radio will belong to each of us only as long as we support it. I encourage you to write your Congressional and state government representatives in continued support of a resource which has provided countless opportunities for Americans of all backgrounds.

PC student takes top honors at camp

by Josh Hornor
Staff Writer

Imagine it, upon leaving college, your first employment opportunity involved taking full responsibility of 44 people and just over $10 million worth of equipment. As a sophomore, PC student Welsh Conder has already afforded himself the opportunity to do just that. Conder attended Camp Challenge for six weeks out of his summer. The camp, based in Fort Knox, Kentucky, is designed to give ROTC students the chance to receive training in soldiering skills and leadership dimensions that they missed during the school year. But more importantly, it is a chance for many of those students to receive college scholarships.

To assume that these scholarships are plentiful would be misleading. There are over 3,000 students from across the country attending Camp Challenge, and competition is fierce. Most of the scholarships are roughly $2,000 in value, and a few are much larger. One of these is the Gauntlett Award.

The recipient of this award must have outstanding scores in such areas as land navigation, rifle marksmanship, physical fitness, and leadership ability. All of these skills are rated according to assigned numerical values and compiled into what is known as the student potential index, or S.P.I.

According to PC's Capt. Mike Leonhardt, "The S.P.I. is based on a whole person concept, every aspect is given a numerical value, grades do not stand alone."

A student needs to score at least a 100 out of a possible 160 to be eligible for a scholarship. Conder scored a 152, and was awarded with the camp's only Gauntlett award. He received $12,000 towards school, and in response, PC offered to pay the difference for the remainder of Conder's education, granting him a full scholarship. "I figured he would get about two thousand dollars. I was floored when I heard he got twelve," said Leonhardt.

But Conder did not stop there. He walked away with an award for outstanding cadet of the company and was selected out of his entire regiment to receive the Military Order of World Wars, Capt. John C. Rodgers, one of Conder's evaluators, expressed nothing but admiration. "Unmistakably the best cadet leader in the platoon. Clearly unlimited potential. Displayed qualities of an officer not seen in cadets. A tremendous asset to any program," he said.

Conder, a biology major, originally came to PC for soccer and later joined the college's ROTC department. He names his father, a first sergeant in the National Guard, as being a large influence on his desire to get involved in the military. Conder finds the discipline gained in the ROTC to be the most rewarding factor.

"You have to stay motivated. You always have to have a reason to be there, or it's not worth it," said Conder.

Conder takes his military career seriously, having recently contracted with the Army for four years of active duty. "I wouldn't mind going overseas my first year. My goal is to get in and eventually be in the National Guard," he said. His dedication is reflected in his ROTC career, as well.

"Most people think it's a bunch of people who don't have anything to do after college, but it's really a four or five year commitment," Conder said. Leonhardt is clearly impressed by Conder's determination. "Welsh is a natural leader. He made first sergeant on his leadership abilities alone, and he's being chartered for bigger and better things."

Development's Maxon enjoys on, off campus activities

by Gray Lesesne
Editor-in-Chief

I frequent lunchtime diners in GPH or students who receive lots of FedEx packages from home will no doubt recognize the friendly face and joking laugh of June Maxon, a receptionist in the PC development office. Maxon, who has worked at the college for eight years, greets newcomers, PC students, and staff alike at the entrance to PC's Development House. Located across the street from Smith Administration Building. From her desk, she has a prime view of the college's front plaza and many of the buildings her office helped to create.

"On a typical day, I'll answer phones, greet guests, prepare things for Ed Campbell (director of major gifts) and other people here in the development office, and handle all of the incoming Federal Express packages," Maxon said. On occasion, students with packages will come to her to ship them out, but Maxon can't handle those requests, she said. "I wish I could, but I don't get paid like Federal Express workers," she joked.

"I love working at PC because of the people I work with and the fact that I get to be around students. PC is great because of its people, its college atmosphere, and opportunities for cultural activities," she said.

Last fall, Maxon was notably absent from the campus as she recovered from a major battle with breast cancer. "Last August, I found a lump in my breast, which was removed last October 12. It was a malignant tumor. I was given the option of chemotherapy and radiation just to ensure there was no more cancer, and I opted to go ahead with the treatments. During the whole ordeal, I was not afraid of dying because we're never promised tomorrow. I think I handled it well, even though the chemotherapy was rough. The only time I cried was when I began to lose my hair. I got a wig, but I soon shed it after I started wearing it," she said.

"Before breast cancer, I took my friendships seriously, but I thought of material things being important, too. Now, those material things are not a priority in my life. I visit my friends and sick people more. Cancer also increased my faith. It made me a stronger Christian and a stronger person. It pulled our family closer together. Cancer changes your whole life around," said Maxon, who has now been given a "clean bill of health," she reported.

Off campus, Maxon is just as lively as she is at work. "On a typical weekend, you'll see me at a football game or shopping. I also like to hike, cook, sew, and waterski, although I can barely stay on the skis," she said. Maxon is also a frequent traveler, having made recent pleasure trips to Puerto Rico, Maine, Washington, Texas, California, and New England. She has also made several trips to see her sister who lives in Costa Rica.

Maxon resides in Laurens with husband Jim who works as a consultant for Greenville-based Fluor-Daniel. She met her husband in high school, and their high school romance blossomed into a 30-year marriage after College honors four alumni during homecoming festivities

Four Presbyterian College graduates were honored Sept. 30 at the college's alumni awards program. Receiving the college's Alumni Gold Award was Dr. Paul Laverne Walker of Smyrna, Ga., a 1953 graduate. Walker has developed an extensive television and radio ministry and is the pastor of Atlanta's Mt. Paran Church of God.

Phillip M. Fleming '79 was honored as the college's outstanding young alumnus. Fleming, of Columbia, S.C., serves as senior regional organ procurement coordinator for the South Carolina Organ Procurement Agency. His efforts have more than doubled the donations to the agency.

Georgia Bee Blakely Thomason '34 of Clinton, S.C. was presented the college's Alumni Service award. Thomason, a former school teacher, has established two scholarships for athletes and has spent extensive time working on behalf of the college's alumni association.

Anthony Rudolph Lane '71 received the college's "Dum Vivimus Servimus" award for exemplary service in the tradition of the college's motto. Lane is associated with Habitat for Humanity, Trinity United Methodist Church in Atlanta, Ga., and other charitable and cultural activities in Atlanta.

Three PC students participating in special Christian education program in England

Three PC students have arrived in Birmingham, England, for a fall semester program at the Christian education cluster of British colleges.

Lisa Lawrence, a junior from Iva, S.C., joins seniors Ellen Dunn of Easley, S.C., and Sandy Flowers of Darlington, S.C., for a semester of study at Westhill College.

These religion-Christian education majors will pioneer in a program enabling them to study theology, church education, and other topics at Westhill College," said Dr. Jack Presseau, professor of religion, who spent a week in Birmingham in May preparing arrangements for the program.

All three PC students spent the summer serving churches in South Carolina. Lawrence worked as the youth ministry intern at First Presbyterian Church in Anderson, Dunn was the church educator intern at First Presbyterian Church in Clinton, and Flowers served as the youth educator intern at Kellytown Baptist Church in Hartsville.

Fouse takes time to serve to college, community

by Beth Threadgill
Staff Writer

To Jennifer Fouse, it is nothing new to donate her time to charitable service. Fouse, a senior from Great Falls, SC, is the Student Volunteer Services intern this year. In high school, Jennifer participated in student government as her class president. She has also been involved in many other volunteer programs at PC, including Laurens Safe Home, Bell Street Big Sisters, Martha Denny Outreach, and the Good Shepherd Medical Clinic. Last year Fouse organized Olympic Town for Special Olympic games held on campus.

Fouse is also involved in many other organizations on campus. She is a member of SGA, Alpha Delta Pi, STAC, the Presbyterian College Church Leadership Program, and Student Fellowship Choir. In addition, she serves as president of Omicron Delta Kappa.

Fouse finds time for serious academic work as well. "I majored in sociology because I am fascinated with studying groups of people. It helps me to get along better with different groups of people when I understand them better," she said. She spent the fall semester of her junior year in China. "I went for the adventure," Fouse said.

Fouse has assumed a great deal of responsibility as SVS intern. "I am a liaison between Chon Glover and the 43 student coordinators," said Fouse. "I am excited about having so many opportunities to serve this year," she said. "My goal is to visit all the programs."

As SVS intern, Fouse works two to three hours a day in the SVS office. She sends volunteer lists and transportation schedules to the student coordinators and offers moral support and encouragement to the volunteers and coordinators. She also files notices sent out by coordinators to SVS programs, and Laura Jacobs will be in charge of the SVS newsletter. Both jobs had previously been the responsibility of the SVS intern.

"Jennifer's enthusiasm is contagious and that motivates both me and the coordinators," said Chon Glover, director of the college's Student Volunteer Services programs. "She is exactly what SVS needs. She is a hard worker and a very creative person."

"The opportunities PC has given me to grow in my leadership abilities is incredible. At a larger school, one could expect to be involved in just a few organizations, but here, it's easy to become involved in a lot of activities," she said.

After graduation from PC, Fouse plans to apply for an internship in campus ministry. At many larger universities, each denomination has a minister who works with Christian groups, Fouse said. As an intern for a Presbyterian minister at a larger school, she could help organize meetings and plan events for a Presbyterian group similar to Westminster Fellowship. "Eventually, I'd like to go to seminary or become a physical therapist. Those might not seem related, but I think they're both important as a means to help others," said Fouse.

Another project in the works is an addition to the college's development house, located across the street from Smith Administration Building, adjacent to Mayes Cottage. The office of financial development and the office of alumni affairs will be consolidated, according to Brown. The addition to the development house will provide office space for the alumni affairs staff. The ultimate goal is to create an Alumni House, which will house development and alumni affairs and provide a place for returning alumni to congregate on campus, Brown said. This project is still in its first stages and is a relatively low priority. "After we get some of our other big projects out of the way, we will begin to pursue this addition more seriously," said Brown.

With so many projects looming, one might think that Zubrod and Brown would be intimidated by the tasks ahead. But, they both remain confident in the college's ability to raise the funds necessary for physical expansion. "The nature of private higher education these days is full-tilt fundraising. The alumni and friends of the college are all intensely loyal. All of our financial needs will be met. It just takes patience," said Brown.

"It's very exciting to have so many projects in the works. Since I have been at PC, we have built six or seven new buildings and renovated three or four. There's always work to be done. There's always something that can be improved," said Zubrod.

Blue Hose football end "hard luck" with 13-7 victory

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Sports Editor

Last Monday's edition of The State newspaper honored Presbyterian's Blue Hose with The Hard Luck Award, which was bestowed upon the Hose because they had lost four straight games by a total of only 14 points. Though head coach John Perry and the rest of the Hose would probably have preferred to remain unrecognized for such an award, none can deny that the Hose had come away disappointed for four consecutive weeks. After rolling to a 2-0 start, the Hose lost a heartbreaker to SAC powerhouse Carson-Newman by a score of 24-21. Although the Eagles have dominated conference play for the last several years, the Hose matched their performance and almost upset the #14 team in NCAA Division II.

Unfortunately, that narrow defeat was the tip of the slippery iceberg which the Hose suddenly found themselves approaching. Over the course of the next three weeks, the Hose fell prey to SAC foe Lenoir-Rhyne (35-28), intrastate rival Wofford College (21-20), and conference opponent Catawba (31-28).

The battle against the Terriers of Wofford was the feature event of the Homecoming weekend, yet it proved to be quite a frustrating outing for the favored Blue Hose. After having upset the Terriers last season in Spartanburg, the Presbyterian squad hoped to dash their efforts for revenge in front of the capacity home crowd. Wofford's powerful backfield proved to be too strong for the Hose, however, as they tallied 320 yards on the ground and defeated PC 21-20.

"The wishbone offense is designed to be a ball control offense and they certainly executed well," Coach Perry said of the Terriers. Wofford did manage to eat over 35 minutes of the clock, leaving the Blue Hose defense exhausted and the offense frustrated. During their 24:34 time of possession, the Hose managed a mere 58 yards in the air and 186 on the ground. The narrow margin of the final score revealed, however, that the outcome of this contest was determined by more than the big offensive categories.

Unfortunately, turnovers spelled defeat for the Hose. Ultimately, the Hose fumbled the ball five times, three of which were recovered by Wofford. A fumble on the open ing kickoff gave the Terriers the ball on the PC 30 yard line, and eight plays later Wofford pounded across the chalk into the endzone to put the first points on the board. A series, which begins in the red zone and yields a score so quickly greatly influences the tone of the entire game.

"We had to battle out of a hole from the beginning, and though we came back we ran out of time at the end," said Perry.

Early in the second quarter, the Hose got on the board when quarterback Randy Sullivan danced into the endzone from 26 yards out, but Brian Gornie's PAT was blocked by the Terriers and so the score remained 7-6 in favor of Wofford. With about two minutes left in the half, the Terriers tallied another seven off of a seven yard run by fullback Tim Rayborn and a shot between the sticks by place kicker Ashley Mills.

The Hose lit up the scoreboard again on their first series of the second half. Following an interception by Tony Davis, PC launched their attack from the Wofford 33 yard line. Less than two minutes later, senior fullback Steve Gornie rambled four yards across the left end for six and then caught a pass to complete the two point conversion.

After receiving the kickoff, the Terriers moved the chains once before turning the ball to Salisbury to face the Indians of Catawba College, who had not beaten the Hose on their home field since 1973. Much to the dismay of the Hose, the Indians were able to break that record and end their 10-game home losing streak by defeating the Hose 31-28. Although PC marched 88 yards for a TD after the opening kickoff and led 21-14 at the half, Catawba scored ten unanswered points in the third quarter and then held the Hose to one final touchdown after their final score.

Statistically, the game was a battle of almost evenly matched opponents, time of possession was virtually the same as was total offense (417 yds. for PC, 430 yds. for Catawba).

"The difference was a couple of little key executions here and there," said Coach Perry. "This was another tough loss."

The PC defense was led by freshman linebacker Jeremy Mauldin who tallied 12 tackles and senior linebacker Antonio Merriweather who made 9 tackles, 4 for a loss. Free safety Chris Hamilton notched 8 stops and senior defensive tackle John Ory recorded 7 tackles.

Offensively, fullback Steve Gornie led all rushers with 129 yards and 2 touchdowns. Quarterback Randy Sullivan completed 10 of 15 attempts for 127 yards and Chris Smith was accurate on 5 of 11 for 124 yards and 2 TDs. Senior wideout Kevin Lindler led Blue Hose receivers with 5 catches for 86 yards.

After Merriweather recovered a Catawba fumble, the Hose marched 29 yards in 21 seconds to make the score 28-31. An onside kick almost returned the ball to the Hose, but the Indians managed to fall on it and then run out the clock.

On October 14th, the Hose finally ended their losing streak with a 13-7 home victory over SAC foe Elon College. Again, Gornie led the ground attack with 105 yards on 25 carries and Sullivan passed for 130 yards and 1 touchdown. Freshman wideout Ben Power was on the receiving end of the 14 yard touchdown pass.

The margin of victory, however, was provided by sophomore placekicker Christopher Kinnitt. In the first quarter, Kinnitt split the uprights with a 34 yard field goal to give the Hose a 10-7 advantage; then in the fourth quarter, he booted a 26 yarder to reinforce the Blue Hose lead to 13-7.

Despite tough losses, women's soccer team remains focused

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

One of the most difficult aspects of playing a sport or pursuing any goal that one seeks is remaining focused, even in the face of disappointment. The Presbyterian women's soccer team began their season so strongly that it seemed nothing could stand in their way. Unfortunately, one of PC's most challenging SAC competitors did.

Nationally ranked Elon came to visit the Blue Hose on a dreary Saturday afternoon and proceeded to shut the Lady Hose out by a score of 4-0. Just two days later, the team traveled to Jacksonville, Florida to face Barry University, a program which is ranked fifth nationally, and were held scoreless again, 6-0.

Despite the tough losses to these two outstanding teams, the Blue Hose remained focused and won four out of their next five contests, in three of those matches, the Hose did not allow any goals. The victories included a 9-0 crushing of Newberry College in which Diane Hancock scored two goals, Carly Peterson recorded two assists and one goal, and Emily Campbell chipped in one assist and two goals.

The Lady Hose went on to roll past Lenoir-Rhyne and Mars Hill before facing Quincey, the team which had knocked them out of the national tournament last season. As expected, the emotional intensity of the contest was great, but unfortunately the ball simply would not bounce as the Hose would have hoped. The puzzling dilemma about a soccer game is that often a team can win on the field but come up short on the scoreboard, as was the case in this battle.

The Blue Hose lost the game 1-3 but had three times as many shots on goal as Quincey did. The loss was especially aggravating because the Lady Hose had hoped to avenge their defeat from last year. "It was tough losing to Quincey," said senior captain Carey Bailey. "We wanted to win that game a lot, and we played really well. The shots just wouldn't go for us."

One dazzling shot did find the net for the Lady Hose. Sophomore Brooke Wright, who is returning from a hip injury, knocked in a diving head shot on an assist from Linda Becker. In addition to her spectacular shot, Wright was named to the All-Tournament team as was senior Liz Roe who has emerged as one of the Hose's defensive strongholds this year.

PC finished the weekend tournament in St. Louis by defeating the University of Marymount at St. Louis (MSL) 2-1. Bailey recorded one of the two goals and then provided the pass to Rebecca Hardman who scored the other goal.

Depth of men's soccer squad key to team success

by John Scott
Staff Writer

With over half of their matches completed, the Presbyterian men's soccer team is enjoying a turnaround from last year's disappointing season and performing like the Ralph Polson teams of old.

Led by Chris Napier, Jimmy May, Todd Anderson, Tyler Boulware, and Stefan Svards, the Hose have outscored their opponents 27-14 in eleven matches.

The Blue Hose attack, however, is not limited to their offensive onslaught. Senior Brian Blackwelder is outstanding at sweeper and juniors Clint Galloway and Kevin Smith lead a defense which relentlessly hounds opposing scorers. Players like forward Bryan Ridgely and David Doré also provide a key ingredient for the Hose success. In fact, almost every player is able to contribute in the majority of the Blue Hose contests, thus verifying the assertion that this squad is one of the deepest in recent history.

"It's nice to be able to play everyone," stated Coach Ralph Polson. "We have freshman coming out and contributing early and it gives them a lot of experience and confidence." With twenty-three capable players, the pressure on the starters is significantly reduced.

On Sunday, October 1, Presbyterian faced a new nemesis in the University of South Carolina, a division one school with a large and highly skilled team. Despite the distinct advantages which often set a state-supported university program apart from a small independent program, the Hose "anticipated giving them a good match," said Coach Polson.

In the first period, the Blue Hose took three shots on goal, none of which were successful, and allowed three shots, one of which proved to be accurate and put Presbyterian behind 1-0 at the half.

After an impressive first half, the Blue Hose made some fatal errors in the second period which ultimately cost them the game. A Gamecock penalty kick and a free kick, awarded because of two Presbyterian personal fouls, put USC ahead 3-0 after only five minutes of the second half. The Cocks' stingy defense stifled the Hose offensive attack and enabled USC to post a 4-0 victory.

The Hose returned to Division II play on Saturday, October 7 at Lenoir-Rhyne, and though a 2-1 victory may sound deceptively close, the Hose dominated the game allowing only three shots on goal while attempting 21.

At the half, the Hose trailed 2-1, but the deficit was quickly erased as junior Clint Galloway punched in the tying goal. In the closing minutes, freshman John King scored the winning goal off a Chris Napier assist.

On October 8 the Hose traveled to Newberry to face the rather inexperienced Indian team which is in their first season of intercollegiate play. Perhaps overconfident after their two quick goals by Tyler Boulware and Jimmy May, the Hose allowed the Indians to tie the score at two apiece just before the half.

Presbyterian, however, dominated most of the second period. Bryan Ridgely broke the tie with a goal off of an assist by Doré. Later, Doré would again pass down the field to Tyler Boulware who put the Hose up 4-2. Finally senior Chris Napier found the back of the net and boosted the lead to 5-2. Newberry scored on a desperation attempt in the closing minutes of the second half, leaving the final score at 5-3.

On October 11, the Hose, in a match against Mars Hill, "came out and played what I thought was one of our best games all year," commented Coach Polson. "We were mentally focused."

In the first half Jimmy May and Tyler Boulware tallied goals to give PC a 2-0 advantage. Ridgely, Napier, and Svards added goals in the second half to increase the Hose lead to 5-0. The final score, in what could be dubbed as PC's most impressive performance thus far, was 5-1.

The Blue Hose fell to conference foe Catawba last Saturday. Despite their offensive ability, the Hose could muster only one goal (scored by junior Scott Placid) while allowing the Indians to score four.

Upcoming action for the Hose includes Wingate College on October 21. With added depth and a distinctly different attitude, the Blue Hose of 1995 are looking forward to an opportunity to claim the SAC championship.

"If we come out to play then I don't think there's a team in the conference that can beat us," said Polson, "but we have our work cut out for us."

Lady Hose volleyball team ranked second in conference

by Ellison Manley
Staff Writer

With two-thirds of their season completed, the Lady Blue Hose volleyball team has compiled an impressive record of 20-5 and stands alone at second place in the South Atlantic Conference with a conference record of 6-2.

The Blue Hose entered the second midseason SAC tournament last weekend after an impressive victory over the Mars Hill College Lady Lions. According to head coach Allen Ansley, the match was "the best we've played as a team all season." They defeated Mars Hill in three straight, 15-13, 15-4, 15-10. Sophomore Beth Mann led the team in digs with 17. Mann has seen play as a starter in both of her years as a Blue Hose.

"Beth came in for us last year and started even though we usually start up perclassman. This year she has had to step up and be reliable as one of our primary hitters," said coach Ansley of the Due West native.

Junior Watoma Williams and senior Brooke Fleming aided the team with 17 kills each. Sophomore Jenny Frieling had 42 assists and continues to lead the team from the setter position. The Blue Hose have experimented with a two-setter rotation utilizing freshman Jewell Sanders to accompany Frieling, and Coach Ansley has not abandoned that option for the future.

In another key conference match, the Lady Blue Hose defeated Elon College on October 2. The Hose were led by Williams with 26 kills and Fleming with 19 digs. The match went to four games with the Blue Hose pulling it out 16-14, 8-15, 4-15, 15-8, 15-11.

Over fall break, the team travelled to Jacksonville, FL for the SAC-Sunshine State Clash. PC faced two region opponents in the University of North Florida and the University of Tampa. Both of these teams went to the NCAA tournament last year, and North Florida is currently ranked twelfth in the nation. Both games were losses for the Blue Hose, but the experience was helpful in preparing the team to face tough nationally-ranked teams.

Last weekend was crucial for the Lady Blue Hose as they travelled to Elon College for the midseason tournament. The weekend proved to be a pivotal point in determining SAC standings and predicting post-season outcomes. On Friday, the Lady Hose defeated Mars Hill in a grueling five game match (15-7, 15-6, 13-15, 12-15, 15-4) and then Gardner-Webb in three games (15-8, 15-8, 15-8). On Saturday, the Hose crushed Carson-Newman (15-8, 15-8, 15-13) and then downed Catawba in an exhausting match. After falling behind two games to one, the Hose battled back and ultimately claimed the victory over the Indians 3-2 (16-14, 7-15, 11-15, 15-6, 15-10).

The Lady Hose will play their final home regular season match on Wednesday, October 25, at 7:00 PM.

The Last Word: A free analysis on The Juice's "Trial of the Century"

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

"We, the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant, Orenthal James Simpson, not guilty of the crime of murder..."

You all heard the words that fateful Tuesday. The campus paused for a moment and directed its attention toward TV sets and radios, ready to hear the words that have been a year in the making. Regardless of your own thoughts about his guilt or innocence, you were probably still a little surprised to hear the acquittal of O. J. Simpson. But now that all is said and done, the legal analysts and journalists are left to debate the subtleties of the trial. Still, many questions remain in the minds of the average American. So here we are, to answer all the questions and explain what the newly freed Orenthal J. will be doing.

First, our thoughts on the verdict. A lot of folks on TV have been using big terms like "race card" and "DNA" to explain why the prosecution's case collapsed. Now, we're not the brightest guys on Earth. We don't really know what those words mean, but we're pretty sure we've used race cards playing Uno before. To be perfectly honest, for about the first six months of the trial, we couldn't figure out why they kept talking about a "race car." The man drove a Bronco, for crying out loud! We had those lawyers pegged as idiots for a while. Hadn't they seen that tape of the highway chase?

Spending some quality time with the drivers in Georgia Hall, it is painfully obvious that Tommy and Leighton have a lot of free time on their hands. They are currently attempting to enlist in the FBI's Witness Protection Program.

A Bronco is no race car. But, all that aside, let's get down to the heart of the matter. It is apparent to us that the man was acquitted because his name is "Orenthal." Plain and simple. There you have it. There's a federal law which says that there must be at least one person in the public whose name sounds really goofy and starts with the letters "Or." Since Orville Redenbacher passed away a few weeks ago, and sorry, Uncle Ken, but last names don't count, it became the responsibility of Orenthal Simpson to fill that gap.

A lot of folks are wondering what Orenthal J. will be doing now that he's back out in public. Will he do commercials again? Will he be in more movies? Well, we hate to break it to you, but he probably won't. Not for a while at least.

Rumor has it, though, that we could be seeing some of O.J. around these parts. See, The Blue Stocking has learned that Orenthal J. has turned himself in to an academic. In fact, we've heard that next semester, O.J. Simpson will join the faculty of Presbyterian College as Visiting Professor for Mathematics. Sources tell us he'll be teaching remedial math. The administration is still working on the course titles, but here's what we've heard he'll be offering: "Basic Math with time to kill!" and "Trigonometry never killed anybody, did it?" There is also the chance that he'll be lecturing at a few CEP's, six to be exact, directed mainly towards those students, such as ourselves, that missed six consecutive Tuesdays at 11 in order to follow the O.J. trial.

But alas, we admit that we're going to miss a lot of this hoopla. We'll be taking down our pin up of Marcia Clark with her legal briefs from the bathroom wall, and sure, we'll probably watch Pulp Fiction again but, it won't be the same seeing Johnny Cochran lookalikes blowing people's heads off. There may soon be a day when we turn on the TV and the channel isn't locked on to E or CNN, and there may come a time when we can pay off our 1-900 number phone bills for "You make the call." O.J. viewer response surveys. We'll find a way to piece together our somewhat obsessive lives. Maybe that Psychic Hotline has something to offer in the way of cultural enrichment.

So O.J. now heads out into the public eye. He'll probably start out with a book, maybe a few speeches, and perhaps even seek political office. Just watch out, Juice, for that David Duke-Mark Furman ticket in '96. So sorry that society inconvenienced you for a year. I guess we got carried away with that whole "put guilty people behind bars" thing. In our Hertz...we think we know who did it.

SVS programs expand to reform school, one-time activities

New student volunteer programs expand opportunities for service

by Laura Jacobs
Staff Writer

For thirty years, Student Volunteer Services of PC has been providing love to children and adults in the Clinton community and beyond, and with two new programs this year, that contribution continues to grow and to involve more of the student body.

At Willow Lane, a reform school in Columbia, this contribution takes the form of two Saturdays per month. On these days, students from PC travel with coordinators Melissa Jane Taylor and Amanda Smith to Columbia to spend time with teenaged offenders who are housed at Willow Lanes.

"The way I see it, the basic emotional need of every human being is love, and that's what so many of these kids have never had," said Chaplain Al Brodie, who assists with the coordination of the program.

According to Taylor, a freshman majoring in German from Lewisburg, West Virginia, the idea for an SVS program to help young offenders occurred to her during a mini retreat to Willow Lanes with PC Chaplain Greg Henley.

"Basically, the group decided something needed to be done. We thought it would be best to do it through SVS. A subcommittee came up with a proposal for SVS, and Amanda and I took on the responsibility of coordinating it," said Taylor.

The rest is history, as the SVS Department of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) was formed as a program to expose kids who, according to Brodie, are "committed by the family and circuit courts of the state" for breaking their probations from crimes such as and one female go each time and that we have four volunteers of each sex to go with us. We arrange things with the van and give the volunteers an idea of what to expect. There are strict rules at DJJ and a lot of emotional things that can happen from being exposed to the environment. We tell people what they should expect to see."

truancy and incorrigibility. "I think it's really important because the kids have no role models," said Taylor. "It is an opportunity for the kids to escape the prison while still being there. They need support and attention."

The first of its type for SVS, the college affiliation is also a first for Willow Lanes. "This is the first program of this kind, and it has so much potential from an institutional standpoint and a community standpoint," said Brodie. "Courts all over the state are looking for people to be mentors, ninety percent of these kids are from broken homes and have never really had relationships," she said.

Taylor's responsibilities as co-coordinator include "making sure that one male

The experience has certainly been an emotional one for Kevin Cartee, a PC sophomore and regular DJJ volunteer who said, "I think it's a good program to be involved with because it helps us to realize that [the residents of Willow Lanes] are human beings, too, even though they have committed crimes. It gives us an opportunity to show compassion."

"We go in and talk with the kids," said Taylor. "We play cards and goof around. Often the kids want to show you what they know how to do. It gives me a sense that I've helped someone out. By seeing the kids, I realize how lucky my life has been. It's a way to understand what their lives are like and to bring us back to reality. For me it's just a very rewarding experience, and I would encourage everyone to try it at least once."

For those busy students who don't have time for a weekly volunteering experience similar to that at DJJ, but do want to "try it at least once," PC student Phillip Barron has helped to create a brand new SVS program called One-Shots. These one-shot opportunities are meant to "involve people who can't fit an SVS project into their weekly schedule," according to Barron.

Jennifer Fouse, the SVS intern for this year, said, "One-Shots is a unique opportunity because the students who are too busy to be involved with weekly SVS can do it one time. I think the idea for the program came up at our SVS retreat. It was created to alleviate a lot of my responsibility; Phillip does a lot of coordinating."

Barron said students should "look for an opportunity to serve. We've had sign-up booths and posters, but we're trying to do as little paper campaigning as possible. I'm just excited that Chon [Glover] let me do it. I'm glad there's something new for everybody. Ideally this will involve more of the campus."

With the total number of SVS programs at thirty-three now, there are plenty of opportunities for the campus to be involved. DJJ and One-Shots are just two of the many worthwhile projects designed to use the talents and service-oriented spirits of the students of PC. Dum vivimus servimus: While we live, we serve.

The Carnival included over 20 activities and booths sponsored by clubs, organizations, fraternities, and sororities.

The First Annual SGA-President's Council Halloween Carnival was held on October 31 in the Springs gym for the youth of Laurens County, with the participation of many campus organizations and in conjunction with SVS and SUB.

"You just can't beat a day with kids and legos," said junior Windham Pridgen. Senior Paige Bell agreed. "We were having fun before the kids even got there," she said.

The carnival was performed for the children from SVS's Outreach programs, as well as for the children of the faculty, staff, and administration.

"This was a great idea! It gave us a chance to give to the school and the community while having some fun," said senior Brent McGee.

"The Halloween Fair was a wonderful success! It was great to see all of the students working together for an exciting and beneficial cause," said senior Beth Boyett. "It is really great to see all the organizations come together and have fun!" said SGA president Leigh Davis.

POINT

College's overnight visitation policy needs review and reconsideration

According to a report by former Blue Stocking editors Charles Fant and Edward Lee, in the fall of 1974, after extensive lobbying from the student body, the College's Board of Trustees finally approved a trial plan allowing for initial opposite sex dorm visitation among PC students. Then college president Marc C. Weersing opposed the plan, offering one of the Ten Commandments as his reasoning: Thou shalt not commit adultery. Marian Hill, former dean of women, warned students lobbying the administration, "I think you're pushing it too far, too fast."

Some twenty-one years later, the College's dorm visitation policy, although more moderate, is still behind the times. Students openly violate the policy and create extensive noise by knocking on the first floor doors of opposite sex dormitories after midnight on weeknights and after 2 a.m. on weekends. Resident assistants do not enforce discreet policy violations, and with good reason—the policy is illogical and treats those who are expected to be adults like children.

Do college officials believe that those moral wrongs supposedly prevented by the prohibition of overnight visitation do not occur during visitation hours? Is the visitation policy designed to protect students, particularly female students, from invasions of privacy? Each dormitory room already comes equipped with a lock, and resident assistants have the power to remove disturbing visitors from their dorms.

Are PC officials concerned with a lack of morality among the very students they are responsible for in the classroom? Notably missing from the Honor Code is any reference to overnight visitation.

Perhaps the true motivating factor behind the current visitation policy is the College's connection to the Presbyterian (USA) Church—a connection that is very valuable and essential to this college's well-being and status as a leading liberal arts institution. The Presbyterian (USA) Church has been squeamish on other issues regarding sexuality on the PC campus, including the distribution of condoms and the establishment of a human sexuality course as a psychology elective. While PC's connection to the church is essential, the College has an obligation to avoid imposing the church's morality on adults who may hold other beliefs.

The ideal PC student is supposed to be an independent thinker, one who is able to draw from the numerous resources that surround him and make a prepared, confident decision in any matter. For the college to make moral decisions for its students without their consent undermines a fundamental principle of a PC education.

The current visitation policy treats PC students like children with a curfew. We are adults who must make up our own minds in order to become the leaders and liberated persons this College desires us to be. The Blue Stocking wholeheartedly calls for a close examination and revision of the College's visitation policy, with the consideration that PC students are adults capable of their own moral decisions.

Given other financial demands, public television funding not a priority

Having read Gray Lesesne's column concerning public television in the last issue, I find it necessary to respond to some of the points he raises in defense of continued government support of such programs. The author initially refers to the "verbal bruising" public television has taken at the "wrath" of a Republican majority in Washington. This is a gross misrepresentation of the debate. The Republican position concerning public broadcasting is not anti-public broadcasting. Republican lawmakers have, by in large, given lavish praise to the programs offered by public broadcasting. The real debate is whether or not the government can continue to afford to fund public broadcasting with the deficit out of control and so many other programs that must be funded. The debate is not about PBS, it's about budget priorities.

When you look at public broadcasting in this light, you see a much different picture than the author paints. Would I choose to fund public broadcasting at present levels in favor of reducing programs that help the poor and indigent? No, I would not. Would I choose to preserve public broadcasting in favor of cutting programs necessary for the survival of the state such as national defense? Clearly, I would not. Would I choose to fund public broadcasting given the enormous budget deficit and national debt that mortgage the future of college students like ourselves? Again, I would not. What's more is that neither would the average American.

The author cites a Gallup poll where 84% of the respondents favored continued or increased funding of public broadcasting. That's true. It's easy to be in favor of a lot of things when you don't have to consider the opportunity cost of your decision. How many people would choose Barney or Big Bird over cuts in Social Security or Medicare? I haven't done any polling, but I'm willing to bet that if you ask the question that way the result would be considerably less than 84%.

The author's logic minimizing the cost of public broadcasting is flawed. The author states, and correctly so, that public television costs South Carolinians about $1.50 per year. Let's see, that's $1.50 times roughly 3,500,000 people. That equals about five and a quarter million dollars. That may not seem like very much money to some, but it does to me.

Perhaps the most disturbing attitude that the author displays in his column is one that is prevalent among upper-class, white liberals. He writes that public television is the only venue available for cultural programming for rural and poor families. That is blatantly offensive to me. I grew up rural and poor. I know about the culture of the rural poor, and I can tell you that what the rural poor in South Carolina need is not "Masterpiece Theatre" or "Wall St. Week," but good jobs and economic opportunity. Why does the author believe that we need government to give them culture? Perhaps I should remind liberals what rural, poor culture is. It's a culture that believes in God and the authority of the Bible, helping neighbors, personal responsibility, that marriage is forever, and that homosexuality is deviant behavior. In short, it's a culture that knows right from wrong and lives accordingly. Not that there is anything wrong with the opera or Shakespeare, but people like the author would do far more for America by promoting the culture of the rural poor than they do by attempting to force the culture of upper-class white liberals on them.

The author is right to point out the quality programming for children that public broadcasting offers. However, in linking that to family values, I believe he overestimates the value of such programs. The author "fears" for future families without public broadcasting. What did families do before PBS, or before television for that matter? The answer is that they raised their children with a set of core values. Though quality programming might serve to supplement proper childhood development, it is no way a substitute for being brought up in a loving family with a mother and father to live as examples before their children and to provide the discipline inherently necessary in building responsible citizens. This sort of environment is unfortunately lacking in America today, but, rather than encouraging this type of family structure, the author is more interested in villainizing leaders like Ralph Reed who stand up for the family in the political arena. Providing quality programs for children is only a small part of the message on family values. It's sad that the author misses the rest of it.

It would be nice if there was not a financial crisis in American government, but there is. The American people realized that in November of 1994 and elected a Republican Congress to fix it. It won't be easy, and it will require tough decisions about where to spend our money. I encourage everyone to weigh it out in their own minds.

Trustees provide leadership, vision for college

Behind the students, faculty, and administration at Presbyterian College is another very important group of people: the Board of Trustees. This weekend, we welcome the Board to campus and are excited about their fall meeting. This is a time when students and Board members get a chance to interact and discuss some of the things that matter most to our student body.

The meetings of the Board of Trustees are open to any student who finds an interest in the actions of this important group. Any comments or concerns that you would like to have shared with the Board are welcome. Having attended the past three meetings of the Board of Trustees, I can assure you that your voice will be heard. The members of the Student Government Association are constantly speaking for each one of you, making sure that PC is the best it can be. So, if you see some faces that are not as familiar to you on campus this weekend, just know that we have some special visitors on campus. They bring with them individual traits and have a tremendous influence on the happenings at Presbyterian College. Welcome to the members of the Board! Go Blue Hosi! Beat Newberry!

Martin 'someone you can count on'

by McDowell Crook
Staff Writer

If you've been anywhere near the Smith Administration building in the last ten years, you've probably seen her. Some of us, who are constantly having to make trips down to the admin. building for one reason or another, probably know her well.

Meet Mrs. Ann Martin, currently Administrative Assistant to Dr. Moncrief, Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of Faculty. Martin has worked at Presbyterian College for 18 years, serving for 10 years as Faculty Secretary in Neville Hall before moving to her current position. As she put it, "They've all been good years." In 1986 she received the PC Distinguished Service Award from the college's Board of Visitors.

Martin is a Laurens County native, having grown up in Clinton. She has lived in both Charleston and Columbia as well. She married a graduate of PC and has a daughter who graduated from PC in 1986. She enjoys such activities as walking, reading good books, and going to church. When she can, she likes to visit her family—she has two daughters living in Columbia, a son in Texas, and two grandchildren living here in South Carolina.

"PC has progressed a great deal in the last fifteen years. The grounds and buildings are certainly an improvement, and there are new programs starting constantly."

"I mainly enjoy talking with and helping students," she says. "It is a very diverse job. I interact with lots of different students and faculty members." In addition to helping Dr. Moncrief handle the myriads of student and faculty-related problems, Mrs. Martin also helps coordinate spring commencement.

"Ann's a pleasure to work with, always upbeat, very capable in a lot of ways. She's someone you can always count on. We have a great deal of respect for Ann," said colleague Flo Dowdle.

"Ann Martin is the personification of organization and efficiency. PC would be lost without her," said Jay Therrell.

ROTC program provides challenges, opportunities

by Alison Barnard
Business Manager

What do rafting, rappelling, and Ranger Challenge all have in common? They are all part of the ROTC program at PC. The Scottish Highlander Battalion is staying busy with a variety of training and activities.

With a total enrollment of 152 cadets and 18 contracted students, the program has seen steady growth since the introduction of a new group of cadre one year ago.

ROTC activities are not limited to the school year. Seven PC students attended to Camp Challenge at Ft. Knox, KY. The six week course is designed to prepare students for enrollment in the advanced ROTC courses who did not participate in the program during their first two years of college. The camp develops leadership skills, familiarizes students with the organization of the US Army, and provides training and provides training in area such as rifle marksmanship, and rappelling.

Seven PC juniors participated in Advanced Camp, held at Ft. Bragg, NC. Advanced Camp evaluates cadets' leadership potential, physical fitness, rifle marksmanship, and land navigation. "Advanced Camp really challenged me, but it also improved my leadership skills which will be helpful in my career after the army," said Cadet Ed Wiggers.

Five students attended Airborne School at Ft. Benning, GA where they learned the basics required to jump from an aircraft. The participants completed five jumps to earn the coveted airborne wings. "My favorite part was the night jump. You couldn't see anything, including the ground. It was like being in outer space," said Eric Erickson.

The Cadet Battalion Commander, James Chastain, participated in Cadet Troop Leadership Training during the summer at Ft. Bragg, NC. "I was a platoon leader, and I had twenty soldiers and 10 million dollars worth of equipment under my command. It was like being a lieutenant for three weeks. It gave me tremendous leadership opportunities," said Chastain.

ROTC even has their own varsity sport, Ranger Challenge last year, this year's team moved up ten places and was ranked 15th in the overall competition. The PC team competed against all of the ROTC battalions in North and South Carolina. The nine member team competed in eight events: hand grenade assault course, one rope bridge, weapons assembly, orienteering, rifle marksmanship, a 10K road march, a physical fitness test, and a written exam. PC's team placed fourth in the rifle marksmanship competition. With a large number of sophomores and juniors on the team, prospects look even brighter next year.

A group of ROTC cadre officers and cadets, for fun and relaxation, went rafting on the Chattooga River. "The trip was really fun because I got to know people better, and because my raft didn't flip over," said Cadet Marvin Atchinson. Other upcoming events include a Dining In for cadets and a commissioning ceremony for Mark Albertus and Carol Holmes Collier.

Cadets speak highly of the program. "It's a great opportunity to have a job when you leave PC. I can start thinking about the long term now." ROTC is not just some shoot 'em up group. It gives you a chance to be a leader, and work with people and even prepare for a career outside of the military. The army needs doctors, lawyers, accountants, nurses, and hundreds of professions, not just an infantry," said Chastain.

Prospects are bright for PC's ROTC, one of the oldest and smallest ROTC battalions in the country. "In the one year that the new cadre have been here, the program has more than doubled and we hope to see the program continue to grow," said Professor of Military Science LTC Kirk Thomas. Cpt Mike Leonhardt, a 1987 PC graduate, said, "The more people that join the program, the more it becomes a cross section of the school."

PC IN BRIEF

College's Board of Trustees continues fall meeting today

Members of the PC Board of Trustees arrived yesterday for the first of three days of meetings for their annual fall retreat. The Board, which meets twice a year, has a heavy agenda, according to college president Dr. Kenneth B. Orr. Among other matters, the Board members will adopt a 24.4 million dollar budget which was tentatively agreed to in their spring meeting, elect five new members to fill the vacancies of members leaving and rotating off the Board (including departing member former South Carolina Gov. John West), elect Board officers (including the re-election of Dr. Frank Harrington as Chairman and the election of trustee Fred Davidson as Vice Chairman and trustee Jane Jamison as secretary), approve a plan to reconfigure the election of trustees from the Presbyterian (USA) synod, and designate the college's development office as the office of college advancement, adding the services of alumni affairs to the college's financial development.

Additionally, the Board is expected to approve a promotion for Dr. Barbara Medley to Assistant Professor of Sociology and name former Dean of Alumni Affairs Tom Stallworth to Associate Professor of Religion Emeritus. The Board is also expected to name Dr. Ed Gouge, professor of chemistry, to the Charles Ezra Daniel Chair of Chemistry. The chair was given to the college in 1992 by the Daniel family of Greenville, S.C. In other business, the Board is expected to approve honorary doctorate candidates for the spring commencement services and will complete a day-long review of the school's self study draft version.

Board members met last night with Student Government Association representatives in a dinner at the Mabry-Smith-Yonce Center. "The Board of Trustees is comprised of many different individuals who bring with them many talents and traits that are assets to this school," said Leigh Davis, who presided over last evening's dinner which highlighted student activities to Board members.

"This is a solid meeting, with many important issues to consider," said Orr.

Men's basketball team reflects upon summer European vacation, begins preparations for new season

by Alison Barnard
Business Manager

"Breathtaking." "The trip of a lifetime." and "Beautiful sights" were all phrases used by the PC men's basketball team to describe their trip to Belgium, Germany and Austria. From August 11-20, 1995, the team played three basketball games and saw the sights in the heart of Europe.

The team began their excursion from Atlanta at 6:15 p.m. and landed in Brussels, Belgium at 8:13 a.m. "I couldn't believe that when we landed, we had the whole day as well as a game to play before we could go to sleep," said player Ty Phillips.

The team immediately left Brussels for Antwerpen. After a tour of the city, which included the famous Cathedral of Antwerpen, the Blue Hose played the first of three games. "The best thing about Antwerpen was the Cathedral and the town square. We just sat on the square and did some people watching, which we all enjoyed," said player Steve Rydzewski. The team soundly defeated their opponents, Turnhot, by a score of 96-44. One aspect of European life that the Blue Hose had to adjust to was the lack of water and the overabundance of beer. "After our game, we wanted water, but Turnhot team bought us all beer, and they looked at us funny when we said we wanted water," said Phillips.

The second city that the team toured was Bruges, "the Venice of Northern Belgium." Said to be the most beautiful city in Belgium, Bruges is filled with canals, medieval statues, Gothic architecture. "I really liked going in all of the old shops and seeing the nuns singing in the cathedral," said Phillips.

The next stop was Luxembourg. Along with their tour guide named Tilly, the group visited the home of the Duke of Luxembourg. Other sights included the grave of General George S. Patton and a cemetery interring the graves of American soldiers who fought in WWII. The day ended with a tour of Trier, Germany.

"This was the only day in my life in which I was in three countries - Luxembourg, Germany, and Belgium," said player Brian Franklin. "At dinner one night, Cally Gault (former PC athletic director) began making sounds by tapping his silverware on their glasses. Before we knew it, the whole group was tapping their silverware on their glasses. The waiters just looked at us like we were a bunch of silly Americans, which we were."

Heidelberg, Germany, was the sight of the second basketball game the Blue Hose played in which ended in a disappointing loss of 92-89. The group then visited Rothenburg and the famous beer garden Haubrahaus. Austria was the final destination before returning home. In Salzburg, Austria, the group toured Mirabel Gardens, Mozart's birthplace, Fortress Hohensalzburg, and saw the house used in the Sound of Music. In their third and final game, PC defeated ULG Wustenenot, 119-35. "Obviously, the game wasn't very difficult, and when the score got to be 60-30, we just started having fun," said Andre Newman.

One of the most important parts of the event was the trip to Dachau, one of Hitler's concentration camps that killed at least 32,000 people. "When I entered Dachau, I began to get a eerie feeling, and for the first time, I really began to think about what really went on there," said player Billy Murphy. Neuschwanstein, the castle of King Ludwig, was the last sight to be toured by the team.

"Our overseas tour was a once in a lifetime trip that I'll never forget. It brought the coaching staff and the players together, we experienced a different lifestyle and culture, and we got to know people who support our program," assistant coach William Ailsbrook said.

"I thank the administration of the college, including Dr. Orr, Skip Zubrod, Ted Brown, Allen Morris, everyone who made the trip possible, and to all of the supporters of our team. It truly was the trip of a lifetime," head coach Gregg Nibert said.

Scholarship encourages participation among college's minority students

by Wendy Holler
Staff Writer

Of the hundreds of scholarships offered by PC each year to entering freshmen, only one scholarship is specifically designed for minority students, the college's Multicultural Leadership Award. "The scholarship is used to attract quality students of color actively involved in the school and church communities," said dean of admissions Margaret Williamson. The program was established several years ago to attract additional students of varying backgrounds to campus.

The scholarship provides $7500 a year for the recipient to study at Presbyterian College, along with anticipation from the school that the recipient actively participate in campus activities. The application process includes consideration by the financial aid committee of the applicant's extracurricular activities with emphasis on leadership roles in these activities.

Students who are currently receiving the award agree with the benefits of this scholarship. Sophomore Nayomi Greaves, who is active in the Student Fellowship Choir, Minority Student Union, and Thornwell Big Sisters, said, "The scholarship had a lot to do with my decision to come to PC."

"I think it is a good scholarship because it gives black females who don't play sports an opportunity to attend PC," said Faye Jackson, a junior recipient.

This program is crucial to PC because it brings minorities to campus that would not otherwise be able to afford the school. I am grateful to those who fund the program," said Wendy Ramos, a junior who receives the scholarship.

minor: math

plans after graduation: hopes to find a job in the business field and work for a few years; then possibly enter graduate school in International Business or Structural Engineering greatest memory at PC: [last fall at the National Tournament] "As we took the field and faced the American flag for the National Anthem, I was overwhelmed by a sudden sense of pride in my teammates, in my school, and in the accomplishments that I had made since entering PC."

[winning the conference tournament this year] "After entering the year facing some significant adversity, our team bounced back and fought hard even though we could have thrown in the towel mid-way through the season."

coach's comment: "Carly came in as a walk-on her freshman year and ultimately started all four years. She is a defender and her biggest strength is her overall fitness level. Carly is extremely dedicated to her off-season training and that has led to much of her success. She may not be the most skillful player that I've ever coached but she is one of the most intense. She is consistent and goes hard every day." (Brian Purcell)

teammate's impression: described as a smart player; "can always be counted on to perform well;" a silent leader

Elizabeth Welborn Women's soccer

name: Elizabeth Neal Welborn

major: business administration hometown: Spartanburg, S.C.

plans after graduation: plans to attend graduate school at Clemson or the University of South Carolina greatest memory at PC: [receiving the Coach's Award in 1994] "It was very unexpected, but I was extremely honored to get it."

stats: shots (36) goals (2) assists (4) mp/ms 20-20
Coach's Award (1994)

coach's comment: "Elizabeth also arrived at PC as a walk-on. She is from Spartanburg and the women's soccer programs are not very well developed there. She had not had the benefit of great coaching as most other girls had so she spent the first two years 'catching up.' Elizabeth works extremely hard and that's why she started every game for us this year. She covered a lot of ground in four years and is a great example for the other girls. I can't remember that she ever had a bad day when she did not want to be on the field; she left everything that she had there every day. Elizabeth also told us a joke immediately before we took the field prior to each game, and she saved the best for the National Tournament."

teammate's impression: described as a workhorse; "works harder than anyone on our team and tells great jokes;" puts great pressure on the ball

Volleyball team finishes season with 32-8 record

by Ellison Manley
Staff Writer

No one will dispute the fact that the Lady Blue Hose volleyball program is consistently one of the most successful teams not only on campus, but in the South Atlantic Conference. The 1995 squad proved to be no exception. Posting an overall record of 32-8, the team became the ninth straight PC squad to win 25 games or more in one season. The Lady Hose recently completed their season at the SAC Tournament which was hosted by Wingate College.

The Blue Hose began the tournament on Friday, November 3 with an easy victory over Lenoir-Rhyne College for the third time this season with scores of 15-6, 15-7, 15-8. Next the Blue Hose faced Gardner-Webb University, and again won with little trouble: 15-7, 15-12, 15-9.

These victories set the stage for a rematch with Wingate College, the SAC regular season champions and PC's biggest rival. Wingate had defeated the Blue Hose twice this season, but PC was determined to capture its fifth straight SAC tournament championship. In an emotionally charged match, the Blue Hose defeated Wingate 15-8, 10-15, 15-10, 15-6 and placed themselves in the championship round once again.

After Wingate defeated Catawba, PC and the Lady Bulldogs took the court for the second time in a matter of hours. The Blue Hose started strong, winning the first two games 17-15 and 15-8. It looked as though the Blue Hose were on their way to victory, but Wingate boasts a strong team and they did not relinquish hope for victory. Instead the Bulldogs fought their way back and won the next three games 10-15, 10-15, 12-15.

The grueling match was dominated by Watoma Williams with 25 kills and 10 blocks and Brooke Fleming with 17 kills and 17 digs. The Blue Hose also received strong defensive play from Beth Mann with 23 digs and Mary Kruse with 24 digs. Mann also served three aces. Setter Jenny Freiling handed out an impressive 52 assists in the disappointing loss.

The first two games of the final match of the double-elimination tournament were dominated by the Lady Bulldogs of Wingate as tournament MVP Marcie Miller and three other All-Conference players from Wingate led the team to 9-15, 13-5 wins. This time it was the Blue Hose who battled back and won the third game 15-5. However, Wingate went on to win the final game 6-15 and took home the tournament title.

The season may have ended in disappointment for the Lady Blue Hose, but not before two players received recognition for their contributions to the team. Prior to the start of the tournament, Williams was named to the All-Conference first team for the second year in a row. Senior Brooke Fleming was named to the All-Conference second team.

Head coach Allen Ansley had a lot to say about the leadership of his young team. As the only senior, Fleming really "stepped up to the challenge and was a key for us," said Ansley. Similarly, Williams filled her role as a dominant offensive player again this year.

Among the quiet leaders of the team was junior Amy Landell who Ansley described as the "heart and soul of the defense." Sophomores Mann, Kruse, and Freiling also were key players for the Blue Hose, although they might not have gotten the same recognition.

Ansley said, "These young players take care of the dirty work by doing things only coaches see and they get the job done. Kruse particularly came on in the end as an offensive player, but she was solid defensively all year long." She led the team in digs (4.2 dpg), passing percentage (93.5%), and serving percentage (97.3%). As a sophomore, Kruse has compiled over 1,000 digs, placing herself among the ranks of PC's greatest defenders such as Christy Wynn and Kristy Tarallo. Williams has also gone down in the record books as second in all-time kills.

Ansley said, "All in all I'm pleased with how things turned out. This was a young team that began the season with a lot of changes and struggled through some tough times. To finish 32-8 really says something about how everybody on the team stepped up to fulfill their role."

Team to take on USCS Sunday in national tournament

Men's soccer team clinches South Atlantic conference championship

by Brian J. Sacco
Managing Editor

After rolling to an impressive 14-2-1 regular season record and a #17 national ranking, the Blue Hose men's soccer team was out to prove that they were the team to beat and meritorious of their number one seeding in the South Atlantic Conference Tournament held last weekend. But of even more importance, the Hose were looking to capture one of the three South Region bids to participate in the NCAA Division II National Tournament.

The team led by SAC Coach of the Year, Ralph Polson, parlayed victories in their last five matches of the regular season into enough momentum to crush the opposition at Jefferson City, Tennessee and capture the championship in a convincing manner. In giving up only one goal in the tournament and scoring seven, the Blue Hose kicked defeated Lenoir-Rhyne (3-0), Gardner-Webb (1-0), and second-seeded Catawba (3-1).

In their first round game against Lenoir-Rhyne on October 31, the Blue Hose were led by Clint Galloway, Jimmy May, and Tyler Boulware who each scored a goal, while Mark Barnett added an assist with Chris Napier tallying two assists in the match. On November 4, PC travelled to Jefferson City to take on Gardner-Webb in a semifinal match. In winning the tightly contested match, the Blue Hose were able to convert the single goal of the game when Napier scored on an assist from David Dore.

Playing under a light snowfall on Sunday, November 5, PC was able to capitalize on the conditions and defeat Catawba for the conference crown. Goals by Boulware, May, and Bryan Ridgely solidified the victory for PC with Dore and Barnett each adding an assist in the successful effort.

In capturing the team championship, May was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player, and Boulware, Napier, Brian Blackwelder, and Jeremy Ransom were named to the All-Tournament team.

We had something to prove this year. All year we have done what it takes to win... we have remained focused throughout," said head coach Ralph Polson.

At the completion of the tournament, PC was awarded with a bid to compete for the national championship. Initially they will travel to Spartanburg on Saturday to face USCS, a team with which PC fought to a scoreless tie in overtime game on September 16 in Clinton. "It has been the greatest season I think in school history. We have been talking about going to nationals all year and we have been focused on our 'pot of gold.' Individuals have done what it takes to help the team and that has been key," said Napier.

On October 19, #6-ranked Lander University visited the Ponderosa and were sent home losers when PC pulled off an upset, winning 2-1 in overtime. Hiller, assisted by Ridgely and Napier, scored both goals for Presbyterian in the victory. PC travelled to Wingate on October 21 for an important SAC game. The Blue Hose were victorious, 2-1, as Hiller had a goal and an assist. In addition, Boulware scored a goal and Napier had an assist.

In Clinton on October 23, Gardner-Webb marched onto the Ponderosa in search of an upset, but left empty handed as the single goal of the game, courtesy of Kevin Smith on an assist from May, squashed the visitors' hopes of a victory.

The Blue Hose visited USC-Aiken on October 25 and left with a 3-1 victory from two goals by Napier and one by May, with Ryan Williamson adding an assist. In their final regular season match of the year, PC hosted SAC rival Elon and sent the Fighting Christians scurrying home after a 4-1 thrashing from two goals by Ridgely and one each from Blackwelder and Smith. Barnett, Napier, May, and Dore each added assists in the victory by PC.

Currently the Blue Hose are ranked #10 nationally with a 17-2-1 record and SAC regular season and tournament championships. "This year has been a dream... things could not have gone any better. We have worked hard and pulled for each other the whole year," said Hiller.

"Anyone interested in attending the game Sunday in Spartanburg should contact the soccer office for details," said Asst. Coach Mark Albertus.

Hose football rolls to fourth straight victory

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Sports Editor

Just as any good general will tell you, any successful coach will endorse the idea that one of the keys to the front door of success is to have many weapons in the arsenal. Especially in a sport such as football which headlines bone-rattling collisions, a narrow game plan and a shortage of performers will most certainly spell defeat. Whether players are lost to injury or the conditions are simply not conducive to his game plan, a winning coach makes all efforts to know that he has not only a "plan B" but also "players B" to execute the plan.

Fortunately for the Hose, the coaching staff had packed both weapons for the trip to Gardner-Webb. After undoubtedly watching countless game films, the Bulldogs keyed on Presbyterian's star fullback Steve Gorrie and held him to 76 yards on 24 carries and one TD; notably this was only the second outing this season in which Gorrie did not break into the century club on the ground.

Though Gorrie may not have recorded his usual numbers, his presence undoubtedly cracked the door for sophomore Terrance Grant who notched a career-high 138 yards on 16 carries. Grant also tallied the final seven points for the Hose on a 30 yard run and effectively closed the door on the Bulldog's hopes for a comeback.

After kicking off the season with a pair of victories, the Blue Hose had floundered a bit around the midway point and perhaps entertained some doubt concerning the attainment of their goal to finish 1995 with a winning record. Their determination to succeed was apparent, however, as the Hose launched a four game winning streak which was crowned by last week's 34-20 victory over conference foe Gardner-Webb.

Currently, PC's record stands at 6-4 overall (4-3 in SAC) with one game remaining versus ex-Bronze Derby rival Newberry College. This year's over .500 record is the first out-of-the-red zone record that PC has enjoyed in eight years.

Gorrie

"This was truly a great team victory for us. Gardner-Webb did a good job of containing Gorrie in the second half, but today's game goes to show that we have other players that can help us win football games," Perry told a reporter from The Greenville News.

Not surprisingly, junior quarterback Randy Sullivan was one of the players who turned in an impressive performance on Saturday. He completed 8 of 16 passes for 161 yards and one touchdown. In the second quarter, Sullivan scampered 8 yards for a score, and found senior wideout Kevin Linder in the endzone during the fourth quarter. Placekicker Chris Kinert also enjoyed a banner day. He was a perfect 4 for 4 on PATs and booted two field goals. The first long ball through the uprights was from 31 yards out and gave the Hose a 17-7 advantage as the first half drew to a close. Kinert connected again in the third quarter, this time from 22 yards out.

Defensively, the Hose held the Bulldogs to a meager 30 yards rushing on 24 carries. Though Gardner-Webb did manage to amass 297 yards through the air, the Hose picked off three of the 39 attempts and only allowed one score off of a pass.

The Blue Hose will close their season this Saturday with a contest against the Indians of Newberry College. Kickoff time is 2:00 PM.

Blue Hose win SAC Championship

Women's soccer advances to national tournament

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

It's a well known faux pas among athletes that a team should never discuss future steps of play before the steps in front of them have been climbed. Presbyterian women's soccer coach Brian Purcell knew of this old superstition, and he used it to his advantage as the 1995 season neared its completion.

Heading into the final round of the Food Lion South Atlantic Conference Tournament, Coach Purcell led the Lady Hose to believe that that outing would be their last match of the season. Consequently, an inspired group of focused Blue Hose soccer players stepped onto the field to face SAC rival Elon College in Hickory, N.C. on October 29th believing that this was indeed their final game of the season. Captain Carey Bailey is confident that Purcell assured the Lady Hose that they had no chance of going to the NCAA tournament despite the outcome of that game in order to alleviate the pressure and allow the Hose to put forth their best effort.

The match featured an incredible display of defense on the part of the Blue Hose and their opponents. The Hose defense was sparked by the outstanding performances of Allison Steen and Carly Peterson who ultimately proved to be the anchors that would secure the game

Neither squad was able to score until sophomore Brooke Wright found the back of the net with only two minutes and forty seconds remaining.

Purcell's tactic produced what Bailey dubbed "the best effort of the season," which seemed to be the general consensus of opinion among team members. The Lady Hose also acknowledged that having both Heather Jones and Wright healthy played a large role in the victory.

The SAC Championship match did not prove to be the final outing of 1995 for the Lady Hose, however. Much to their surprise, the Hose received a bid to the Division II NCAA Championships. Despite having lost to Elon 4-0 during the regular season and suffering a few losses to other teams which the Eagles had defeated, the victory over Elon at the SAC tournament and the impressive effort of posting a 15-4 record provided the margin needed to secure an invitation.

Since this was the Lady Hose's second consecutive year of travelling to Nationals, their attitude was a little different than it had been the previous year. The veteran team, perhaps a bit numb to the excitement, had every intention of not merely competing but winning.

Thankful for the bid and the opportunity to go to the tournament two years in a row, senior Liz Roe said, "A bid to Nationals this year was a credit to the character of our team. We did what it took to turn things around and have a great season despite early setbacks."

In the quarterfinal match the Blue Hose faced the much resented team from Barry University which had knocked them out of the tournament last year and had beaten them early in the 1995 season by a margin greater than anyone else posted all year, 6-0.

Before departing for Miami, senior Allison Steen commented that the Hose were going to "put something back in Barry's face," a comment which epitomized the rivalry.

Carey Bailey added, "Last year we were just happy to be there; this year we're going to win."

Perhaps it was this confident attitude that led to one of the Blue Hose's best efforts all season. Though the Lady Hose did not win the match, they allowed only two goals and made an excellent impression upon all who were present at the tournament.

Junior Susan Olmert described the atmosphere of the game by saying, "Everyone played with lots of energy, pride and, most of all, heart. We definitely showed Barry how a team with a great deal of sportsmanship plays and wins—no matter what the score was at the end of the game."

Overall, the women's soccer team enjoyed yet another successful season. It seems that the Lady Hose have started a tradition of excellence that includes postseason play, and, considering the personnel who will return next season, the streak should continue.

The Last Word: Exposing crime 'n' corruption with PC's finest

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

Most of us like to picture the typical college campus as a quaint, safe place where the people are happy and there is little danger. Yeah, and most of us like to picture the GDH milk bin as up to date. The fact is, we're here to tell you that PC doesn't fit that cute and fuzzy little stereotype. Try spending a night with the boys who keep you safe at night, and you'll see that our school is actually a hotbed of scandal and corruption. Listen closely any given night and you'll be sure to hear gunfire, domestic disturbances, and the squealing tires of drunken drivers. We decided we wanted a piece of the action, so we spent some late-night hours with Officer Joel Nelson of PC Public Safety. Here now, is a record of our activities and conversations with Officer Nelson.

11:04 p.m. — On our walk to meet Nelson, we happen upon a broken glass beer mug in front of Calhoun's. We know this is just a sign of things to come this evening.

11:05 p.m. — We meet Nelson at the Public Safety office and are briefed as to the nightly routine, and on squad car protocol.

Nelson: "Now, one of you has to ride in the squirrel cage," (referring, of course, to the back seat of the car). There is a plexiglass wall built in to the car to protect the officers from arrested suspects. This makes the back seat into a cage-type area. They call it the "squirrel cage."

Leighton: "That's me. I'll take the squirrel cage. I'm used to it in a way. Mom and Dad have a little cage they put me in at home."

We just call it 'the sweat box.'"

11:09 p.m. — Possible drug deal in Georgia Hall parking lot. It turns out to be nothing more than two people talking. Nelson reflects on his years at PC.

"I've been here for 21 years. Before I came here, if you had told me I'd be doing this, I'd have said that you were crazy. There were so many student protests and hippies back then. A college campus was an ugly place to be."

11:34 p.m. — First circle of campus is complete. We turn on Broad Street passing in front of Dr. Orr's palatial estate. We head toward the plush Scottish Arms Apartments, home to many professors and other college folk. We pass Huddle House and Burger King.

Leighton: "Who's got the better burger, Whiteford's or Burger King?"

Nelson: "Well, I don't eat at Burger King. The service is poor."

Tommy: "It's not the friendliest service in the world, is it?"

Nelson: "We stood over there for about 30 minutes one time, and there was two people that got waited on during that period of time. The employees were just sitting back there shooting the breeze. I just don't go there." Our sentiments exactly, officer.

A lap through Scottish Arms reveals a mess of liquor bottles, syringes, and screaming wheels, but nothing to make an arrest for.

Better luck next time.

11:40 p.m. — Nelson shows us how to secure a building for the night.

Nelson: "All the officers have different ways of closing up the buildings. Most go all the way upstairs and then work down, but I prefer to start at the bottom and work up."

Tommy: "What happens if you get all those doors locked and then get up to the top floor and find a guy hiding with a gun? Then you've got yourself locked in."

Nelson: "We swing through this room here, and check to make sure the professors turn off the coffee pot."

11:46 p.m. — Nelson turns off coffee pot. Jacobs Hall is safe from fire for one more night.

11:47 p.m. — Only one professor is found upstairs in his office at this late hour. Sure the camo, facepaint, and maps of Jacobs Hall air conditioning ducts had us wondering a bit, but we let it slide and left the east stairwell lights on for the guy.

11:50 p.m. — Jacobs Hall is locked and considered secure.

11:53 p.m. — Cruise through Georgia Hall parking lot. We hear over the police radio that Clinton cops have pulled over a car with a Georgia license plate. MWL 701, we know what you did.

Leighton: "How about that car parked by that tree up there, is that legal?"

Nelson: "Sure. If you can get your nose in it, we don't have a problem with it really."

Leighton: "That's pretty much how life is, isn't it? If you can get your nose in it..."

Time passes. The night wears on.

Leighton: "Let me ask you this, do you think if our Public Safety officers formed a football team, you think we could beat Furman's Public Safety?"

Nelson: "I don't know. I've never really seen but one of their men. He was a big man."

Tommy: "Oh, I think we could take 'em."

Gerald's a pretty big guy. Chief Mayson's probably got some speed. I think it'd be a good team."

12:02 a.m. — Deer spotted by the intramural fields. Nelson shines a light at them. He reaches for his gun. We could see the look in his eyes. It was the ol' "If only these kids weren't in the car...I could eat for weeks" look. He wanted those deer. He sighs, and pulls his hand away from his holster.

Leighton: "You sure those are deer? Might just be big dogs."

12:04 — A cruise through the girls' dorm parking lots reveals another potential drug deal. This one turns out to be nothing more than a girl parking her car. We talk about the parking situation. Nelson explains that more parking and less cars would solve all of our problems. We suggest that Public Safety should be allowed to dispense lethal injections for parking violations. Then, the school could auction the students' vehicles and use the money to sponsor a Hootie concert. Nelson didn't buy into our scheme.

12:07 — The radio crackles. Nelson talks with a fellow officer. Their discussion turns to coffee.

Nelson: "You want to pick up a pot?"

Radio: "That's what I'm doing now. It should be ready in about five, ten minutes." Okay, so here's where they do actually fit in to your stereotype. They do like their coffee. But, if you had to work from 5 p.m. to 3 a.m., you would need a vice too.

12:13 a.m. — More deer spotted along the highway behind the baseball field. Nelson salivates. Nelson pulls off on to a back road to show us the hardware of the squad car. He turns on the lights and runs the sirens.

Nelson: "When that siren goes off, it'll clean the wax out of your ears, that's for sure."

Leighton: "I could sure use that."

12:41 a.m. — We're back on the beat after a short coffee break.

Tommy: "Have ya'll ever had any trouble over there at the Scottish Arms, faculty getting out of hand and such?"

Nelson: "Not really. We had a married couple living over there that threw a wild party one time, but that's about it." But the President's House was built just after that, so they moved over there.

1:06 a.m. — Patrolling behind the practice fields, Nelson spots a fox and utters something about leaving the traps and the skinning knife at home.

Leighton: "If you were going to arm-wrestle Gerald, who do you think would win?"

Nelson: "Shoot, Gerald would win."

Leighton: "How about Eddie? I think you could take 'em."

Nelson: "I don't know. I think it might be about even with Eddie."

1:14 a.m. — The night continues to wear on. The talk turns to current events.

Leighton: "So what do think about that movie the Karate Kid? You think you could kick that little Mr. Miyagi in the rear?"

Nelson: "I don't think I've ever seen that one."

Tommy: "What about that O.J. case? What do you think about the Juice?"

Nelson: "I think he was guilty, myself."

Leighton: "That's so? Y'all ever plant any evidence...just to, you know, mix up things a little?"

Nelson: After a nervous pause, "Shoot no, too much trouble to jail anybody to start with, much less frame 'em to get them in jail."

1:17 a.m. — We move once again past Commandant Oni's estate.

Tommy: "What do you think about Ken's car over there? Looks to me like it's parked on the grass. Should we go tickle it?"

Nelson: "Shoot, he's got diplomatic immunity."

The beat continues.

1:43 — Our squad car pulls up to the departure point. Leighton hops out of the front, and Tommy awakens from his nap on the back seat of the squirrel cage. All three in the car have an eerie feeling that this wasn't the first time Tommy has been passed out in the back of a squad car, and not the first time Leighton has been in a squirrel cage. Our venture into the world of PC crime has been completed. No one got hurt on this lucky night...and we're proud to say that we were, even for a few fleeting hours, PC's finest.

Congratulations to our new Zetas!

College to add varsity softball, varsity cross country teams

Athletic director places priorities upon athletes, strict budgets

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

The majority of the students at PC are not athletes, so perhaps many students will overlook this article believing that it does not pertain to them. However, considering that approximately a half million dollars of the school's 24.5 million dollar general budget is allotted to athletic scholarships, budget changes in the college's athletic department have a direct effect upon student life at PC.

Second year director of athletics Allen Morris is responsible for many of the changes in the athletic budget. Morris, who insists that there was nothing wrong with the manner in which the athletic department was previously run, has laid the ground work for a more rigid system of organization and operation that affects every aspect of his department.

Morris' main focus as athletic director has been controlling the factors that influence his department's budget. Morris explained that running the department of athletics is much like running a business, but he also addressed the important difference between a business and his department. "We're a budget driven operation, it's not like a corporation where you're profit oriented. We're budget oriented," he said. Operating within a budget mandates a placement of emphasis upon the organizational strategy of each department in order that things might function properly, he said. "In other words, once the budget is set and approved then we must stay with it in that budget," Morris said.

Before Morris made any changes in the department, he painstakingly examined each segment of the program and questioned every item that did not seem to be completely to work out, he said. These additions will also allow for the formation of softball at the club level in the spring of 1997 and then at the varsity level the following year, as well as the addition of a men's and women's club cross country program next fall and varsity programs the following year. "These programs are already South Atlantic Conference

Mabry-Smith-Yonce Center and the addition of the sports fitness center to Springs Campus Center. The fitness center is finally moving into the last stages of planning. The complex will include a health room for conferences where wellness information will be available and an actual fitness room with fifteen aerobic exercise machines and several weight machines. The center will lack free weights, though dumbbells will be available. The project will also involve expanding the existing locker rooms and installing a sauna in both the men's and women's locker rooms.

While concerned with meeting his department's budget through a conservative financial approach, Morris' first priority is the students whom his department serves.

"As always, I want to make sure that our athletes are graduating on time. That is the most important thing," Morris said.

Students who participate in the college's athletic program recognize Morris' changes and the program's proposed expansions as a positive step for the college.

"Our current facilities are cramped and hot," said junior Susan Cook, a midfielder on the Lady Hose soccer team. "The facilities proposed will be a great asset to our team and will help us to prepare mentally and physically for tough games in a comfortable environment," she said.

"These additions are badly needed. We currently share facilities with the women's basketball team and because our seasons overlap, we really need the additional space," said Jenny Frieling, a junior volleyball player.

A $1.5 million renovation and addition to Templeton Center is approaching the construction stage and will feature nine new locker rooms and a state-of-the-art sports-medicine complex.

Downsizing, however, is not the objective of the department of athletics. On the contrary, future plans outline many new additions to the program which range from the construction of new facilities to the addition of two sports. A 1.5 million dollar renovation and addition project to Templeton Center is approaching the construction stage, he said. Over $500,000 has already been raised for the project. The addition includes five new women's locker rooms, four men's locker rooms, ten new offices, and a state-of-the-art sports medicine complex, according to Morris. The renovations involved in this proposal include a revamping of the weight room which should help to alleviate the problem that non-athletes have with regard to a place sports," he said.

The addition of these new teams will increase the number of athletes and athletic scholarships on this campus. The Scotsman Club was established to help provide money for these athletic scholarships, and it raises about $240,000 of the $900,000 awarded in athletic scholarships. Morris hopes that the Scotsman Club can increase its yearly contribution to cover about half of the total scholarship funds.

Though the school does allot a substantial portion of its general budget to the department of athletics, private funding is an essential part of the department's development. Independent contributors make it possible for the department of athletics to fulfill long-range goals such as the addition of the

by McDowell Crook
Staff Writer

For most students at PC, the concept of homelessness may mean a study of the problem in a sociology course, or volunteer work through the SVS Open Door Program. However, a few PC students received a practical lesson in homelessness on Nov. 18, when they spent the night sleeping in blankets and sleeping bags on the front steps of Neville Hall, emulating the actions of hundreds of thousands of people do all over America every night. The project, called Homeless for a Night, was an awareness activity during which students slept outside on the cold, hard, concrete in conditions remotely similar to those found on America's streets every evening. Although sparse publicity led to a small turnout, project coordinator Phillip Barron was pleased with the student response.

"Several people dropped by for a while to talk and play guitar, so we feel like we got our message across. It wasn't the most comfortable thing I've ever done, but I feel like we all learned something," Barron said. "But in no way do we think we're closer to knowing what it feels like to be homeless. That's not why we did it. We did it to raise awareness on the campus. Last week, after people had begun hearing about the event, they were saying, 'Great idea, but do it when it's warmer.' We're doing it now, in the cold, because that's what the homeless have to go through. Those are real-life conditions. I appreciated having a warm dormitory room to go back to," he said.

In a related activity, students went to the Second Presbyterian Church in Spartanburg and slept in boxes on the church lawn on Nov. 19. The event, sponsored by the Westminster Fellowship Presbyterian organization, cost each student five dollars for a box and a spot on the grass. The donations raised over $400 for Compassion House, a seventeen-bed homeless shelter located in downtown Spartanburg.

Freshman Sara Simpson found the Spartanburg experience a positive one. "Even though it wasn't exactly like being homeless, it still raised my awareness for what some people have to go through. I can really sympathize. It was so cold that night," she said. In addition to the entertainment provided by the musicians, former homeless people spoke to the group of students.

"The newspaper in Spartanburg wrote an article about the event, and the article quoted some of the homeless people who spoke to us. They didn't let on to it then, but I think a lot of them resented what we were doing. They didn't think a bunch of college kids could do much about the state of homelessness," said Simpson. "But now that we know much more about their situation, we're that much more willing to help."

POINT

Homelessness more than a textbook problem

For most PC students, the issue of homelessness is confronted only in classroom theory or during an excursion to the busy streets of Columbia, Atlanta, Greenville, or Spartanburg. However, as several PC students learned a few weekends ago, homelessness is more than just a problem found in our textbooks. If it is uncomfortable to think about sleeping on the front steps of Neville Hall for a night, imagine the reality of waking up each morning on the streets, where temperatures often plunge below freezing during the night and mere survival becomes a daily blessing.

All too often, PC students become so enraptured in our campus' own world that we neglect to honor that which compels us: "While we live, we serve." Who do we serve by isolating ourselves from a social epidemic that affects hundreds of thousands of suffering human beings every day? Sadly, we only serve ourselves.

The Blue Stocking encourages PC students to demonstrate gratitude for our many blessings by becoming involved in the many campus service organizations which serve the homeless, the poor, and the spiritually needy. It is our obligation and our responsibility to all of those who suffer beyond this campus' gates of privilege and comfort.

PC students involved in the college's one hundred or so activities find themselves continually hitting a brick wall in the battle against indifference on our campus. While many students take the time to be involved on campus, others do not take the time to inform themselves of all that this college has to offer.

The Blue Stocking highlights many of the activities and stories that are a reflection of Presbyterian College life. We do so solely because we wish to; our newspaper is not run by subscription numbers or advertising dollars. We hope that leaders of student organizations will recognize the vehicle for expression they have in this, our student newspaper, and take advantage of its status as this campus' unifying voice.

Reagan, despite illness, continues to provide leadership, inspiration for nation

Ronald Reagan the Great Communicator and arguably the finest president in the history of the United States, brought to this nation for eight special years an optimism and leadership unparalleled by any other president. President Reagan operated on three basic principles: that the government works for the people and not the other way around, that people's money is their own and not the government's to tax freely and as much as possible, and that America has yet to see its best days.

In a February 5, 1981 speech to the U.S. Senate Youth Program, President Reagan remarked on the striking difference between our constitution and other nations' constitutions, including the former Soviet Union. He said, "All those other constitutions are documents that say that, 'we, the government, allow the people the following rights,' and our Constitution says, 'We the people, allow the government the following privileges and rights.'" The current tide we see in Congress of returning powers back to the states and people is grounded in Reagan's philosophy. And just as the fervor for returning power to the people is rooted in the Gipper's eternal optimism and vision, so is the move to reduce taxes, and rightly so. President Reagan said in his farewell address to the nation, "Common sense told us that when you put a big tax on something, the people will produce less of it. So, we cut the people's tax rates, and the people produced more than ever before."

It was for all of these many messages that his leadership and statesmanship has been sorely missed. At the Republican National Convention in 1988 he shared these parting words, "There's still a lot of brush to clear out at the ranch, fences that need repair, and horses to ride. But I want you to know that if the fires ever dim, I'll leave my phone number and address behind just in case you need a foot soldier. Just let me know, and I'll be there, as long as words don't leave me and as long as this sweet country strives to be special during its shining moment on earth." Recently President Reagan has been diagnosed with Alzheimer's Disease and I have already begun to miss him. I cannot imagine an America without Ronald Reagan. In his handwritten letter announcing his doctors' discovery of his disease, Reagan said, "When the Lord calls me home, whenever that may be, I will leave with the greatest love for this country of ours and eternal optimism for its future. I now begin the journey that will lead me into the sunset of my life. I know that for America there will always be a bright dawn ahead. Thank you my friends. May God always bless you." May God bless America and God bless Ronald Reagan.

Christmas at PC a time for reflection, gratitude

As we finish another semester here at PC, I have a chance to reflect upon this most recent semester and all of the activities that we have done together. The feeling of PC Pride has certainly found its way back to campus. I O/B/TOB was a huge success. The support of our fall athletic teams was phenomenal. We worked together on many class projects, a Hal-loween fair for the children of Clinton, and finally for the new SVS van. We saw the opening of Calhoun's as well as the continued success of Inklings. In my opinion, looking back over the past four years, this year's student body has become the closest and most successful that many people at PC have ever seen.

Christmas is a time to say thank you and to show appreciation those who have helped us over the past year. I'd like to thank an outstanding Student Government Association for all of their hard work. President's Council also deserves a hearty thanks for bringing together the organizations on campus and for helping to ensure campus unity. The administration, faculty, and staff are always behind us with their support. For this, I thank you on behalf of the student body. Finally, I'd like to thank the Blue Stocking staff for allowing me this space to communicate with each of you.

I hope that each of you have a wonderful Christmas and New Year! I look forward to seeing you in January. For those who are graduating or are going abroad next semester, good luck and know that you will be missed by your family at Presbyterian College.

Mock trial team members gain practical experience for classroom, law school

by Alison Barnard
Business Manager

With only four practices before their first competition on Nov. 10-11, the ten member PC mock trial team competed at Middle Tennessee State University with 20 other schools. Mock trial seeks to increase students' awareness of the court system, court procedure, and litigation through simulations, according to team captain Beth Threadgill. Teams have three prosecuting attorneys, three defense attorneys, and each side has three witnesses.

Members receive individual scores, based upon the role they play. Lawyers are judged on their opening and closing statements and questioning, while witnesses are scored on their knowledge of their character and their ability to answer questions from both the prosecution and the defense. Other factors judged include speaking ability and eye contact. The individual scores are added together to produce a team score.

The team is under the direction of Dr. David Gillespie, professor of political science, and Threadgill, a senior majoring in political science and English. Judge William Crane, a local attorney and former family court judge, is the professional coach to the team.

"I had no idea that we would do as well as we would with just four practices. We did surprisingly well and we have a great deal of talent. I think that we have a very good chance at the regional tournament. Mock trial is also very good preparation for law school," Crane said.

"At the last competition, there were several rules that we didn't know about which hurt our scores. However, even though we didn't win, we did very well considering the circumstances," Threadgill said.

"Mock trial is really a lot of fun, and it's also great practice for law school," said team member Rob Alexander.

"The mock trial program allows its participants to formulate logical, cohesive, and persuasive arguments and simulates actual courtroom practice. Its intensive preparation prepares its participants for better performance inside the classroom and for what lies beyond," said Susan Hagler, a junior.

The team will compete in the regional competition to be held at Kennesaw State College in February.

SVS program offers care, love to elderly

by Josh Hornor
Staff Writer

There is an episode of The Simpsons in which Grandpa Simpson is seen sadly standing in front of a retirement home next to a sign that reads "Thank you for not discussing the outside world." This sentiment seems to be a popular held view of the elderly. Many of us see them as being pitiful, odd, or even dangerous, and retirement homes become a means of keeping senior citizens apart from the rest of the world. However, concerned students at PC have seen through the stereotypes and extended kindness to this often neglected group of people.

SVS has three programs oriented towards senior citizens: Laurens Young at Heart, Frampton Hall, and Presbyterian Home. The Presbyterian Home Project, headed by Laura Jacobs, affords the elderly an opportunity for a type of acceptance that they do not regularly receive. Jacobs, along with eight to ten other volunteers, goes to Presbyterian Home every other Wednesday. They visit for about an hour with upwards of thirty residents. The activities include bingo, singing, juggling, sit-down square dancing, or just a friendly chat.

William Jacobs, a resident of the Presbyterian Home, graduated from PC in 1940 with an English and radio double major. "The program is well received out here. We really enjoy getting to know the students, and it gives a lot of the residents relief from the routine," said Jacobs. Jacobs is currently taking elective classes at PC and is related to Laura Jacobs.

"He's my grandfather, but when I'm there I feel like

I have a hundred grandparents," she said.

As Jacobs sees it, the program also has a positive effect on the students involved. "Everybody knows that we get more out of it than they do. They're appreciative, loving, and thankful for what we do," said Laura Jacobs. The visits often provide a much needed escape for some. "You can forget about the stress in your life. You know you're there and you have a job to do, and it makes people happy. The most shy people will go out there as volunteers and they'll open up, it's so easy to be open with these folks, they don't care what you say, how you act, what sorority you're in, or what you look like," said Jacobs.

Jacobs recognizes misconceptions about the elderly. "People think they're infirm, or aloof, or not aware of what's going on, but they really are sharp," she said.

Jane Jones is Laura Jacobs' contact at Presbyterian Home and has worked there for 21 years. "I can't imagine what my life would be like without the residents of Presbyterian Home. They're my family. I need them and they need me. You get something from the fellowship and knowing them that you can't sell and nobody can buy," said Jones. She is thankful for what SVS does.

"I think it's a good program. It's good experience for students as well as residents because everyone, if they're fortunate, gets old," Jones said. Jones puts stock in the value of nostalgia saying that "student visits reminds residents of when they were students. A majority of our people are educated and well-traveled. It's more or less them remembering when they were younger."

As Jones explains, "I love has a lot to do with it. Even though they get older and more wrinkled, they still have great beauty."

PC IN BRIEF

Habitat for Humanity to hold Christmas fund raiser

The holiday season is a time characterized by a sense of giving and generosity. Habitat for Humanity, a national organization which provides housing for underprivileged families, hopes to take advantage of that generous spirit. Habitat's Laurens County chapter has pioneered a fund-raising effort involving local merchants and students in an effort to collect money for their cause. Students in shop classes at Clinton High School and Laurens High School have built two wooden playhouses, which will be given away in a raffle drawing on Dec. 17th.

"I think it's a great idea. So many people benefit from this program," said PC Director of Church Relations and Habitat board member Dr. Bob Smith. "The high school students gain hands-on experience, and Habitat raises money to build houses. Hopefully, we will be able to get a lot of PC students to participate. In that case, if a student wins one of the playhouses, it can be donated to the Safe Home, for the resident children to use. Or, the student could keep it and give it to a brother or sister or nephew or niece. It's nice, because Habitat stands to benefit, and the winner stands to benefit," he said.

The project itself could not have come into being were it not for the generosity of some local citizens. Laurens Lumber donated materials for the house that Laurens High School built and D. E. Tribble Hardware donated the materials for the Clinton High School house. In addition, a local printer produced and donated the raffle tickets.

The tickets, which cost $1 each, or $5 for six, will be available for student purchase up until the date of the drawing. For tickets, or for more information, call Dr. Smith at ext. 8268, or Cassy Helsley at ext. 8657.

Despite disagreements, PC student legislators gain experience in handling real life political arguments at recent legislative session

by Laura Jacobs
Staff Writer

In the scope of the liberal education offered by PC, nothing could be more educational than practical experience that brings the classroom to life. The South Carolina Student Legislature provides experience in the workings of state government for students from thirteen colleges and universities across South Carolina, according to Karen Frierson, parliamentarian of the PC delegation and Speaker of the House for the state organization.

"We mock the House, Senate, and Supreme Court of the state. We have our own house and senate and all of the state elected officers. In the supreme court, we usually get a case that is actually going before the state supreme court and prepare oral arguments for that," said Frierson, a business major in her fourth year of SCSL participation. "There are two sessions per academic year: one in the fall, which is held at the state house in Columbia, and one in the spring, usually held somewhere fun like the beach," she said.

"In imitating state government, we write legislation of our own. The neat thing about SCSL is that the legislation we write is passed on to real legislators, who frequently consider it when enacting state law," said Frierson.

"Almost all of us met with members of other schools in legislative committees, replicating the procedure that the state government follows," said Ty Henson, a business and political science major.

Henson participated in the Ways and Means committee of the mock House of Representatives, the committee responsible for dealing with financial issues. "The committees got plenty of experience with the often laborious process of law making, picking bills apart, making amendments, voting on them, and deciding whether to send them to the House or the Senate," he said.

Henson viewed his experience as "one of the top five most memorable happenings of my PC experience, and something I wish I had gotten involved with sooner." This is Henson's first year on SCSL. "I decided this year to do it, no matter what, because this was my last SCSL.

When it came time to vote for the session governor, the individual political convictions of the members of the PC delegation came to light, and some friction emerged. Henson called it a "conflict of interests." Frierson referred to it as "awkwardness," and Benenhaley they selected. "I don't think it's good to disenfranchise anybody, evidently some people think it's okay to do that," said Benenhaley. "There were two reasons to operate in such a manner. First, we have always taken more people than we have votes allotted for us. Rather than telling some people they could not participate at all, block voting allowed them all to have input. Secondly, some of the larger state universities possess greater voting power, and putting our votes together allows our voice to be more strongly heard," he said.

"After much discussion, we all decided that according to democratic process, everyone should be able to vote his conscience. Each of us turned in separate votes," said Frierson. "In the end, we felt that democracy was served," said Henson.

As chair of the PC contingent, the responsibility fell on Benenhaley to make the final decision. "Rather than embarrass the institution, I relented. I've now I second-guess myself as to whether I did the right thing or not. Since then, the PC delegation has passed a new constitution which clarifies some of the ambiguous voting procedures," said Benenhaley. "Any disagreement there was could have been avoided had people that were inexperienced with the procedure of SCSL left things up to the experienced members and brought concerns back to be handled in house. There's a time and place to handle things," he said.

Though the timing of their disagreement may not have been desirable, the PC members agreed that they got their share of experience in the way government works. That is, they learned the road to compromise is often rough. Despite their differing political philosophies, the members of SCSL fostered no hard feelings concerning the incident.

"The politicking at SCSL is as real as you could possibly recreate, and because of that, I learned a lot about people and their convictions, and doing the right thing," said Henson.

thought it was an "inappropriately handled situation."

"The group from PC has our own mini constitution. There was some ambiguity within the constitution. The members of our delegation each interpreted it differently," explained Henson. Frierson explained that "there were two very qualified candidates for the governor's position. A member of the PC delegation felt very strongly we should support just one candidate, while others wanted to vote for the opposing candidate."

Benenhaley viewed the conflict in terms of following the precedent set by past delegations.

"The way the conflict was handled was inappropriate, it should have been handled beforehand. As long as I've been in the organization, the precedent has been to poll the members of the PC delegation and have them agree to cast their collective votes for the candidate opportunity," he said.

This session also marked the last opportunity for Brian Benenhaley, a political science major who has been a part of SCSL for three years. "I've always been interested in government, and this was just one more avenue to gain some experience," said Benenhaley, the chair of the PC delegation for the fall session.

For those students who are serious about gaining experience in state government, Frierson explained that "students from different schools work together. It is not a competition; the purpose is to get some good oral arguments going on current legislation."

While students from PC learn to work with those from other schools, they also discover the difficulties of reaching a consensus within a group and of trying to please everyone. A part of every realistic experience is conflict and resolution, and the members of the PC delegation experienced both at the fall session of

by Josh Hornor

PC students checking their e-mail in Springs Campus Center or grabbing a late night snack for a long study session recognize the familiar, guiding voice that greets them upon an encounter with the night time denizen of Springs canteen, George Brooks.

Brooks has been working nights in the canteen for four years, and enjoys his job very much. "I love people," he said. Brooks is the husband of Rhudene Brooks, a staff member who works in Neville Hall, and he came to Clinton after their marriage sixteen years ago.

"If she can put up with me, it must be all right," says Brooks. Certainly not lacking in family, Brooks has twelve children, thirty-two grandchildren, and four great grandchildren. But even before becoming a family man, he had an extraordinary life.

Brooks was born in 1930 in Croome, Maryland, a small farming town. But he spent the majority of his life growing up in Washington, D.C., where his father worked for the United States Senate. He took up his first love, cooking, at the age of fourteen. In 1947, he joined the Air Force to become a gunner on a B-29, but instead elected to become a jet mechanic. He continued to cook while he was in the service, and when he left in 1958, he set out on his own. "I could have gone to any college I wanted, but I chose the street," said Brooks.

Brooks eventually came into his own as a cook at the Cecil Palace, one of the finest Italian restaurants in the District of Columbia. He recalls a customer coming in and asking for the chef, and when Brooks appeared, the man was plainly surprised to see "the finest black Italian cook in Washington."

He still loves to cook. "Cooking is an art. You don't see old-time cooks anymore. We used to make our food from scratch, now everything comes out of cans," said Brooks. "I even have a particular way to fix a hamburger," he said. His cooking career advanced even further when he began to cater for various international embassies and the Northern Atlantic Treaty Organization in Washington. After many ing Rhudene, Brooks decided to retire and move to Clinton.

Unable to rest, Brooks started Brooks' Janitorial Services shortly after arriving here. He also became a deacon at the Mt Zion Progressive Church of Jesus Christ, where he has proudly attended for fifteen years. Brooks is well liked by his co-workers. "George is a character. He is a good Christian man," said Mrs. Ann Smith, who works in the canteen with Brooks.

This semester will mark the last for Brooks at the cash register in the canteen. He will, however, continue to work on campus as a full time member of the college's staff in Bailey Hall, where he currently works during the day.

"My job is to encourage the youth," said Brooks. "Push, the mark is already there. And if you don't think you can make it, get up anyway," he said.

Gridders post 6-5 season record

Football team ends season with disappointing Bronze Derby loss

by Jeff Walker
Staff Writer

The Indians of Newberry College ended Presbyterian's reign as king of the Bronze Derby on a muddy, rain soaked field on Saturday, November 11th. The final score of the less than enjoyable outing was 9-8.

"Obviously this is a tough loss. We apparently had the game won, and then we lost it," said a disappointed Coach Perry.

The Blue Hose controlled the ball for the majority of the contest. In the opening quarter PC hit up the scoreboard first with a safety when a Newberry snap sailed over the punter's head and out of the endzone. Then with one second remaining in the first quarter, junior place kicker Chris Kinert kicked a 32 yard field goal to put PC ahead 5-0, a lead which they took to the locker room at halftime.

seemed that their only objective would be to "run out the clock." With so little time yarder through the uprights to clinch a 9-8 win and the Bronze Derby.

Though PC still leads the series by a 50-29-5 mark, this loss was quite disappointing and cast a bit of a shadow on an otherwise successful season. The Hose will play Newberry at home next year. "It was a heartbreaker. It is certainly not the way I wanted to go out, but I enjoyed every minute of it. I've got a lot of memories which I will never forget," said senior fullback Steve Gorrie.

The 1995 season included the setting of several new team and individual records. PC opened the season with an untainted 2-0 record and went on to set a school record for total offense with an average of 381.6 total yards per game. Ultimately, the Blue Hose concluded the season with a 6-5 overall record and their first winning season since 1987. Senior Steve Gorrie, who rushed for over a thousand yards this season, will leave PC as the all-time leader in career rushing yards (3,486), and touchdowns (42).

"Obviously, this is a tough loss. We apparently had the game won, and then we lost it."

—Head coach John Perry

Kinert added another field goal late in the fourth quarter to give PC a 8-0 advantage, but the Hose noticeably lost momentum with about three minutes remaining in the game. Newberry drove the length of the field and scored a touchdown with 1:35 on the clock, but failed to convert on their two point conversion attempt.

After a failed onside kick attempt, the Blue Hose regained possession, and it remaining, it was feasible for the Hose to let the clock expire, and so on first down quarterback Randy Sullivan took a knee. On second down, however, the call went to senior fullback Steve Gorrie. After plowing ahead for a few yards, Gorrie was hit hard and in the shuffle coughed up the ball. The Indians recovered the fumble with about 52 seconds left in the ballgame and quickly drove deep into PC territory. As time expired, Newberry booted a 24

Blue Hose men's basketball ranked first in SAC in preseason poll

At times during the 1994-1995 campaign, Presbyterian men's coach Greg Nibert may have wondered if he was living in a bad dream. A season-ending injury to power forward Brian Franklin, who was a junior and one of the Hose most consistent returners, and the decision of two players to leave the team landed Nibert in the midst of uncharted territory.

For the first time in his stint at the helm of PC's program, Nibert encountered the problem of a thin bench, but fortunately he and the Hose did not lose heart. Realizing that run-and-gun power was not their forte, the Blue Hose focused on ball control and the tempo of each game. Intense desire and dedication landed the Hose in the SAC championship game; though they were defeated and thus finished second in the league, the Blue Hose certainly proved that perseverance can lead to success. After winning 10 of their last 12 games, PC's final 1994-1995 record was 15-14.

This year, the Blue Hose began to prepare for the regular season in August. During a memorable 10-day excursion to Europe, the Presbyterian squad faced three opponents and returned with a 2-1 record. In their opening contest the Hose defeated a team from Belgium (95-44) and then fell prey to a German squad (92-89). In their final outing, PC crushed a team from Austria by a score of 118-35.

Four starters highlight a group of nine returning lettermen from last year's squad which enjoyed such unimagined success at the close of the season and then performed impressively in Europe. Junior forwards Andre Newman and Ronnie Cannon, both of whom were tabbed as members of the Pre-season All SAC team, will lead what should prove to be a potent offensive attack.

"We can't wait to really get into the season. We should do very well this year," Newman said after the Hose faced the Kentucky Crusaders in a pre-season exhibition game.

Last season Newman was selected by his teammates as PC's Best Defensive player, but notably he also led the team in scoring with an average of 11.4 ppg. Additionally, Newman averaged 3.9 rebounds per outing, 2.2 assists, and was named to the SAC All-Tournament team. Cannon, the other Blue Hose representative on the SAC All-Tournament team, was accurate on 50.4% of his attempts from the field while averaging 10.8 ppg. Considering his strength and his ability to get position inside, it is not surprising that Cannon led the SAC in rebounding with 7.1 per game, but it is quite amazing that as a forward he led the SAC in steals as well. Generally smaller, pesky guards are the players who rack up the steals, but Cannon has impressive quickness for a post player.

Sophomore center Steve Rydzewski is another offensive weapon returning for the Hose. After starting last year and averaging 10.6 points per game and 7.9 rebounds, Rydzewski earned SAC Freshman of the Year honors. With a year of experience under his belt, Rydzewski should play an even greater role for the Hose, offensively and defensively.

In the backcourt, the Hose return sophomore Patrick Johnson and senior Billy Murphy, both of whom benefitted from much playing time last season. Johnson, who started 17 of 29 contests in 1994-1995, averaged 7.7 ppg and 3.3 assists while Murphy, co-captain of this year's squad, averaged 2.1 ppg and 1.1 assists.

Other returners for the Hose include seniors Ty Phillips, a forward who is sharing the captain responsibilities with Murphy, and Brian Franklin, also a forward who has worked to recover from an ACL injury incurred last season. Both Phillips and Franklin will be important contributors on the court but will also be relied upon to provide leadership. Sophomores Erik Rothwell and Blake Buchanan are the final members of the returning frontcourt category. Rothwell chipped in an average of 5.4 points per game and 2.8 rebounds as a freshman. Buchanan benefitted from minutes in 10 contests last year and looks to see more action this season.

Six newcomers join the Blue Hose squad this season. Tyler Weiss, a freshman from Sweetwater, Tennessee, and Kent Stallard, a sophomore transfer from Lander University will join Johnson and Murphy in the backcourt. Three freshmen who are South Carolina natives will add depth in the frontcourt; Jason Cochroft of Lexington, Byron Graham of Charleston, and Jason McCraw of Blacksburg.

The Blue Hose opened the season with a 2-1 record. In their first contest, the Hose defeated Augusta College 91-57 and then downed Allen University 103-55. The Hose then fell to the Indians of Newberry in overtime; the final score was 65-69. Presbyterian will play their next home game on Dec. 9 at 7 PM.

Lady Hose capture title, off to 6-0 start

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

If you want to know what it takes to be a successful basketball coach, take a look at Lady Blue Hose head coach Beth Couture who is in her seventh season at the helm of PC's basketball program. Perhaps it is the way she earns the respect of her players while enforcing a strict code of dedication to the women's basketball program. Whatever it takes, Couture must know the recipe for success, she has turned the Lady Hose program into the most winning women's basketball program in the school's history.

Subsequent to posting a school-record 23 victory season in 1994-1995 and capturing the Blue Hose's first SAC Tournament championship, the Lady Hose made their second straight NCAA Tournament appearance and emerged with high hopes for the season ahead.

After vaulting to a 2-0 start with wins against USC Aiken and USC-Spartanburg, senior Kristy Tarallo expressed her excitement about the possibility of a great season.

"I have high expectations for our team. We have many goals that we can reach if we play all of our games with the same intensity and effort as we did against USC Aiken," said Tarallo.

From glancing at the roster, it becomes quite apparent that the Lady Hose have a solid basis for their confidence. Four out of five starters return to the line up which features a total of nine returning letter winners.

"I've got fourteen players, any of which I feel like I can put on the floor at any time," Couture said after PC's exhibition match against the Foxcountry All Stars.

Presbyterian's top two starters are guards Chris Mitchum and Kristy Tarallo. Both Mitchum and Tarallo were named to the Pre-Season All SAC Second Team.

Mitchum, who had compiled enough 3 pointers two years ago to rank as PC's all-time most accurate long-range shooter, has already added five more 3 pointers to her 198, making her the only Blue Hose (man or woman) to score over 200 3-point baskets in a career.

Mitchum, a co-captain of the 95-96 squad, holds virtually every three point field goal record at PC and in the SAC. She ranks fifth in Blue Hose history for assists (234), ninth in total scoring (889), and is tied for ninth in scoring average (10.34). Additionally, Mitchum led the Blue Hose in free-throw percentage last year (.769).

Tarallo, who is also a senior and unquestionably PC's most versatile player, sustained a serious injury in the opening game of the Little Four tournament last week. After competing for three virtually injury-free years, Tarallo severed her anterior collateral ligament (ACL) and her meniscus and will most likely be out for the season.

Last season Tarallo, a senior who is listed as a guard/forward, finished in the league's top 10 in five separate categories (scoring, rebounding, steals, assists, and free-throw percentage).

Although she's an incredible scorer, Tarallo also tallied 114 assists last season and had earned eight assists in the Blue Hose's first two contests this year. Obviously, Tarallo will be quite detrimental to the Lady Hose, but hopefully the depth of this year's bench will enable the Hose to put the pieces together and achieve their preseason goals.

The Blue Hose players who will be making the most noticeable impact in the paint is returning starter Jennifer Mims. A senior co-captain of the 95-96 team, Mims has solid rebounding skills and a specialty in shot blocking. Defensively irreplaceable, Mims ranks second in PC's history with 153 rejections in her career.

Coach Couture commented that she has noted significant improvements in Mims' offensive game as well, particularly in her shot selections. Junior guard Karen Neeley and sophomore forward Denzel Barman will round out the starting line up for PC. Neeley enjoyed an outstanding sophomore year, coming off the bench to play in all 30 games and scoring over 220 points for the second consecutive year. As evidenced by her ranking in school history for steals, Neeley possesses impressive quickness. In just two seasons Neeley, has managed 144 steals, averaging 2.3 a game and making her ninth on PC's all-time stealing list. Neeley also appears in PC records for assists and 3 pt field goal percentage.

Barman, who started as a freshman, is a very mature player for her age. Her shooting range extends to the foul line, and she has excellent control in her post moves. Also a solid rebounder, Barman will provide the Blue Hose with another solid figure under the basket.

After losing Tarallo, junior Ellison

Manley started in the final game of the Little Four Tournament at Erskine last week. Manley, who was originally signed as a volleyball player, walked on as a freshman and has been a quiet but essential contributor to the program. Couture feels confident her ability.

"Ellison does a lot of things for us that people don't know about," Couture said. "She has learned to play within the system really well, and that makes her a valuable player to have out on the floor."

Manley believes in Couture's system and even more so in her team. "Honestly, this team has the potential to do more than any team before us. We still have things to work on... but the only thing that can hurt us is ourselves. Team unity is there, talent is there, great coaching is there. I can't wait to see what happens this season," said Manley.

Tonya Kelly, a sophomore who plays with a "wide open Barkley-like style," will provide relief for Barman while Watoma Williams, a junior who plays with rare agility, will be substituting for Mims. With these substitutions, Couture will be able to change the face of her defense and force opponents to alter their plan of attack.

On the perimeter sophomore Alice Ridgill and freshmen Laura Jones and Heather Couch will be bidding for playing time. Couch will be Mitchum's protegee while Jones will probably see time in the three spot, especially since Tarallo may be lost for the season. Freshmen Darah Huffman, Amy Sharpe, and Jennifer Condon round out the Blue Hose line up and should see increased playing time as the season progresses.

Last week the Hose, who are currently 6-0, captured the Little Four Championship by defeating Newberry and then Queens College. Other Blue Hose victories were notched over USC Aiken, USC-S, and Newberry (at home) and Erskine. The Lady Hose play their next home game on Jan. 3; tipoff time is 7 PM in Templeton Center.

Soccer team ends season with loss in NCAA tournament

by Brian Sacco
Managing Editor

The Blue Hose men's soccer team, South Atlantic Conference tournament champions, visited rival USC-Spartanburg on Nov. 10 in a match that would determine who would advance to the finals of the NCAA Division II South Region championship. But for the Blue Hose, who had tied the Rifles in a tightly-contested match on Sept. 16, victory was not in the plan for PC as they fell to USCS, 2-0.

In a match that could have gone either way, the Blue Hose opened up the game attempting to pressure the home team, but found that the Rifles were quick to counter-attack, scoring the only goal of the first half.

"It took us a while to settle down because we wanted to put pressure on them in the first 20 minutes, but they did it to us and were able to get a goal," said head coach Ralph Polson.

Without panicking, PC came out in the second half looking to score an equalizing goal, but was unable to score, forcing them to change their strategy. "We took a chance by pulling a defender and adding an attacker," Polson said. The opportunity never developed and USCS added a second goal on a breakaway run, essentially putting the game out of reach for the Blue Hose.

Finishing the season with a 17-3-1 record and a ranking in the top ten nation, the Blue Hose can look back on this season as a very successful campaign, bringing many team and individual awards. Goalkeeper Jeremy Ransom and midfielder Jimmy May were named First-Team All South region, while co-captain, defender Brian Blackwelder and forward Chris Napier were selected for the second team.

"Although the outcome of the last game was disappointing, the outlook is very positive after the individual meetings. We will be returning 8 of 11 starters and 18 total players from this year's squad. Recruiting is also made easier with the season that we had," said Polson.

The Last Word: For Tommy and Leighton, exams are no sweat

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

Let's talk exams. It's not really a time that anyone likes, except for professors. The oath they take when they get out of graduate school says something like, "I hereby swear that I will take at least some bizarre sexual delight in the anguish of my students." That anguish is manifested in the form of exams. Most of us know that exams are not impossible. Our nicknames aren't Leighton "Exempted every exam because I'm a freakin' genius" Hart and Tommy "Spent exam week last year at Laurens County Hospital in a drug-induced coma" Reiser for nothing. You see, there are creative ways to get out of the stress and heartache. However, there are a few things we need to clear up. First, the historic "all-nighter" is a myth. There is no doubt that many a freshman will get the coffeepot going and settle in for a full night of studying. We did it ourselves. It's more of a rite of passage than the appropriate way to prepare for a test. The only things that will come out of the "all-nighter" are exhaustion and kidney stones from the caffeine. But, if you feel that passing stones is part of the "college experience," have at it. We'll send some flowers to the infirmary for you.

Another issue we need to discuss has to do with the amount of exams you can fit into one day. Exam week is structured so that there are three exam periods per day. At the maximum, people only have two exams in one day. What students need to realize is that our job during exam week is not to "study hard and do your best" as our parents want us to do. On the contrary, the objective is to get the exams behind you and get out of town. That means that you need to talk to your professors and get those exams out of the way during the first two days. By Wednesday afternoon, you will be sitting at home by the pool, sipping frothy margaritas and thinking about the poor lost souls still trapped at school. Or, if you're like us, you'll be at home, huddled up in the closet drinking 99 cent malt liquor and hiding from the sunlight. The point is, don't let anyone tell you that six exams in two days is too much stress. You're in college now, folks. Stress is part of the turf.

What it all comes down to is that it's crunch time, folks. Here we sit at the end of another semester, and what do we really have to show for it? Almost-passing grades in most of our classes? Bitter relations with our professors? Fantastic bottle cap collections? Exams are three days away. To us, it seems like the semester has flown by. The past weeks have been an endless stream of cheap porn and country/western bars. But just because the folks at Roper's know us by name (Richard Montgomery from Indiana and Charles Washington from Vermont, if you know what we're getting at here) doesn't mean that we haven't put enough time into our school-work.

We strolled into the bookstore yesterday, finally buying our texts in time for exams and avoiding all of those long lines associated with early book buying. We got to thinking: does the fact that we have to get our schedules out to see what exams we're expected to show up for mean that exams might be a little tricky this year? Perhaps this will be the year of the open book exam we always talked about or maybe some snow cancellations. Okay, so we're grabbing at straws. Let's face it. Exams are coming quicker than a local can count to ten, but it's nothing to get stressed about. So what if our mid-terms looked like the transcript of a guy stuttering on the word f...un? The key is stress relief, and there are any number of ways that this may be accomplished.

One of our favorite ways to alleviate a little of that pre-exam stress has always been to go and find our "favorite" professor's car. Then we bash it up really well, strip it down, and then put it out in front of GDH for about a week. Perhaps you've witnessed some of our best work. And speaking of our Greenville Hall of Fine Dining, another good way to relieve tension is to lose yourself in an entire seven course meal on one of your cram nights. From the garden fresh salad to the cheese dogs, the last thing you'll be thinking about for a while are those trivial exams. This will take some preparation, though, because there are a few vocabulary words you're going to have to know for after the meal. Study your name really well before you head for GDH, and make sure you can recite your Social Security number and your home phone number. The lady in the emergency room will be quizzing you on these items.

Finally, perhaps the most popular form of stress relief would be the annual "Ken, Bill and Joe's Exam Rush." You see, Dr. Orr, Dean Moncrief and Dean Nixon have a party at their homes each night of exam week and give you a lot of free food. It closely resembles fraternity or sorority rush. But a word to the wise: DO NOT PLEDGE!! Being an exam rush pledge is hell on Earth. We know it all too well. How many times have we gotten that late night phone call? "Tommy, Leighton. We need a favor." And the next thing we know we're breaking into Whiteford's and making Giant Burgers for Brothers Orr, Moncrief and Nixon.

So be ready fellow students. A week at PC with no classes, what could be better? And so what if you have to spend half an hour in a classroom filling in bubbles? Heck, a lot of professors will give you this handy little blue book just for showing up, which is full of at least 10 lined pieces of paper, plenty of space for next semester's notes.

Glover leaving PC, to take position at William and Mary

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

Upon her graduation from PC in 1990, Chon Glover knew that she wasn't quite ready to leave. The Greenwood, S.C. native felt that she still had more to give back to the school. In a fortunate turn of events, the school asked her to stick around for a while, and created a position in the Student Affairs office for her. After 5 and a half years of dedicated service to the school, Glover has decided that it's time to move on. Next week, she will begin work in the Student Affairs office of the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, VA. There, she will be active in academic advising, mentor programs, multi-cultural events and high school leadership training.

"It's a growth opportunity professionally," said Glover. "And it should be a big change from what I do here at PC. Instead of working in an office with 10 or 12 other people, I will be working with 70 or 80 other folks at William and Mary."

"It should be a challenge to make my way in to my job there," explained Glover. "When I started work here, I had just graduated so I knew everyone. But at William and Mary, I'm going into a situation where I don't know anyone. It'll just take time to make those important connections."

During her time at PC, Glover excelled at involving herself in the lives of students.

One part of her job, for which she received no extra pay or recognition, was directing the Student Fellowship Choir. Glover and others started the group during her freshman year, and she has directed it since 1990. Her absence will create a vacancy in the director's position. "I hope that the choir will keep on singing," she said. "Music is a universal language. When you come to a Fellowship Choir concert it doesn't matter who you are or where you come from, everyone is the same." She added Glover enjoys the opportunity to be close to students.

"When you work in Student Affairs, that closeness is so important," said Glover. "The key part of my job is that I reach out to minority students, and help them connect with this campus. I try to prepare students to be leaders. The creation of the Minority Affairs office has done nothing but help students of color on this campus. I have loved running this program, and it's even better running it at my alma mater."

For many PC students Chon Glover has come to symbolize in person the school motto: While we live we serve.

Senior Jennifer Fouse serves this year as the SVS Intern, a position which puts her at the right hand of Glover. Fouse has known Glover for all of her four years at PC. "I got to know Chon through Angelique Cunningham, who lived down the hall from me my freshman year. After that I started working with SVS. When I returned from China last year, I decided that I wanted to go work in Chon's office, so I got a campus job there," said Fouse. "PC can physically replace Chon, but they'll never find someone so personable to do the job. I know that her leaving will be good for her, though. This is such a wonderful opportunity for her," she added. "Chon has done so much to promote cultural pride and understanding on campus. It seems that everything she touches is blessed."

There is no shortage of praise for Glover's work at PC. As SVS One Shots Coordinator, sophomore Phillip Barron spent the Fall semester working closely with her. "I didn't even know Chon until the beginning of this year. Once you get to know her, you quickly realize how much she does for the school, and for the students. I don't know how the campus is going to run without her," said Barron.

Senior Marvin Atchinson has known Glover for all of his 4 years here. "Before I even arrived on campus, Chon wrote me a letter and welcomed me to PC. When I got here, I joined the choir, and I've been with it ever since," said Atchinson. "I hope she'll do the same things at William and Mary that she does here at PC. I'm glad for her."

Senior Melissa Pace has worked as an SVS Coordinator for 2 years. "When I was nominated to be a coordinator, I didn't know Chon at all. We went on a training

Basketbrawl lands PC on ESPN, CNN

With the score deadlocked at 41-41 in the PC-Newberry game, a flurry of activity brought the crowd to their feet - and to the floor.

For over ten minutes authorities struggled to control a crowd of fighting fans that spilled onto the court delaying play for nearly twenty minutes.

According to police and witnesses, trash-talking took place between Newberry supporters and PC supporters in the stands for most of the game until early in the second half talk led to push. The brawl, involving mostly football players from the two schools, spilled from the seats onto the gymnasium floor. Over twenty law enforcement officials were called to the game and flashing blue lights from police cars lined the street in front of Templeton.

Several news crews were present at the game and recorded large segments of the fight on tape and local news stations featured the brawl as a headline story on the night of the fight. By the next day, footage of the incident was carried by the nationwide cable station ESPN and several PC students have reported seeing the incident being carried by the news channel CNN. WSPA in Spartanburg called the melee "an ugly scene where at least a dozen people let fists fly." ESPN described the event correctly as a "full-scale brawl." The all-sports network also reported that one security official was knocked down during the ten-minute long fight; however, no serious injuries were reported.

According to PC's Grey Mayson, Chief of Public Safety, five arrests were made the night of the brawl. Four Newberry students and a friend of a PC student. The arrested have been charged with disorderly conduct which carries a maximum penalty of $500 or 30 days in jail. No PC students have been arrested although continued investigation of the fight will take place. Mayson said, "We will be reviewing the tape and further arrests are likely."

"If we can identify you, we will arrest you," said Clinton Police Chief Carroll Barker.

According to The Greenville News, Clinton Municipal Judge J.R. Braswell has decided that no one will be prosecuted unless offenders from both schools are identified. "It is either going to be everybody or nobody," Braswell said.

College officials are cooperating with the police in reviewing the films and trying to identify those involved in the fight," said Mayson. "The investigation just takes time."

The January 22 PC-Newberry game will be long remembered by supporters of both colleges. The game also has the distinction of being the only basketball game highlighted this week on ESPN that showed, well, no basketball. Perhaps ESPN's stat box summed up the 72-67 Blue Hose victory best by announcing: five arrested.

A winter treat...

Students who were able to return to PC on time to begin the semester were greeted by the rare but beautiful sight of the school with a blanket of snow. Severe weather brought much of the east coast to a halt, delaying many students' return and causing the first day of classes to be postponed. See related story on page 5.

China program offers cultural enrichment offers cultural enrichment, language study by Dr. Ron Burnside

Guest Writer

Presbyterian College students will have the opportunity to study in China in the Fall semester of 1996 in a program offered by the South Atlantic States Association for Asian and African Studies (SASAAAS). The program will be administered by Wake Forest University and will be based at Capital Normal University in Beijing.

Participating students will earn 16 hours of credit, 10 of which will be in Chinese language. In addition to the language course, the students will take two courses taught in English. China in Perspective is a survey course taught by Chinese scholars and is designed to increase the students' understanding of various aspects of Chinese culture. Cultural Ecology of China: A Geographic Perspective will be taught by a member of the faculty of Western Carolina University who will also serve as resident director for the program.

In addition to course work, there will be a variety of activities and excursions in and around Beijing. Students will have the opportunity to attend theatrical performances, films, opera and festival celebrations and to visit temples, the Great Wall and the Ming Tombs.

The cost of the program is approximately $8,120 to which financial aid applies. This cost includes orientation, room, board, tuition, organized cultural excursions, textbooks and other educational materials, visa fees, and roundtrip airfare. The program will be competitive and students must submit applications by March 1. Students should have a minimum 2.8 GPA, demonstrated ability in foreign language study, and serious interest in the Chinese culture.

Students should contact Dr. Burnside at ext. 8358 for information or application forms. For information they may also contact previous program participants Melanie Abrams, Ashley Riddle, Jennifer Fouse, Jesse Frey, Katherine Todd, Leah Fowler and Laura Short.

SGA issues warm welcome for cold months

Welcome back to second semester!!! I hope that you all had a wonderful time at home and are excited to be back at school. This semester we are pleased to be able to use our new SVS van. Thank you so much to all of you who helped SVS make this dream come true. SVS and all of the children will be able to benefit greatly from this project in which the entire school came together as a unified body for a common cause.

This weekend the SGA has planned an awesome Super Bowl party in Calhoun's to kick off the semester. It will begin at 7:00 pm and last until the game is over. There will be free wings during the second and fourth quarter, so come on by and join your fellow Blue Hose while we cheer on either the Steelers or Cowboys.

February will begin with another meeting of The President's Council. At this meeting, we will discuss the possibility of an Official Presbyterian College class ring. If you have comments or concerns about this idea, please come to the meeting on February 2 or contact a member of SGA.

Welcome back to PC!!! West Virginia was cold and snowy, so I sure am glad to be back here. I look forward to serving each of you this semester.

retreat, and that's when I really got to know her. I love her to death. I'm so sad that she's leaving, but her new job is such a great opportunity for her," said Pace.

Sophomore Michael Baughman felt similarly. Baughman met Glover this summer, when she put on a program at the camp where he worked. "Chon has kick-started my involvement here at PC. Through SVS and the Student Fellowship Choir I have come in contact with her a great deal," he said. "It saddens me to see her go, but her new job is a great opportunity for her. If service is the rent we pay for living, Chon has paid in full. Everyone will miss her." Baughman's sentiments are echoed by Glover herself.

"It's bittersweet," said Glover. "It's so hard for me to leave this place and all the people. I've spent the last 9 and a half years of my life here. But I know that what I'm doing will be good for me. These last few days have been hard, but I think once I leave Clinton I'll be more excited than sad."

Senior Wain Wesberry had inspiring words about Glover. "Because of Chon Glover, I am involved in SVS and the Student Fellowship Choir. Chon practices what she believes and what this institution embodies in its mission: to serve God and to serve others. I will never forget what I heard her say at orientation my freshman year: 'It is important for us to celebrate differences, but more important for us to recognize our commonalities,'" said Wesberry. "Chon Glover is to this PC senior what the columns are to Neville Hall: a pillar of strength, and a model of integrity standing tall for all students on this campus to admire."

Program designed to increase PC students' awareness of total wellness

According to Assistant Dean of Students

Alison Bishop, there is much more to personal wellness than simply eating right and exercising.

"We are offering a PC wellness program as a way to show students that wellness is a concept that enters all aspects of daily life. Many students believe if you eat your vegetables and run you have wellness, but being well means taking care of needs in all areas and having a balanced life," says Bishop.

In fact, the program emphasizes six major areas that need attention for total wellness: physical fitness and nutrition, spiritual values and ethics, emotional, environmental, social, family, and community, intellectual, and occupational and vocational.

"This model represents a balanced life for individuals as well as the community as a whole," Bishop said. According to this model, a deficiency in one area of your life can trigger problems elsewhere as the concept of total wellness deals with all areas of one's life.

Stickers such as this will denote activities intended to promote student's sense of wellness.

should call Alison Bishop, James Koeppel, or Clare Lee

Bishop is currently in the process of scheduling a variety of programs that will deal with wellness issues throughout the course of the semester. The programs will be co-sponsored by various other organizations on campus. A wellness newsletter is being prepared which will help inform students of upcoming events and provide additional information on wellness. A wellness fair is being planned for April; however, the exact date has not yet been set.

Recycle PC: Active and effective on campus

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

College students, for one reason or another, are loyal consumers of aluminum cans. Last semester, PC students filled recycling bins with approximately 700 pounds of cans. There's no telling how many cans didn't make it in to the bins. What you didn't know, though, is that the student body has been making money with those cans. Recycle PC, the school's environmental club, collects the cans from the dorms and class buildings and recycles them. The group of 15 members meets twice monthly and picks up cans every other week. At present, the group has the means only to carry out aluminum recycling, but talks are under way with Wal-Mart to possibly construct a storage shed near the maintenance building to get a paper recycling program underway.

Recycle PC is also responsible for the annual Earth Day celebration, which is tentatively scheduled for April 21st. This outdoor festival provides the school with musical entertainment and an opportunity to learn more about environmental issues. Tables with brochures and petitions will be set up. The group uses the funds raised from can collection to fund the event. "The more cans we can recycle, the more money we will have to spend on Earth Day," said member Rich Lassiter.

The organization also deals with other environmental issues on campus. Last semester, the group wrote an open letter to the administration, calling for more environmentally sound policies. At the heart of the letter was concern over the widespread use of styrofoam in PC's canteen and Greenville Dining Hall. According to Recycle PC member Kingsley Moore, the canteen has since agreed to look into ordering cardboard carry-out boxes. GDH has made no promises. Other matters in the letter include identifying alternatives to the chemical pesticides used in dorm rooms and avoiding wasteful water use in grass sprinkling. The letter, which gathered 300 student signatures has been sent to college officials. "Basically, we just wanted to bring these issues to the attention of the administration. We wanted to let them know that students are concerned about these things," said Moore.

Lassiter and Moore agree that student recycling can still come a long way. "We were very pleased with the volume of cans we collected last semester, but there's still a lot that can be done," said Lassiter. "We wish that more people would use the recycling bins," said Moore. "There's a lot of cans that wind up in the trash cans instead," she added.

Lassiter is proud of the progress his club has made. "It's a win-win situation, not only are we saving landfill space and conserving energy by recycling, but we raised $285 last semester to keep the whole thing going," he said.

After months of frantic fund-raising, Student Volunteer Services was able to replace their old van with a bright and shining new Dodge Ram van. Various student organizations raised over $7,000 during their campaign. During the campaign, Student Government Association members sent letters to family friends and alumni asking for support. The van arrived on campus just before students left for Winter Break.

Beamstalk, Seven Miles keep the campus rockin'

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

It seems like the perfect lifestyle. Go to class during the week, and take off on the weekend to go play a show somewhere. It's a lifestyle that a few PC students get to experience. Three in particular have found great success in the music business.

Senior Ben Summey spent most of his high school days writing songs and playing in garage bands. The Voice Performance major didn't imagine when he came here that he'd be in a band playing shows around campus nearly every week. Senior Scott Keckik's story is similar. When Keckik started taking piano lessons several years ago, he had no idea where it would take him. Those piano lessons brought him to PC. He originally came to school with intentions of majoring in Piano, but has since had a change of heart. The Fine Arts major didn't suspect what would become of his musical inclinations. What did become of those inclinations was Beamstalk.

Long time friends Summey and Keckik got together to write and play a few songs at the beginning of this year, and decided that they wanted to get serious. A few weeks later, they played their first show together at a PC fraternity house. Since then, everything has fallen into place for the two. Their next performance was at the Blue Sox Festival, PC's Homecoming pep rally. Shows at The Dog House and Calhoun's have followed. They are scheduled to play tonight in Calhoun's. Next month, Summey and Keckik will spend time in the studio, recording and producing a demo tape. While a portion of their live set is made up of covers of other bands, the demo will include only original songs. Beamstalk caters to all musical tastes. "It's hard to say what style music we play," said Summey. "We play everything from David Alan Coe to the Indigo Girls. Basically, it's good, fun music with a little funk," he added.

Sophomore Will Pugh knows the lifestyle as well. The Greenville native plays rhythm guitar for the band Seven Miles. Seven Miles is at Clemson University what Beamstalk is to PC. The four other members of Pugh's band study at Clemson. He was introduced to the band by a close friend, whom he played in a band with during high school. Shortly thereafter, he was asked to join the band as the rhythm guitarist, keyboardist and backup vocalist. Pugh usually spends at least one night of his weekend playing with his band at bars or fraternity parties. While TD's in Clemson is their "home club," Seven Miles has played shows all over the state, from Clemson to Wofford to USC. Pugh, who joined the band in the summer of 1995, writes a good portion of the band's original songs. This summer, Seven Miles will take their music into the studio to record a CD containing 10 original songs. "Being in Seven Miles has been a great experience for me. I love playing live, you never know what's going to happen," said Pugh. Indeed, that is true. During a show at Clemson this summer, a wooden deck the band was performing on collapsed, and Seven Miles' lead guitarist had to be taken away in an ambulance. Seven Miles made their PC debut on January 12th, when they played for a fraternity party. Despite the sometimes demanding schedule, Pugh remains fairly laid back about his role in the band. "As far as the future is concerned, I don't know where Seven Miles is going to take us," said Pugh. "We're going to record our CD and then just take it from there."

MSU attends conference, helps set up multicultural visitation day

by Elizabeth Hartman
Staff Writer

This past weekend several PC students attended the Black Student Leadership Conference in Richmond, Virginia. Among these students were Minority Student Union President Angelique Cunningham, Vice President Dean Dawson and Treasurer Marvin Atchinson. The students attended various workshops on leadership, relationships, and other points of interest.

Nikki Giovanni and Patricia Russel MacLeod were among several inspirational figures who spoke to the conference delegates. "The speakers talked about ways for us to build a better world for ourselves and our children," said Dawson. "As MSU officers, the overall trip was a great benefit. The skills we learned are skills we can take to make the organization stronger. It was a great help to the whole group," he added.

The students are pleased to have attended the conference. "I was glad I went because I got to find out that not everyone is leadership material," offered junior Faye Jackson.

MSU has also worked with Laura Meyers and Admissions to plan a Multicultural Visitation Day. The date for the visitation is set for February 3rd. The event was created by the admissions office and student leaders to help recruit a more diverse freshman class. Associate Professor of Political Science Dr. Booker Ingram will speak at the visitation luncheon as well as PC alumnus Sharon Williams Addison. Addison is a Vice President with NationsBank and resides in North Carolina. During her time at PC, Addison was active on campus, participating in activities ranging from MSU to athletics. Other events have been planned for this day, including a parent panel discussion, a student rap session, an academic fair, and campus tours. The students will be invited to spend the night on campus with PC students. This will hopefully prove to be a very rewarding day. If any PC student knows of a high school student they feel should be invited, contact Laura Meyers in the Admissions office.

Winter weather puts the freeze on travel for PC students

by Charles Smith
Staff Writer

PC's Spring semester 1996 got off to a rather slippery and late start. A massive cold front that dumped two to three feet of snow on Washington, D.C. and New York also left two to four inches of snow and ice on the ground in upstate South Carolina. Many major interstates such as I-85, I-26 and I-20 became impassable and extremely dangerous due to the severe winter weather. Some students were delayed as much as two days in returning to school. Junior Matt Bishop explained his decision to postpone his return to school, "Safety is the key, and survival is more important than registration." Many other students felt the same.

In response to the icy weather the Academic Affairs Office decided to extend registration and postpone the first day of classes for the spring semester by one day. However, the administration, as well as the faculty, may decide to make that day up. Administrative Assistant to the Academic Dean, Ann Martin, said that the Academic Affairs Committee has decided to leave the decision within the individual faculty member's discretion.

Ms. Martin said that professors could make up the lost day by having class either on a Saturday or at night. In addition, some faculty members might decide to have class on what would normally be the reading day just prior to final exams. However, the faculty has not formally accepted the Academic Affairs Committee's proposal. Ms. Martin said that a final decision by the faculty members should be forthcoming.

Student reaction on the Academic Affairs Committee's proposal was mixed. A number of students said that having class on the reading day was not a major problem. However, some students were not very supportive of the idea of having class on a Saturday or at night. Students will have to wait and see what the faculty will decide.

In addition to causing problems for students, the winter weather caused some PC students to be caught in the public eye. Senior Morris Lyles and junior Robert Lesley were interviewed by WIS-TV from Columbia. Lyles said, "We were having a snowball fight and the WIS van just happened to drive by." Junior Windham Prigden flagged the van down, and Lyles and Lesley, who are both from Columbia, were able to get on camera interviews.

Student complaints lead to four arrests

by Brian Sacco
Managing Editor

Several calls by Presbyterian College students on January 11 to Public Safety led to the arrest of four adults, two men and two women, for trespassing in Smythe, Belk, and Clinton dorms. Public Safety, acting on information supplied by female students in the dorms, were able to apprehend the suspects without incident. The four suspects, all employees of Sun Circuit Company of Clearwater, Florida, were selling magazines by telling students that they were trying to raise money for a trip or were trying to complete a course for a degree in communication. But it was the students' quick thinking that allowed the Public Safety officers to execute a successful arrest.

Chief Gray Mayson noted that the students were the reason for the success of the operation. "The calls we received were enough reason for us to investigate the matter," he said. He added that he realized something was not right when he telephoned the Dean of Students Office to find out if there had been a permit issued for the solicitation and found out that no such permit had been issued. "It is very rare for a permit to be issued for solicitation in the dorms, but if the Dean of Students feels the solicitation will be of benefit to the students he will allow it. There are also signs posted on the dorms prohibiting solicitation and trespassing."

One student reported that her wallet had disappeared after the suspects had left her room, but neither the wallet nor any other items were found on the suspects after a full body search. Chief Mayson reported that the suspects could then only be charged with trespassing. Charged in the case was Austin D. White of Clearwater, Florida; Curtis W. Cooke of Stanford, Kentucky; Alicia Ann Polletta of Daytona Beach, Florida; and Sarah Wells Kane of Clearwater, Florida. The suspects were then turned over to the Clinton Police Department where they were released after posting bond. The suspects did not appear in court, there fore pleading guilty and forfeiting the $304 bond.

Freshman Michelle Ashill kept the two female suspects in her room until Public Safety officers could apprehend them. "The two girls said that they were communicating students trying to earn points for a trip to the Bahamas. I didn't suspect anything was wrong until Kane Donahue told me to keep them in the room because Public Safety was on the way to arrest them," said Ashill.

Chief Mayson said, "Anytime a student feels that something is going on in the dorms or anywhere on campus is unusual or illegal, he or she should contact Public Safety immediately."

Lady Hose still in hunt for SAC championship despite losses

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

People have always regarded the men's ACC tournament as the most competitive tournament in the nation, often placing even higher than the men's NCAA tournament. However, sports fans can expect the 1996 Women's South Atlantic Conference tournament to put all spectators on the edge of their seats.

Not only have the Lady Hose had an up and down season, but other teams in the conference have gone down the rocky road of SAC play as well. With the majority of the teams in league hovering around the .500 mark, there's no telling where each team will stand at the end of the season.

At the halfway point of the season, the Presbyterian Women's Basketball team is posting a 9-6 overall record and are 2-3 in conference play. Though their record doesn't put them on the path for achieving some of the goals they set at the beginning of the season, a shift in focus and a remaining desire to win could pull the Blue Hose through the rough times they will face.

The injury of senior guard Kristy Tarallo and freshman Laura Jones, who was averaging 7.8 ppg, along with the loss of senior forward Jennifer Mims, have affected the teams depth and stability, but there still remains an incredible amount of talent among the healthy Hose. Like the old cliché states, it's not the size of the dog in the fight that matters, it's the size of the fight in the dog. One person quickly comes to mind in connection with this cliché, Karen Neeley.

"We've got to out hustle other teams," Neeley said. "The good thing is we keep getting better and we're learning from our mistakes. The games we've lost, we have beaten ourselves."

A junior guard, Neeley has consistently logged high numbers in virtually every category. Neeley leads the Blue Hose in scoring (13.3 ppg), three-point shooting percentage (37%), and steals with 37 so far this force for the Lady Hose, either doing it on her own (12.8 ppg) or setting up plays for someone else (4.1 apg). The starting lineup is rounded out by freshman point guard Heather Couch. Couch, who has season Neeley is second on the team in assists (3.7 apg) and field goal percentage (44.6%), and is third in free throw percentage (71.9%) and total rebounds with 76.

Other starters include sophomore Denzel Barman (8.3 ppg, 7.7 rpg), and junior Watoma Williams (6.5 ppg, 5.8 rpg), who have both stepped up to provide solid scoring and pull down rebounds. Senior Chris Mitchum continues to be a playmaking Improvement has definitely become the focus of the Blue Hose as they begin the second half of their season. "We have so much talent," Manley said. "It just a matter of us deciding to use that talent over the course of a whole game. Just because you're up by twenty points doesn't mean you're going to win a game."

The Lady Hose will travel to Elon tomorrow for a 4:30 game, and they will return home on the 29th to face USC-Spartanburg at 7:00.

Four Blue Hose Players Named to All-American Teams

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

Presbyterian College's Jimmy May from Charleston, South Carolina, Jeremy Ransom from Chapin, South Carolina, and Rebecca Hardman from Tucker, Georgia, have all been named to the 1995 NSCAA/Unibro Division II All-America First Team as voted on by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America. In addition, Liz Roe from Greenville, South Carolina, has been named to the Second Team All-America by the NSCAA.

May and Ransom become the first men's soccer All-Americans at Presbyterian since Will Lindstrom earned second team honors in 1992. May and Ransom are the first two players in Blue Hose men's soccer history to be named to the Division II All-America First Team.

May, a junior midfielder and 1993 graduate of James Island High School, finished second on the team in scoring with 19 points on seven goals and five assists. A two-time all-region selection, May earned First Team All-South Atlantic Conference honors for the second season in a row and was named the Most Valuable Player of the 1995 South Atlantic Conference Tournament.

Ransom, a sophomore goalkeeper and 1994 graduate of Chapin High School, posted a 1.06 goals against average with 85 saves and six shutouts in 1995 en route to earning first team all-region and all-conference accolades. Ransom allowed one goal in three South Atlantic Conference Tournament matches and was named to the all-tournament squad for his efforts.

Hardman and Roe join Missy Butler (1990, 1991, & 1992) and Charly Brazel (1994) on the list of women's soccer all-American players at Presbyterian College.

Hardman, a junior forward and 1993 graduate of Tucker High School, paced the Blue Hose in scoring for the second straight season. Presbyterian's all-time leading scorer, Hardman, a GTE Academic All-America pick a year ago, tallied 39 points on 16 goals and seven assists. Hardman earned First Team All-South Atlantic Conference and First Team All-South Region honors in both 1994 and 1995.

Roe, a senior defender and 1992 graduate of Greenville High School, led the Blue Hose defense in 1995 while scoring three goals on the year. In addition, Roe, a GTE Academic All-District pick in 1994, earned all-conference and all-region accolades this season.

10-5 Hose still have eyes on SAC-8 title

Coming off of a big conference win against Lenoir-Rhyne, the PC Men's Basketball Team moved quickly and confidently into mid-season with an unblemished record of 3-0 in the South Atlantic Conference. Their overall standing was improved with the defeat of Anderson College, lifting their record to 9-3 and pushing them into the national rankings in scoring defense. Coach Gregg Nibert attributes their success to dedication and hard work on the defensive end, believing that this is the key to keeping his team in the win column.

However, the Blue Hose unfortunately suffered two tough conference losses last week to Catawba (75-84) and Gardner-Webb (82-93). PC shot 58% from the field against Gardner-Webb, but it wasn't enough to make up for the 93 points the Bulldogs were able to tally.

The team has seen a few rough turns with the recent injury of sophomore center Steve Rydzewski and the sidelining of freshman insider Eric Burrow against Catawba. Despite these obstacles, Nibert believes that his team is playing extremely well under the circumstances. "We've had to pull together and tighten up a bit, and we're playing now with a lot of confidence," Nibert said.

Undoubtedly, there is plenty of action going on, from impressive play by starting guard Patrick Johnson (7.9 ppg/2.4 rpg) to play off the bench from Brian Franklin (8.0 ppg/3.7 rpg) and Erik Rothwell.

Rothwell pulled through for the Blue Hose against Anderson with a season-high performance of 14 points and 7 rebounds.

"Our key lately has been our bench," Nibert said, citing play from freshman Byron Graham and senior Billy Murphy. Also, consistently solid performances by offensive leaders Andre Newman (13.5 ppg/4.7 rpg) and Ronnie Cannon (14.1 ppg/6.9 rpg), along with the play of freshman Tyler Weiss (7.5 ppg/2.9 rpg), have helped PC defeat several challenging opponents.

The team will definitely miss the contributions of Rydzewski (8.3 ppg/4.6 rpg) and Burrow (8.6 ppg/6.2 rpg), but hope to get them back on the court as soon as possible.

Coach Nibert is most pleased with the team dynamics. "The biggest thing is that they're playing well together as a team," said Nibert. Even though Saturday's loss to Gardner-Webb was disappointing, the Blue on one, and Johnson on one, proving that many of the Blue Hose are capable of stepping up to make the big plays.

Presbyterian will be on the road for their next three games starting with Elon tomorrow, Voorhees on February 1st, and Carson-Newman on the 3rd. They will face Mars Hill at home on February 7th.

Intramurals points race close, much action ahead

by Jeffrey Shell
Guest Writer

The 1995-96 intramural season has gotten off to a great start. There have been many changes in the rules of sports and when they are being played. One big change was the move of the Intramural Office. It is now located in Springs Campus Center (room #112) across from the vending machines in the old SUB office. The year started off with softball. Pi Kappa Phi won the men's A league division, the Women's Basketball team won the women's A-league, Young Guns II won men's B-league, and Support Hose won women's B-league. Softball was followed by flag football. Once again, Pi Kappa Phi won the men's A-league with the Matrices Police winning the men's B-league. To the women's division the Mounting Sloths won A-league, and the Attic Bats won B-league. There were also several other events offered this semester. A cross country race, tennis, and eight ball, ping pong, and soccer tournaments provided an interesting selection of activities for students to participate in.

In the A-league points race, Zeta Tau Alpha has taken a strong lead with 310 points. They are followed by Alpha Delta Pi in second place with 165 points and the Mounting Sloths in third with 140 points. In the men's division, Theta Chi is leading with 360 points. Pi Kappa Phi is running a close second, just 61 points behind with 299, and Pi Kappa Alpha rounds out the top three with 125 points.

There are numerous events coming up this semester. After the conclusion of volleyball, there will be a double elimination indoor soccer tournament. The intramural basketball season will begin with a Basketball Bonanza/Schick Super Hoops competition on the fourth of February. The season will start on the fifth of February. Students should watch the intramural bulletin board for details on registration.

Other events that will be offered this semester are soccer, racquetball, swimming, sports trivia, eight ball and ping pong tournaments, and a double elimination softball tournament.

With the all of the events taking place this semester, there will hopefully be an activity offered for everyone. A complete pamphlet on the rules and policies of the Intramural Sports Department will be available later in the semester. The pamphlet will include in-

The Last Word: Psychic predictions for 1996

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

Well PC land, here we all are again. It's another semester and a brand new year. It's 1996, the astrological year of the Blue Hose. After just a few weeks of the year behind us, we can tell that something quite different than 1995 is in store for us. Just look back at '95 and the differences are very clear. What did '95 give us? The movie Showgirls...that's it. But in '96, oh so much is in store. There's the Olympics, Presidential elections, the opening of that hairy peach thing across the quad, and of course, Showgirls...out on VHS. Word has it that all the rest of the stars of TV's Saved By The Bell will be getting their own movies in '96. But how much fun could it really be to see a movie with a naked A.C. Slater in it? Actually...well, nevermind. As the calendar turns and our vintage '95 Mad Dog becomes ripely aged, you may be feeling a little bit timid about stepping into '96 with all the surrounding hoopla. Ahhh, but once again we have the answer. We have our good friend, Michael Baughman. Let us explain. It seems as though, upon spraying a fresh coat of lead paint on his loft a few weeks back, Michael has attained what many would term "psychic" powers.

We first learned of these powers a few nights after arriving back on campus. Scene: local hangout spot. Baughman to Tommy.... "I bet you get turned down by 20 girls tonight." No sooner was it said than done. Not catching on to this obviously supernatural turn of events, Michael said to Leighton, "You, too, will be rejected by every girl in the room." Were the stars aligned in such a way as to be righting his premonitions, or was this just another bad night at the bowling alley? We had to put Michael to the test to make sure this was no fluke. "Guess the meat of the day in GDH for five consecutive days, Mr.

Baughman." As if possessed, he rattled off "beef steak, beef steak, veal, beef fritters, veal." Five days and five meats later, we knew that such powers must only be used for the good of mankind. We have set out, with Baughman's aid, to make predictions for 1996. We do this to better serve you, the people of Presbyterian College, in hopes of giving you a preview of what's in store.

Baughman: "There will be a strong third party showing in the Presidential race, leading up to the election of our first female president. My guess for the nominee would be the lovely Ricki Lake."

Whoa, Michael. First pitch, curve ball. Look, it's like we told you. If we let you do this predicting gig for our article, you'll have to take it seriously. But we can make something of this. Lake is a popular woman. She could bring about tremendous change in this nation. Most likely to occur: coins previously engraved with the words "E pluribus unum" will sport the phrase "Tell it to the hand." Moving right along to the next prediction.

Baughman: "Following Michael Jackson's divorce from Lisa Marie Presley, he'll feel a big weight off his shoulders. He'll rise again this year to become to greatest pop star in the land."

Way to go! That's more like it, Baughman. We hear what you're saying loud and clear. That old hag was nothing but trouble for our one-gloved messiah. If you're out there Mr. Jackson, hear the masses speak. We have all the albums, and all the action figures, even the hard to find pet monkey. Sure, maybe in third grade friends snickered when we jerked our hair and wore red leather jackets like yours, but we just jumped in their face and said, "Beat it!" And who can't see that the whole child molestation thing was a set-up by Michael Bolton to reduce sales of your award winning History double disc. We're with you big guy. Baughman says you'll be big, and our jackets are still in the closet, so hit the road M.J. and show 'em who's Bad.

Baughman: "The Huddle House patty melt will do great things. It will bring people together. It will resolve problems. Its spiritual significance will be discovered." Okay. Not quite what we expected, but we can work with this one. The patty melt, by its very nature, has its feet planted deeply in America. We rely on American cows to produce the hearty beef patty that forms the core of the sandwich. The savory onions are grown on American soil. What kind of cheese goes on a patty melt, folks? Here's a hint: it rhymes with "Gamerican." If you guessed American, slap yourself on the back for figuring out the puzzle, Sherlock. The bread which makes up the exterior of the sandwich is made of wholesome wheat, grown by hard-working and federally-subsidized farmers. So by investing is something as simple as a Huddle House patty melt, you are investing in the lives of good and decent Americans, and that in some way is spiritual, right?

That killed a little bit of the momentum we built up with the whole Michael Jackson thing, but come on, Baughman. What else do you have for us?

Baughman: "The United States will run away with the most medals in this year's Olympics."

Well, that's more like it. And there may be some truth to that. As the Olympics grow in participation and popularity, the field of events evolves with it. A few years ago, tennis improved its status from that of an "exhibition" sport to that of "medal" sport. A number of new events that have gained medal status could provide the United States with more gold medals. You can count out most of the big events such as, the decathlon, shotput, steeplechase, and marathon. We tend not to excel in the areas of pure skill and athleticism. But it's likely that we have the edge in the new sports. "Being really lazy" could bring us a gold, as well as "Drive-by shooting." There's also a new exhibition sport called "Killing two people and getting away with it," and we think we know just who might be involved in this one.

Baughman: "As far as budgetary battles are concerned, I think 1996 will see a reshaping of the partisan objectives of our modern politicians. Feeding off public distrust and anger over the previous shutdowns, you will see the two major parties coalesce in hopes of being as non-partisan as possible in the public eye." Uh, yeah. We can see that happening, too.

Baughman: "In a freak accident, a GDH travaytor will go wild and disembowel several students."

This is not to say it hasn't happened before. Sadly enough, a disaster such as this still probably wouldn't make anyone think seriously about changing the GDH situation. Our suggestion to spice the place up a bit would be to hire John Popper from Blues Traveler to pick menus for us, because we all know he wouldn't lead us astray. Also, maybe they could use that big stereo system in there to pump in a little Hootie at meal times. Anything is possible in GDH, right?

Well boys and girls, there it is. You can probably go ahead and chalk up these events as fact and ease through 1996 in a new light. We all owe many thanks to our resident psychic on campus, Mr. Baughman. As for us, we're back to the bowling alley. A certain source seems to think that number 21 could be our lucky number. And sure we have our doubts. But with a fresh can of paint in Michael's left hand, a patty melt in the other, and a little Billie Jean blasting through the eight-track, anything can happen. Welcome to 1996!

College officials consider adoption of an official PC class ring

by Laura Jacobs
Staff Writer

Tradition. For Presbyterian College, the word evokes visions of bagpipes, convocations, and outdoor graduations, oak-lined plazas and columns on buildings that have stood for decades. Tradition is a central tenet of the "PC experience," and the college, specifically the Office of the Dean of Students, is considering adding to that tradition by adopting an official school ring.

"Many years ago, the college had an official kind of ring that was the only kind of ring you could order. Now there is some interest in going back to an official ring program where the student body would design a ring—one for a male and one for a female," said Joe Nixon, Dean of Students at PC.

"The school gravitated away from the official ring concept in the late sixties during a period of time when people wanted more options," said Nixon. Restoring the official ring concept is "something that we have been looking at for a time, and I think we're at a point to move forward on this concept," he continued.

Nixon made a brief presentation to the Presidents' Council which met February 1 to get feedback from students on the idea

According to Nixon, "The SGA thought [having an official ring] was a good idea. It was suggested that input be considered from a wider representation of the student body, and Presidents' Council was suggested." The Presidents' Council is comprised of the presidents of all clubs and organizations on campus.

The next step, according to Nixon, is to "have the student body vote on the style ring that would be the official ring. We'll have some samples and some drawings of different styles for the students to choose from." The vote would probably be held in Springs Campus Center at the end of February in conjunction with SGA Executive Council elections.

The option of an official ring does not mean that PC students could not choose an individually designed ring from the jeweler or company of their choice, only that they would have to pursue other options on their own rather than through the school. "A person would not have to buy this ring, but it would be the official ring." It would be a symbol that would have more meaning through the years, and you could identify it as special to PC," said Nixon.

Nixon added that having an official school ring would potentially increase sales as it has at other institutions which have adopted rings of their own, because "people identify it as not just a piece of jewelry but as a symbol." The company that "wishes to design a ring for us feels that PC is a school where this would be popular—we have a lot of tradition and a lot of loyalty to the school," he said.

Other schools such as the College of Charleston and Emory University have enjoyed an increase in ring purchases since the institution of their official ring programs. Among the schools which work with the Masters of Design jewelry company through Milestone Marketing to perpetuate their official ring programs are Clemson University, The Citadel, Davidson College, and Wake Forest University. Con-

PC launches onto the World Wide Web

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

A walk through the Harrington-Peachtree Center PowerMac lab on any given weeknight will reveal dozens of students, staring into computer screens, lost in cyberspace. For some, the lab offers a place to research a topic for a term paper or class discussion, for others, it serves as a way to enter a vote for ESPN's ESPY awards. How is it that both could be done in the same location? The answer is simple: access to the World Wide Web. Two PC computer labs are now equipped with software making use of the Web much simpler and more efficient than ever before. Using Netscape, a student can access information from any corner of the world. In addition to making the Web accessible to students, the school has made itself accessible to other Web users through the establishment of a Presbyterian

College Web site

PC's Web site came on-line in mid-October, after months of consultation with Renaissance Interactive of Columbia. College administrators and Renaissance graphic designers and computer technicians worked closely to ensure that PC's home page would be unique and innovative. "Renaissance did such a great job," said Senior Director of Public Relations Grant Vosburgh. "We were hoping to really capture the feel of Presbyterian College, and make the site as interactive as possible." The result of their work is a PC Web site which enables users to check on alumni activities, search the campus phone book, or even apply for admission on-line. "We know of at least one high school student in particular who scheduled a campus visit and tour after seeing the PC home page," said Vosburgh.

As a public relations tool, Vosburgh admits that the Web site is an invaluable resource. "With the printed communications we send out, the viewbooks and magazines, there is only a certain amount that the reader can learn from those. They have only the

Judicial Council holds trials for Honor Code and Code of Conduct Violations

The Judicial Council held a hearing on January 26, 1996 at 1:00 P.M. in the Harrington-Peachtree Church Academic Center. Two students were charged with an Honor Code violation of cheating.

The accused plead not guilty. The prosecution presented its case, calling four witnesses, and the defense was given the opportunity to present their case, calling seven witnesses. After the prosecution and defense presented their summaries, the Council went into deliberation.

The Council found the accused guilty and imposed the normal penalty; however the Council decided to let the accused receive credit for last semester with a grade of "F" in the class in which the offense took place. The accused were then suspended for the next two semesters -- Spring 1996 and Fall 1996.

The accused were read the sentence and reminded of the right to appeal the findings of the Judicial Council to the Appeals Board.

Judicial proceedings as presented in the Knapsack were followed. With no further business the case was adjourned.

An appeal was heard on January 31, 1996 at 4:30 P.M. The Appeals Board reduced the sentence imposed by the Judicial Council to only one semester suspension.

The Judicial Council held a hearing on January 29, 1996 at 6:00 P.M. in the Harrington-Peachtree Church Academic Center. Five students were charged with two Code of Conduct violations: vandalism and alcohol violations.

The accused plead guilty. The prosecution presented its case, calling two witnesses and the defense was given the opportunity to present their case, calling five witnesses. After the prosecution and defense presented their summaries, the Council went into deliberation.

The Council decided the punishment to be 32 hours of community service to be completed by April 15, $47 restitution, and for four of the accused to attend an alcohol awareness class.

The accused were read the sentence and reminded of their right to appeal the findings of the Judicial Council to the Appeals Board.

Judicial proceedings as presented in the Knapsack were followed. With no further business the case was adjourned.

Leaders of campus political organizations tell who they support and why

College Democrats endorse Clinton for President

As the presidential election in November approaches, it becomes increasingly important for the Presbyterian College Young Democrats to stand behind a candidate. We plan to endorse Bill Clinton for the presidency of the United States. In his past few years in office, Bill Clinton has accomplished some remarkable things. He has decreased the national deficit for three consecutive years, and under his presidency, unemployment and inflation are the lowest they have been since 1968. During Bill Clinton's term, seven million new jobs have been created. The federal workforce under Clinton is the smallest it has been since John F. Kennedy was president. Bill Clinton's term in office has created 50,000 community service and college-aid opportunities and 800,000 Pell Grants for eligible students.

The Young Democrats on campus pride ourselves on being a diverse group. We all have our own minds and individual opinion, but as an organization, we support the candidate our party nominates.

College Republicans choose Dole for President

When one looks at the qualifications for president, one must consider a candidate's character, virtue and leadership experience. Our country needs a president who is proud of our values and who believes in our people. America needs a president who will reconnect the federal government with the common sense values of the citizens. We need a president who will stand up for what is right and reassert American interests whenever they are challenged. The liberal media tends to think that law abiding citizens who attend church and tend to their families are some sort of threat to America. However, without this sense of personal responsibility one is not a true American. To be American is to be responsible for yourself.

Bob Dole has been tested and has always found the strength in the values that make this country great: faith in God, belief in the community, personal responsibility and love of the family. Bob Dole supports the conservative agenda of: freedom of responsibility, and love of neighbor. He believes that men and women of faith are the glue that holds America together. Therefore, this is why I am endorsing Bob Dole as a candidate for President of the United States.

SGA an excellent opportunity for PC students

February can be a hard month at PC—the excitement over all of your Christmas presents has just worn off and Spring Break is still a month away! Well, I have something I would like to share with you that could possibly break these mid-winter blues—election time for Student Government Association. In the next few weeks, elections will be held for both Executive Council and class of free positions. It is during this time that I would like to present you with a challenge. If you have concerns about the future of this institution and you feel like your ideas are not being listened to or if you have good ideas for the direction of the student body, then I challenge you to run for one of these positions. Make your voice and your concerns known campus-wide.

It doesn't take someone who spends every night in the SGA office or in Dean Nixon's office discussing events at PC, you can just be willing to go the extra mile for the rest of the student body. I can honestly say that my experiences over the past four years while serving on SGA have been ones that have taught me the most about college life. I have learned about the happenings of the school from the administration, faculty, staff and students. I have learned so much more than any words on a resume can ever describe, and you can too!

It has been a privilege to serve the students for four years in various positions on SGA. Any SGA member will be more than happy to tell you what SGA is really about. So as the posters hit the campus once again and advertise all of the candidates, take a few minutes to seriously look at them and decide who is the most qualified and who can help the students the most. When you hear people talking about negative things at this school, know that you have the opportunity to make a difference. SGA could be a welcome difference in your life—give it a try!

Finnish student adds variety to campus

Most of us struggle through three semesters of foreign language at PC. A small minority excel in a language, an even smaller number become fluent. Imagine going to college in Finland, taking classes taught in Swedish, and majoring in English. For one PC student, that linguistic feat is a reality. land, it's really not a big deal. Lindstrom, who attends the University of Jyväskylä, is an English major and a Business Administration minor. "I am fluent in English, Swedish, and Finnish. I know limited Spanish and French, and enough German to get by," said Lindstrom. She hopes to carry those language skills into the business world with her after school. "I want to be with people, meet with people and use my language skills in business," she added.

Lindstrom is a participant in a program that PC English professor Dr. Rachel Stewart helped pioneer. When Kristiina learned that she might have the opportunity to come study in the United States, she resolved that it was something she wanted to do. About 5 years ago, Lindstrom toured the country with her family on a Greyhound bus. "We saw a lot," said Lindstrom, "but I wanted to see the U.S. with more depth." Her tour of the U.S. took her all over, from New York City, to the Florida Keys to San Francisco. She hopes to be able to travel after the completion of the semester, and wants to return to San Francisco and New York City. "I would like to stay a travel for a while, but I will have to ask my dad about that first," she said. Travelling is nothing new to Lindstrom. Family vacations have taken her all over the world, everywhere from Cuba to Africa. She explained that the result of so much travel is that she has learned to pack lightly. "Because Europe is so small, sometimes my parents will just ask if I want to go to Germany for the weekend, and later in the evening we are on the way," she said. "I only brought one piece of luggage here with me. I decided not to bring much luggage, but I plan to shop a lot while I'm here. I have my dad's credit card."

During her stay here, Lindstrom is taking classes in politics, economics, and Spanish. "I did not take English classes because the English we study in Finland is different. Here, English classes are a lot of literature. In Finland, I study English to use in business. We don't do as much literature," said Lindstrom. In a few days, she will be travelling to Washington, D.C. with the Political Science department on their annual Spring Break trip.

Lindstrom was careful to come to the United States without any large expectations, to keep from being disappointed. She points out, though, that everything is going well for her and that she is enjoying herself. "The teachers here are so good and helpful. Sometimes I have a hard time keeping up, and they understand," she explained. "The school is really beautiful and safe. I don't have to worry all the time. The people are so nice."

The only major culture shock Lindstrom has experienced has been living in Clinton. "There are 170,000 people in the city where I go to school," she said. "Clinton is much smaller."

Nixon addresses concerns about official ring, student input essential

cerns were expressed by several of the members of the Presidents' Council over whether the new ring would be too expensive for many students to afford. The concerns were somewhat allayed when Nixon quoted the probable price of the ring and several members of the council, who had already bought their own individually styled class rings, recognized the official ring as less expensive than those they had bought. Nixon added that prices "should vary according to the price of gold."

Several members of the council were also concerned about how to market the ring so that many students would want to purchase one. Allison Bishop, Assistant Dean of Students, suggested that PC would probably have a policy of only allowing juniors or seniors to purchase the ring. Bishop said, "by the time junior or senior status is achieved you have earned your right to get a class ring. At that point, the college trusts that you will become alumni. It is a symbol of 'we believe in you, you believe in us.'" Because of the exclusiveness that ring ownership would imply, more people would buy the ring.

Nixon emphasized that when "you really make a big deal of people being eligible to buy this ring, it becomes more than buying jewelry—it is part of the process of pre-graduation."

"[The ring] would be a symbol that would have meaning through the years, and you could identify it as special to PC."

— Joe Nixon
Dean of Students

Sample rings were passed around at the meeting. The general design was a signet-style ring with the seal of the college engraved on the flattened top, and smooth, polished sides. The rings were designed entirely of gold. Nixon said that as many members of the student body as possible would be involved in designing an official ring. "It's not official until it's perfect," Nixon said. "It is possible, if we choose to [adopt an official ring] for this senior class to have one," he added.

Options for what might eventually become our official ring include two different shapes for the seal on top: the traditional oval seal, or the newer rectangular seal with rounded corners. Also, two different contours, raised and flat, are available, as well as two options for the shank—smooth and plain or with "PC" and Neville Hall engraved on each side.

An unofficial vote of the sixteen females and seven males present at the Presidents' Council meeting gave Nixon the unanimous go-ahead for pursuing an official school ring through Milestone Marketing.

Other students seem to support the idea, also, including sophomore Lissa Sumner, who thinks an official ring would "help with alumni spirit." Sumner added that "when you're going for a job interview, for instance, the employer will recognize you as a PC graduate." Junior Dave Amsler agreed. "I think it's a pretty good idea, as long as you can get another one if you want to."

Other students like sophomore Allana Rice were a little less enthusiastic. "I guess it would depend on what it looks like. I don't think I like the idea because everybody's so different, they have such different tastes." The majority sentiment seemed to be cautious support contingent on how the ring looks. PC students themselves will get to decide that when they vote on ring styles at the end of this month.

CHAMPS program provides opportunity for community youth and PC students

by Beth Threadgill
Staff Writer

For two weeks during the past summer six Presbyterian College students got the chance to be "parents" for thirty twelve year olds. Mary Beth Thomas, Laura Caudell, Johnny McCutcheon, Kim Watford, Randy Sullivan, and Teresa Wampler participated in the CHAMPS program which is directed by Dr. Jerman Disasa.

These six students served as mentors to Communities Helping, Assisting, Motivating Promising Students (CHAMPS). The program was a two-week resident camp which focused on science and humanities. Each counselor was responsible for either five girls or six boys. Thomas explained that the mentors had to get program participants up from and into bed, and to and from classes and meals. "We were parents," analyzed Thomas.

The students had two major areas of study—the humanities and the sciences. The program was designed to improve the students' communication skills and provide them with practical applications of their new skills. "The students enjoyed their classes. They got to use equipment such as microscopes, compasses, and computers that are not normally available to them," said CHAMPS mentor Laura Caudell.

Additionally, each afternoon a coach or player from a PC athletic team would organize a activity for the students. They played almost every sport from volleyball to soccer to basketball. Weekend activities were also planned for the students. One weekend they went hiking at Caesar's Head.

The twelve year olds that participated in the program this past summer will return every summer until their junior year in high school. Additionally, another group of seventh graders will be chosen each year to participate. These students will also attend follow-up programs one Saturday each month. At the follow-up programs they will have the opportunity to participate in many different activities; a highlight was visiting the State Museum in Columbia during January. The seventh and eighth grade programs stress building self-esteem, and the ninth and tenth grade programs teach practical skills. After the students' junior year in high school, they will be put into an internship in the Laurens community. The internship will allow the students earn and save money for college.

CHAMPS brought together the Laurens community, the public and private high schools, and Presbyterian College. Dr. Disasa explained that the community saw the need for something to be done to help economically and academically challenged students. The CHAMPS program is the first time that the two school districts and PC have worked together. Disasa said he saw a "deep sincerity" that encourages a positive direction for the kids.

The students chosen to participate in CHAMPS have to show their commitment to future success. A selection committee made up of high school guidance counselors and two PC professors choose the students. The students are recommended by their teachers and the community. The committee studies these recommendations as well as the students' background through academic records, discipline records, and economic circumstances. In addition, an interview with the students and their parents is conducted to find out the level of commitment.

Dr. Disasa notes that the program has enabled the students to have "higher aims and higher expectations." The students were exposed to a responsible lifestyle that will allow them to attain a successful future. CHAMPS is a successful program and has already expanded with three new teachers for next year and thirty new seventh graders.

"We were their friends. They looked at me and saw a successful college student and knew they could do it too. We motivated them and built their self-esteem," reflected Thomas.

"CHAMPS was one of the greatest character building experiences of my life. Learning to interact with many different personalities and watching the kids grow up provides me with inspiration," offered Caudell.

Thomas said that she had a lot of fun with the preteens. She recalled a humorous story. On the last night they had a dance. All week the boys and girls had not really shown any affection towards each other. However, at the dance, they showed "true twelve year old behavior." The counselors had to make a "hot seat" and put pillows between couples who were dancing. Of course, there were still those few who would not come into the same room with members of the opposite sex.

Participants in fight guilty of disorderly conduct

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

Nine participants in a fight at the PC-Newberry basketball game appeared in court and were punished for their actions. According to PC Public Safety Chief Gray Mayson, all of the men involved either entered guilty pleas or were found guilty during the hearing. The fighters were charged with disorderly conduct. Mayson said that 2 PC students, 6 Newberry students, and one man who was visiting a PC student at the time were fined $38 apiece for their involvement in the situation. Two of the individuals were issued trespass warnings, which prohibit them from ever returning to the PC campus. Those warnings were issued to a Newberry student, and the man visiting a PC student. In addition, one man faces charges of inciting a riot. According to Mayson, General Sessions court will hear the charge of inciting a riot. Local municipal courts apparently don't handle those types of crimes.

Mayson commented that the incident was an isolated one. "It's been 15 to 19 years since anything serious came of the PC-Newberry rivalry," said Mayson. Even then, the rivalry was a loose one, with the two schools swapping pranks. "Back then, it only involved going to the other school and painting something up," he added. "In my 23 years at PC, this is the first time that serious fighting has broken out."

Mayson indicated that Public Safety and Athletic Department officials will be working together in the coming weeks to clarify the role that Public Safety will play in future PC-Newberry athletic contests. "The night of the fight, we had our standard number of officers on duty. The Clinton police came to our aid very quickly, and the situation was handled very well," said Mayson. "We'll be looking at whether we need more officers on duty at next year's football game and basketball game." We're even going to have to consider putting an extra officer at the PC-Newberry basketball game," he added. "It's hard to tell what we should do, though, because this fight was not related to the basketball game in any way." According to Mayson, the Athletic Department has already considered changing the seating arrangements for next year's PC-Newberry basketball matchup. "The fight was an unfortunate event," said Mayson. "We feel confident that other situations can be avoided in the future."

Men's basketball solid with 6-5 conference record, focusing on SAC tournament to be held March 1 at Wingate

by Ellison Manley
Staff Writer

Holding steady with a 6-5 record in South Atlantic Conference play, the Blue Hose basketball team is beginning the second round of conference play with expectations of a SAC championship. Aside from a disappointing loss to Voorhees College on February 1st (74-87), the Blue Hose have been playing solidly behind the leadership of juniors Ronnie Cannon and Andre Newman.

Cannon, a power forward from Immo, SC leads the team in scoring with 14.6 ppg and in rebounding with 7.0 rpg. In addition, he also leads the team in steals (4.7) just behind Cannon in scoring and rebounding is Newman with 13.2 ppg and 4.2 rpg. Presbyterian suffered the loss of freshman workhorse Eric Burrow to ankle problems again. A sprain had given Burrow trouble earlier in the season, and now apparently a fracture on the opposite ankle will keep him on the sidelines at least until the tournament and possibly the rest of the year.

Freshman guard Tyler Weiss has continued to be a valuable asset to the Blue Hose. Weiss is averaging 7.5 ppg and he's accumulated 45 steals and 47 assists. Also, impressive play from senior forward Brian Franklin (8.9 ppg, 5.4 rpg) helped the Blue Hose crush Anderson on the 12th as Franklin led the team in scoring. The outing proved to be a successful one not only for the team but for Franklin also as he scored a game high 17 points.

The Blue Hose wrapped up the first round of conference play with victories over Wingate College and Elon College. In a well-attended home game, the Blue Hose led easily over the Wingate Bulldogs paced by Weiss' career high 21 points and Burrow's 8 rebounds on their way to a 74-65 win. The game at Elon gave the Blue Hose an important win, 71-65, with Cannon leading the way by scoring 23 points and grabbing 6 rebounds.

The next round of play was postponed until last Wednesday due to over a foot of snow hindering the Blue Hose from travelling to Carson-Newman. Following the unexpected weekend off, the Blue Hose faced Mars-Hill for the second time this season. The game earlier in the season was tight, with the Blue Hose squeezing by the Lions by only one point. However, PC pulled together a solid win the second time around defeating them by a score of 75-62.

The Blue Hose lost to Lenior-Rhyne (48-57), Catawba (57-63) and Gardner-Webb (81-88) over the course of last week, but they face Wingate on the 21st and Elon on the 24th to finish up the season. PC will head to Wingate for the SAC tournament on March 1st.

Vosburgh. The site is also a valuable resource in the recruitment of prospective students. "We hope that the Web site will lure people to our campus. There is a certain feeling we were hoping to capture when we were designing the site. We used a lot of scenic pictures of campus buildings and places to capture the spirit of the college. The aim there is to make people think 'if the school looks this good on a computer screen, imagine what it's like to be there,'" added Vosburgh. Our goal was to create a Web site that would send the same messages that our printed publications send that this is a college of quality, of beauty, of tradition. At the same time, a lot of thought went into how to make the site easy to navigate. We know that by the time we put all the college's information into our Web site, it will be a massive electronic document, and we wanted to make it as logical and user friendly as possible, right from the start," said Vosburgh in PC Magazine.

One particular feature Vosburgh hopes will be successful is the on-line calendar. "There is so much that you can learn about the school just by looking at the calendar. A parent can look at it and see if their son or daughter will be busy during the weekend, and students can look at it to see what will be happening on campus. Right now, we have events scheduled on the calendar until graduation in 1997," said Vosburgh.

Vosburgh is quick to point out that PC's presence on the Web is just as beneficial to PC students and faculty as it is to parents and alumni. "While we are excited about people using the Web to look in to PC, we are even more excited about students, faculty, and administrators being able to use the Web to look out at other sites. There is such a wealth of information available out there. Dr. George Ramsey has been using the Web to research the Dead Sea Scrolls," he said.

"I've been exploring the Web to see what resources are available for other areas I'm teaching. What I would like to do is set up a page or two of my own with links to articles of art museum home pages, something that would be a launching pad for my students to go out and read some material about the Dead Sea Scrolls or view a painting of Jesus at the Crucifixion," said Ramsey in PC Magazine.

According to Vosburgh, in the coming weeks and months, professors will be given the chance to create their own home pages. "Hopefully, these faculty home pages will be an outlet for scholarly writings and information. For instance, if someone was researching third parties, they could pull up Dr. Dave Gillespie's home page and read some of his writings on the subject," said Vosburgh. By next semester, students will be able to design home pages for themselves. "I think when that happens, campus familiarity with the Web will explode. More and more students will be taking the computer classes to learn how to navigate the Web and design their own pages. As soon as a few learn, the number of student home pages should multiply very rapidly," added Vosburgh. "Of course, along with that, the college will issue the do's and don'ts for student home pages."

Lady Hose defeat nationally ranked team enroute to SAC tournament

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

The Lady Blue Hose continue to follow the "win some, lose some" path as the 95-96 season draws to a close. The Blue Hose enter the South Atlantic Conference tournament posting a 12-11 record overall (5-6 in the SAC), and they are fired up about the possibilities of taking it all—that is, earning a bid to the NCAA tournament.

Next week PC will head to Wingate for the SAC tournament where they will have a chance to secure a bid to the NCAA national tournament by finishing first. Winning the tournament is the only sure bet for gaining the privilege of going to Nationals, and winning will by no means be easy (for any of the teams). The outcome of the SAC tournament will mostly likely have much resemblance to the infamous basketball drill where the ball is rolled out onto the court and two people have to fight to chase it down.

"Everybody has beaten everybody," said Sophomore Forward Denzel Barman. "This whole season has been a toss up, so it would be tough to try and say who's going to win. I guess it will come down to whoever wants most, but if that's the case, I think we've got a very good chance of winning...we want to win."

The constant disturbance of injuries that have plagued the team have ended up making the Blue Hose a very versatile team. Many leaders have emerged as gaps have been left to fill. Senior Chris Mitchum and junior Karen Neeley have both been stable figures for the Lady Hose, but one figure has little by little crept into the spotlight as well, a freshman.

A former Dutch Fork High School standout and all-state player, Heather Couch, has shown her ability to do more than just play college basketball. She has sparked the Blue Hose and fanned the flames.

Couch fired up her team and played an especially important role in last Wednesday's win over nationally ranked Mars Hill (#15). Mars Hill stood unbeaten in the conference before their meeting with the Blue Hose, but the efforts of a unified PC team were enough to silence the Lions roar.

Couch was 5-8 from the floor and 6-9 from the charity stripe on her way to leading the Blue Hose in scoring with a career high 17 points for them game.

The freshman's enthusiasm on the court was catching as she helped the Blue Hose hold onto a 71-67 win against the Lions. After a steal by Neeley with 1:40 to go, the scoreboard favored PC 64-59. Couch began by putting back a rebound, for two, of a Chris Mitchum miss, increasing the score to 66-59. Executing an intense full court press, Couch was able to steal the ball on an inbound pass by Mars-Hill in the backcourt and draw the foul. The one free throw that resulted from the one and one that occurred after her steal, one of four for the evening, extended the Lady Hose's lead to eight (67-59).

The clock had run down past the 1:00 mark following a successful defensive effort to keep the Lions at bay before Karen Neeley was fouled with 46 left in the game. Neeley converted both efforts on her one and one giving PC a 69-59 lead. A last effort by Mars-Hill to recover the lead failed as they pulled within six with :25 to go and hit a three-pointer at the buzzer to end the game, but a pair of Mitchum free throws had already removed all doubt of losing and gave the Blue Hose their first home win since playing Carson-Newman on January 15th.

The win against Mars-Hill, who had only beaten the Blue Hose by four points in their earlier meeting, was a good confidence builder for a team that has had difficulty coming through on the court this season.

"Mars Hill showed us what we've known all year," said Neeley. "By beating them we realized that we can beat anybody in the conference. Everybody did what they needed to do to get ready...you could tell something was different when we stepped on the floor, even in warm ups. Everybody had come to play."

Neeley continues to pace Presbyterian in many categories. She leads in scoring (averaging 13.0 ppg), steals (62), assist (76), free throw percentage (75.0%) and three point percentage (35.8%).

Senior Chris Mitchum just recently entered the record books again when she became one of only eight players in PC women's basketball history to score over 1,000 points in a respective career. Mitchum also leads the team in 3 pointers (59), and is second on the team in assist (73), steals (31), and scoring (averaging 12.8 ppg).

Denzel Barman leads the team in total rebounds with 156 and in total field goal percentage (46.6%). Barman's solid shooting is also evident in her continually rising scoring average of 8.0 ppg which ranks 3rd on the team. Foul trouble has been a problem for Barman off and on this season, and that's when sophomore Tonya Kelley has stepped up. Kelley is right behind Barman in scoring percentage (42.5%) and she leads the team in blocks with 28. Her solid blocking ability is evidence of her development this season as a defensive strong hold for the Blue Hose, and her improved situation concerning her own foul trouble shows her increased maturity at the post position.

Behind Kelley in blocks stands junior Watonia Williams with 24 on the team, and Williams also is second on the team in rebounding (averaging 5.5 rpg) and totaling well over a hundred for the season.

The Blue Hose had the misfortune of losing two tough conference games this past week against Catawba (67-60) and to Gardner Webb (76-58). Freshman, Darah Huffman, led the Blue Hose in scoring against Gardner Webb with 14 points going 5-8 from the field and hitting two three pointers as well. Amy Sharp was right behind Huffman with 12 points on the evening as both freshman posted their highest numbers all season. Mitchum had led the scoring against Catawba on the 14th with 22 points.

Remaining games include Carson Newman and Wingate earlier this week and Elon at home this Saturday. The SAC tournament will start Tuesday.

PC golf team experienced, ranked in NCAA Division II top 20

From the Blue Hose Sports Information

Fourth-year head coach Tommy Addison returns all five starters from last year's Presbyterian squad which earned the program's first ever national ranking and posted a second-place finish in the SAC Tournament.

This past fall, the Blue Hose posted two first-place finishes, one second-place finish and two third-place finishes in five tournaments. PC enters the spring ranked 20th in all of NCAA Division II.

A pair of All-SAC performers in Jim Kent and Chris Wilkins are back for their senior seasons at PC. The tandem finished second and third, respectively, at last year's SAC Championship with three day scores of 218 and 219. Kent expressed his expectations for the team this spring. "USC Aiken is ranked #1 in the nation this year and they are the only team we've lost to consistently, and that was a close match. So you could say I expect us to do well," Kent said.

Also returning for Addison are senior Perin Powell, juniors Chuck King, Chris Owens and Gabe Southards, and sophomores Cliff Hicks and Chris Eassy.

Robert Mindock and Eric Williamson, who won two individual titles this fall, are the squad's lone freshman.

Baseball team struggles in early season

By Albert Mitchell
Staff Writer

The 1995 Blue Hose Baseball team looks forward to another exciting season of baseball. Last year the team finished above all expectations and looks to do the same again in 1996. After the loss of key players Ryan Cam, Paul Bushway, Palouk, and Jason Bradley, the remaining members of the team are going to have to step into their places.

Three starters return in the infield, led by senior first baseman Erik Andress (.328, 114, 43 rbi), sophomore shortstop Gene Gobbel (.260, 11 rbi) and second baseman Darnan Patrick. Kovash expressed his confidence in all of his returning infielders with particular attention to Andress. "I think he (Andress) is the best first baseman in the league," said Kovash.

Russell McAlister will bid for playing time at the third base spot against expected freshman standout Roger Lofynowicz. Lofynowicz was drafted by the Astros, but elected to go to college before playing professional baseball. Lofynowicz could see action as a designated hitter as well. Bryan Carpenter will also be one of the top candidates pushing infielders like Gobbel for playing time at shortstop. "They (Gobbel and Carpenter) are my two hardest workers. Bryan has especially improved a great deal this year," Kovash said. Infield coach Greg Desto will also look to Adam Cantrell to aid in the infield too.

Behind the plate, a pair of seniors in Sean McCarthy (.250, 20 rbi) and Jamie Garland (.164, 7 rbi) are back after sharing the duties a season ago. Though McCarthy holds the better batting average going into the season, whoever emerges as the power provider for the lineup early in the season will most likely see the majority of the playing time. Also, freshman Ross Mundy (a strong hitter) and Brad Teal (a strong defensive player) are expected to push for playing time as time progresses or if injury becomes a factor.

an all-conference choice in 1994, is the lone returning outfielder after batting .291 with 25 rbi and 19 stolen bases in 1995. Sophomore Clay Hall (.304) and junior Jason Jalliet (.216) are leading candidates to claim starting positions in center and right field. "I'm expecting Jason to fill the hole for Paul (Bushway) offensively and defensively," Kovash said. First-year outfield coach Arty Sposaro will also have under his control senior Gavin Fisher (who was moved from catcher to the outfield) and junior David Smoak.

On the mound, senior Glen Bergeron (5-3, 4.73 era, 5 saves, two-time All-South Atlantic Region choice) moves from the bullpen into a starters role, and will be joined by Hall (4-0, 5.79 era), junior Marty Russell (1-0, 2.70 era), sophomore Nate Green (0-1, 2.84 era) and a cast of freshman in the starting rotation. Sophomore Bret Exilsizor (0-1, 4.62 era, 2 saves) is expected to claim the closers slot out of the bullpen. With this strong nucleus of returning pitchers, the Blue Hose should be able to keep runners off the bases and out of the score book.

Other freshman joining Presbyterian's program include Keith Wilson, Brian Warren, Mike Madden, Justin Quinn, Bam Reeves, Brad Boleman, Lee Hannah, and Pat Patterson.

"In order for the team to be successful, the younger players are going to have to make an immediate impact, and the sophomores and juniors are going to need to step up," Kovash said.

The Blue Hose have one of the toughest schedules in their history ahead of them this year. This includes several nationally ranked teams including Georgia College, USC-Aiken, Armstrong State, and conference rivals Wingate and Elon. After a weekend of play that included tough losses to Columbus College (2-10, 9-10) and Georgia College (3-12), PC played its first home game against Coker College Wednesday and lost 6-10. However the Blue Hose pulled off a good win last Sunday against West Georgia in a double header where they lost the first game (2-5) but came back to win the second game (8-0). PC stands 1-5 over-all and they play their next home game against Erskine on Wednesday.

Women's tennis ranked nationally, start season 2-0

by Lucy Mahon
Staff Writer

Ninth-year coach Donna Arnold, following several years of success and accolades for the Blue Hose Women's Tennis program. Under Arnold's guidance, Presbyterian has secured the South Atlantic Conference title four times out of the past six years, and Arnold was named SAC coach of the year three times in a row from 1990 to 1992. This year the Lady Hose tennis program possesses all of the talent it needs to continue on the same path of success it's been following for years. The Blue Hose enter the spring season ranked #1 in the I-AA East Region rankings and #9 in the NCAA Division II. This is the first time such a preseason honor has been bestowed upon the Blue Hose.

Individually, freshman Robin Loveless ranks fourth in the region and 32nd in national singles rankings. No Presbyterian player has ever been listed in singles nationally. Loveless, who is an academic as well as a tennis standout, will place the Blue Hose in the number one spot. Loveless has every reason to be 100% confident performing in the #1 spot even as a freshman, but she has expressed her nervousness and anticipation concerning the upcoming season.

"In the fall I played the best tennis I've ever played (which is how the rankings are determined) and I just hope to keep it up. I put my mind to it. I know I can," said Loveless.

It takes more than just a good number one player to be successful as a team though, and the Lady Hose will have no trouble filling up the rest of the lineup. With under two weeks left before the Blue Hose's first match, Arnold was still not saying for sure how the rest of the line up would fall into place. In the singles ladder junior Dawn Dachelet and sophomore transfer Kimberly Hampton will battle for the number two and three spots. Dachelet and Hampton stand 15th and 17th in the region.

In Presbyterian's first two matches this past weekend, Hampton stood 15th and 17th in the region. In the #3 spot, PC defeated Kennesaw State 7-0, and Coastal Carolina 4-3.

Four All-SAC players return for PC including senior Jennifer Brim, a two-time GTE Academic All-District selection, and juniors Christie Bolt, Dachelet and Dana Davis. Brim started off the season at the #4 spot and won both her matches over the weekend. Likewise, Dana Davis had the same results in the #5 spot. Christie Bolt was slated to play in the #6 singles spot, but she did not see any singles action on the court against Kennesaw or Coastal because both of her matches were won by default. Bolt, who played both singles and doubles last year, could ended up playing just doubles.

Bolt and Hampton have combined to form a tenacious doubles tandem earning second place rankings in the East Region of Division II play and ranking 16th nationally. The Bolt/Hampton duo went 2-0 this in their first weekend of play in the #1 doubles spot, and team mates Dachelet and Loveless went 2-0 also in the #2 doubles spot.

Depending on how many singles positions Arnold ends up having to fill and how the number two and three double teams fill out, other team members including freshman transfer Heather Phillips and Martha Correll, could find themselves in the starting lineup as well. Regardless of how Arnold decides who plays where, she has such a deep team to work with that finding a solid player won't be hard. After their first two matches, Arnold seemed very pleased with the results over the weekend.

Freshman Robin Loveless is currently ranked 32nd in the nation in singles. She is the first Blue Hose ever to be ranked nationally in singles.

Men's tennis team young but ready for tough Spring schedule

by J. R. Wright
Staff Writer

After a productive workout this fall, the Presbyterian men's tennis team is looking forward to a challenging spring season. Coach Bobby McKee, who is entering his 13th season at the helm of the Blue Hose, put his young team through intense practices in the fall months in preparation for pursuit of the South Atlantic Conference championship this April. Since only four starters returned this year, McKee entered the Blue Hose into a number of fall tournaments to help the young team improve their play and gain the practice they needed to perform well during the regular season. "The young players showed improvement throughout the fall and gained some experience in the process," said McKee.

When the team takes the court in their first match against Furman University, five of the seven starters will be freshmen. Leading the team will be senior David Kemp and sophomore Tom Swift. Kemp sat out the fall season for personal reasons but is expected to play an instrumental role in the team's success this spring. "With David back we have a lot more experience and team leadership than we would have had," said McKee. Likewise, Swift, the team's captain, has helped lead and mold this young group as they prepare for the upcoming season. "We have some hard matches ahead of us, but with the depth of the team this year I feel that we have a shot at making national bids," said Swift.

The Hose finished 10-13 overall last spring and fourth in the South Atlantic Conference. However, the team finished strongly by taking third place in the league tournament in Salisbury, N.C. McKee's goals for 1996 are not only to have a winning record, but also to win this year's tournament. "I feel that if we have a successful season then the confidence of our younger players will grow," said McKee. "There's a lot of young talent on this team and if successful early, they will come together to form a strong team in years to come."

This year's freshman class will be led by Zach Loftis and Preston Menning. Loftis is expected to play #3 singles most of the season, but may see action at #1 and #2 singles. Menning will spend most of time filling the #4 slot. Together, Loftis and Menning combine for a potent doubles team, and others expected to see action this spring are sophomores Ed Ridgeway and Ronnie Setzer, freshmen Todd Roemitch, Chuck Webb, Will Stewart, and Travis Rentz should also see some action as well. Roemitch and Rentz filled the #5 spots in the Furman Tennis Shootout on the 10th, and Stewart and Webb filled the #4 spot. Though PC lost against both Furman and Winthrop at the Shootout, both clubs proved to be very challenging teams who performed extremely well against the Blue Hose.

The team will spend most of its time on the road this season having only seven home matches. The Hose will travel to Hilton Head, S.C. over spring break to compete in seven matches over five days. After returning from Hilton Head, the men will concentrate on their conference play, concluding the season with the SAC Tournament. The combination of a solid team, far season and a good showing at the SAC tournament, will hopefully earn the team a bid to the national tournament. The Blue Hose faced USC Aiken, Augusta College, and Gardner Webb earlier this week, and they will face SC State, St Andrews, and UNC-Wilmington this weekend.

The Last Word: Georgia Hall fire drills keep students on their toes

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

Some of you don't live in Georgia Hall. Some of us don't like to admit we live in Georgia, but in the interest of journalism, we'll admit it. Living in Georgia has its moments. We won't mention the vomit in the stairs, the mysterious puddles in the hall on a Friday night, the strange funk that emanates through the building, or the guys on the hall screaming "Come on! Torque it out, Dale!" at a tape of last week's big Nascar race. If you look past the broken windows and moldy shower curtains, you'll see that the residents of Georgia are actually the most safety-conscious group of folks on campus. Perhaps some of you haven't heard about our impeccable fire safety record. A lot of other dorms aren't on the daily fire drill plan like we are, and that goes to show how committed we are to the safety of ourselves and our neighbors.

Here's the weekend again folks, and you know what that means...five more fire drills in Georgia Dorm! That's right. We're growing quite fond of our claim to fame as the most fire-safety conscious dorm. We here in Georgia scoff at the likes of Barron and Smyth who may have their routine semester fire drills. No, no. That just won't cut it for us. It's adventurous to slip into bed and not know whether you will sleep peacefully through the night, or be awakened to recreate a scene from Backdraft.

For those of you not fortunate

Recent fire drills in Georgia Hall have forced Tommy and Leighton to become connoisseurs of fine fire-safety measures.

enough to live in Georgia Hall, here's a recreation of the scene on more than one night last week. It's about 1:30, deep into the wee hours of the morning, and you're driving back from a late night of studying at the Waffle House, when as you drive past Georgia, you spot a crowd gathered outside. But you figure there's more to this assembly than just a late night Dorm Council meeting. Could it be that the Georgia boys have finally had enough of the dark hallways and the substandard heating and cooling and have decided to stage a protest? Possibly.

But how many college students do you know that would miss sleep to stand up for their rights? Even in the most free-wheeling, radical days of the 1960's, students knew when to have their sit-ins and draft card burnings, and they also knew that 1:30 was no time to be huddled outside in the cold.

Different people go about dealing with these alarms in different ways. Perhaps the most practical thing to do would be to hear the alarm, grab a pair of shoes and quickly run down the stairs in hopes of escaping the would-be flames. But after ten or fifteen times of doing the same old thing, people begin to resort to other alternatives.

A few of the paranoid (or business-minded, whichever) students stand outside talking on their cell phones with their insurance companies, describing the 50 disc Pioneer rack system and the 72 inch television that were destroyed in the blaze. The beautiful part of this is that there was no fire and you didn't have that entertainment center and the insurance people don't know that. It's slightly illegal, and could probably land you in the Laurens county jail, but there comes a time in every person's life when fraud is best.

Then there's the snooze button smashers. We'll just say it's oh, 2:00 am and hey, there goes that pesky fire alarm again. They reach over and hit the snooze button thinking nothing of it. Continuing to ring into their head is that alarm, and by about the twentieth time of slapping the snooze button, answering the telephone and checking to see what's ready in the microwave, they deduce that it's just another fire. By now the fire alarm has ceased and they fall back asleep. The results of these constant fire drills is sort of a "The boy who cried wolf" syndrome. These poor souls are by now so immune to their alarm clock, that they've nussed every eight o'clock for the past two weeks.

And then there's your prankster. Some lonely guy who has grown weary of the monotonous fire drill and has decided to spice things up. He lights a few rolls of toilet paper and puts them in the window, tucks his arms into his shirt and screams out the window, "Somebody help me!! The fire burned my wooden arms and I can't open the door!!!" Yeah, tee hee. It was funny the first six times.

You also have your devout fire fighters. Only rarely will you find someone that kisses up to their RA, but the hall firefighters are these types of people. These are the guys that keep a big bucket of sand in the room and always seem to have a hose handy. They're easily recognized as the few that bound down the stairs, completing the escape with a "stop, drop and roll" maneuver in the grass. Hanging on the walls of these people's rooms are little inspirational signs that say stuff like, "Only you can prevent grease fires!" and "Friends don't let friends burn alive!"

Finally you'll have those who disregard the fire alarms totally. We feel this is more out of a sense of bravery and fearlessness than just being lazy. These guys hear the alarm, and immediately step into action. They first lock the door, probably to ward off flames, not just that pesky fire marshal. Then they plug their earphones into the stereo, blast some Vanilla Ice, and retreat under the covers, falling back to sleep with ease. Oh, you're asking how we know such details and habits of this group are you? Umm... we'll have to plead the fifth on that one.

There's really nothing to compare to the bond that forms between people who have shared a fire drill before. Some folks say that going through pledgeship for a fraternity brings people close together, and that's entirely possible. Other people say that living in a dorm with hall bathrooms creates a bond between a group of people. But ladies and gentlemen, rest assured that the fire drill tops 'em all. And the later it is at night, the closer you become. You get to see people how they really are. Folks who wear contacts walk outside with their glasses on. People come out with retainers in their mouths, and hair messed up. For the two of us, we happen to walk out in our usual night-time apparel. When the fire alarm is buzzing, there's just no time to peel off the skin-tight leather body suits.

Fire drilling has a sporting side to it as well. When it's 1 a.m. and you're out side in the January cold, you have to do something to pass the time. Inevitably there are a certain number of girls that emerge from the dorm during these drills. So, the way the game has been going thus far has been that all the guys gather around the door and place bets on the girls as they walk out. It usually sounds a little something like this: "Okay boys, place your bets, is she coming from Tommy's side of the loft or Leighton's?" Considering the sheer volume of females we are discussing here, it is easy to see why the game often lasts hours after the alarm has stopped ringing.

So to summarize, these fire drills can be an interesting and enjoyable time for you. Just be creative, and don't let the fear of perishing in a heaping ball of flame keep you from making the most of your safety-consciousness.

Priceless

IFC, Nixon evaluate alcohol policy, emphasize responsibility

by Laura Jacobs
Staff Writer

The alcohol policy of Presbyterian College is outlined for students on pages 54 and 56 of The Knapsack, but how many people have read it? Probably not many, and even fewer still actually follow the guidelines it presents. So, is that really a problem? Are underage drinkers hurting anyone but themselves? Not yet, but they have the potential to, and this was the principal matter of concern and discussion at the Greek forum held this past Sunday.

According to Bernie Schulz, Greek life assistant for the college and advisor to the Inter-Fraternity Council, the council has, in the last year, "been discussing the alcohol policy that the IFC has. Are chapters following it? If not, how is the [alcohol policy of the school] enforced? Basically, we have come up with a collaborative effort, Dean Nixon, myself, and members of IFC, with what I think is going to be a win-win situation for everyone involved."

The "situation" is a proposed revised alcohol policy and more stringent enforcement of the present policy. According to Dean of Students Joe Nixon, it is all about responsibility, at the individual level, the school level, and at the level of national fraternity rules and state law. "If Greeks would monitor themselves and abide by and enforce their own alcohol policies, I feel things would be a lot safer within the law. IFC agreed to look at the alcohol policy and revise it as necessary and have it as a functional policy they are willing to support. No one at the college wants anyone involved in legal or national fraternity disputes," said Nixon.

According to Nixon, there is the likelihood that a "statement of understanding" will be drafted by IFC and approved by his office. Students involved in organizations which hold functions where alcohol is present as well as students who frequent fraternity court would sign the statement. "Each fraternity would have a list of people who had signed. If your name is not on the list and you show up, you have to sign the waiver," he explained.

Both Schulz and Nixon stressed that the enforcement of an alcohol policy and the institution of the guest list, where only certain people would be allowed to come into fraternity houses are entirely separate issues. Schulz explained that the new policy would apply to all students. "This policy will impact the Greek and non-Greek community, but I think it will have a positive impact. It will bring credibility to the Greek system and indicate responsibility," said Schulz.

IFC President Brent McGee agreed that the enforcement of an alcohol policy "is not going to keep people from going out to the houses. Anybody who ever wants to go out to fraternity court would sign this." McGee also emphasized the issue of the fraternities' responsibility to South Carolina state law, as well as to their national organizations. "We're going to have some guidelines set, putting a lot more of the responsibility on the guests. If a guest does something stupid, it wouldn't be solely our responsibility, because they signed the statement of understanding."

Schulz said he was impressed with the cooperation and leadership that he and Dean Nixon have received from McGee and IFC. He viewed the involvement of IFC in redrafting the school policy as "the principle of self-government and autonomy. My philosophy as well as Dean Nixon's is that we want the students in the Greek system to take responsibility for their actions."

"Dean Nixon and I applaud the efforts of IFC. I can't say enough about how impressed I am with their handling of this in a responsible manner. They're concerned with their liability. They're not trying to rain on anyone else's parade, just to provide a safe environment," added Schulz.

Exactly what kinds of changes would be made is still under discussion. Nixon mentioned "a more consistent use of arm bands and identification" and "an effort on the part of the IFC to better monitor the court." Schulz suggested that for purposes of enforcement, each fraternity would be responsible for selecting representatives who would be responsible for seeing that the alcohol policy was obeyed within their own organization.

As far as enforcement by the Clinton Police Department, Schulz said, "We're not going to contact police with regard to patrolling. We're not calling out the police, and we haven't called in SLED to assess the problem, but SLED has the full authority to do that."

The sudden concern with the alcohol policy at PC is not as sudden as it seems. National fraternities have long been cracking down on individual chapters and tightening regulations. "There are ongoing discussions in IFC about ideas. One of the things mentioned this year was our concern about alcohol use and policies," said Nixon.

Schulz agreed, saying that the Presbyterian College campus is not the only one being affected by new and more strictly enforced rules about alcohol policies. How to handle problems regarding alcohol consumption "has been an ongoing problem, not only on this campus but many others as well. A lot of campuses are revising their alcohol policies. The University of Colorado has gone totally dry. Other Greek systems have folded, chapters have closed. Faculty members and administrations have seen an urgent need for change to occur at institution after institution. This is not unique to PC. This is a national issue which has continued to receive publicity."

SGA holds EC elections, all candidates run unopposed

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

Six students ran unopposed for offices within the Student Government Association's Executive Council. Junior Blythe Matheson was the sole student seeking the Council's highest seat, the presidency. Matheson served on the Executive Council in this year as treasurer and chaired the Public Relations committee as well. Junior Beth Peake ran in pursuit of the vice presidency. Peake served this year as president of the junior class. Loy Stone hopes to head the Student Union Board. Junior Alan Workman has been nominated by the Judicial Council to serve as that body's chairman for the next academic year. Summer Hendley, the only sophomore seeking office, was the candidate for the position of secretary. Ann Marie Goldsmith was the candidate for treasurer. According to SGA member Brandi Casto, four of the candidates have served on SGA in the past. Workman and Stone have not. All six candidates ran unopposed, and this marks the second consecutive year that females have dominated 5 out of 6 Executive Council positions. Outgoing student body president Leigh Davis expressed concern at the low numbers of students who ran for Executive Council office. "It does concern me," said Davis. "No one can figure out why more people didn't run. It bothers me that not many people ran, because I know there are plenty of qualified students out there," she added. "The people who ran receive my full support. These are the folks who I wanted to run, and wanted to win. But, when all candidates are unopposed, it doesn't make for much of a contest." Davis sighs several possible reasons for the low numbers, including student involvement in other organizations on campus. "Several people currently on SGA told me that they didn't run because they wanted to participate in other organizations. A lot of the current SGA members have taken leadership posts in their sororities, or other clubs," said Davis.

Elections for class presidents and representatives will take place in the weeks immediately following Spring Break. According to Casto, applications for class office will be due on March 15th, and the election will be held shortly after. Davis is optimistic about class elections. "A lot of people have indicated an interest in running for class office, and that should be good for the school. We'd like to see a lot more men run for office than have in the past few years," she said. "I sincerely hope that more people will get involved and run for class office," added Davis.

Greek Week schedule announced, set for March 18-23

A majority of the national publicity centers on the national policies of individual fraternities which detail strict guidelines regarding liability and situations in which fraternities may be held responsible for injuries which occur on their premises. Schulz has explained that the intention of the IFC, under his advisement, "is not to exclude non-Greeks. It's not an effort to keep anyone out. There are national policies that each of these organizations are mandated to follow, including knowing who is in their house. There are insurance concerns that each fraternity must deal with."

Nixon also mentioned national liability concerns. "I had a concern about parties happening off campus, so I wrote to the national offices and asked about what constituted an official function and if their risk management policies applied off-campus. This is about being more accountable for the legal and non-abusive use of alcohol at fraternity court."

McGee stated, "As far as the policy goes, we felt it necessary to make a change because for one thing, national management was concerned about liability. The policy is nothing new, just what everybody's insurance policy says anyway. Our goal is to provide an atmosphere that is as safe as possible and to protect ourselves."

PC students, if not excited at the possibility of the policy's putting a kink in their regular social activities, agree that such a policy is necessary. "I think they [the fraternities] have to protect themselves," said Lori Adams, a sophomore. "It's fine with me, as long as they aren't trying to get out of things that are really their responsibility," added junior Jessica Reddick.

Sophomore Daniel Searcy said, "I think this policy is a good deal, because fraternities don't need to hold all the responsibility for people who drink in their rooms and come out to the houses already smashed."

Responsibility is what it all boils down to. As McGee expressed it, "We're not trying to ruin anyone's fun, we're just trying to protect ourselves."

The PC campus will go Greek the week of March 18-23. That's right, it is already time for Greek Week. Members of Greek organizations on campus will come together to celebrate Greek life, and emphasize the contribution that Greek life makes to the campus as well as the community. This year's event promises to be an action packed week of games, food, and fun.

A special Greek week committee composed of Inter-Fraternity Council representatives, has been hard at work planning all of the events. "The week is designed to stress Greek unity," said IFC President Brent McGee. "We hope to bring all the fraternities and sororities together to have some fun."

Tony Powell

Tony Powell will be appearing in Inklings on March, 19 at 9:00 pm. Powell is one of the most popular comedians on the touring circuit. Tony Powell is in a class by himself. His refreshing, narrative approach to comedy grabs an audience's attention much like his idol, Bill Cosby. Tony's engaging, affable personality on stage belies his tough East New York section of Brooklyn upbringing. Though Tony could woo an audience with his funny storytelling ability, he is best known for his impressions of Eddie Murphy, Richard Pryor, and Bill Cosby. Tony has already made his mark by performing at clubs and colleges up and down the East Coast and was recipient of the 1987 Henny Youngman Award for the most promising comedian. The exposure he received from this award helped secure spots on a variety of local cable T.V. shows, which ultimately led to an appearance on NBC's "Showtime At The Apollo" and A&E's "Comedy of the Road." Tony was selected to showcase the NACA Great Lakes conference in 1989 and the NACA New England conference in 1990. When you see Tony Powell you will genuinely be catching a rising star.

SGA challenges students: Get involved

It has been a great privilege to be able to serve the students of Presbyterian College as SGA President this past year. As my term in office is about to expire it is a time for me to reflect on all of the wonderful things that SGA has done during the past year. Out of all of the accomplishments though, there is one that outshines the rest: the way that the student body has become more unified this year. At the end of the last academic year many voices were complaining about school and all of the things that go on here. I know that there are more than six people on campus who care about the future of this institution! So, you have one more opportunity to serve the campus and make your voice known - class office. Elections will be soon after we return from Spring Break. Think about it! I people do not continue to work for the students and stand up for the way that PC should be, then we might possibly face another year of rising unhappiness. You have the power to change the future of this institution! Don't just stand by and watch the happiness level of the school go down hill, do something about it!

The campus has come together for so many bonfires, games, and social events that it is hard to imagine that there could ever have been a time in the past when things were not as great as they are now. But, those unhappy times still exist for many people and I would like to challenge you once again to fix those problems. During the past week SGA held sign-ups for Executive Council offices. Out of the nearly 900 students that will be returning to campus next year, only six of you decided that you wanted to serve the student body. SGA offers a place for you to speak out about your true feelings about school and all of the things that go on here. I know that there are more than six people on campus who care about the future of this institution! So, you have one more opportunity to serve the campus and make your voice known - class office. You have the power to change the future of this institution! Don't just stand by and watch the happiness level of the school go down hill, do something about it!

Have a wonderful Spring Break! Think seriously about running as a candidate for class office; SGA needs you! Look out Disney World, here I come!

Mother of seven a welcoming face in Registrar's Office

by Sherida Frizsell
Staff Writer

Students and faculty who need help in the Registrar's Office come to Valerie Neely. As a secretary and records clerk for the college, Neely acts as assistant registrar, maintaining permanent records, withdrawal and add slips, grades, and student transcripts. However, her ability to perform her job is generally not what most people find most impressive about Valerie Neely.

"I don't think I've ever seen her in a bad mood," said McGee. "We hope to really promote a feeling of unity among students of all fraternities and sororities. It should be a fun week for the entire Greek population on campus."

A life long resident of Laurens, Neely has been with the college for four years. The only time Neely has been away from Laurens County for an extended time was during her years at Cortez-Peter's Business College in Washington, D.C. Valerie Neely is also active in the community outside her duties at PC. Neely is an active member of the Mt. Zion Baptist Church, where she serves as the president of the Mission Society and is a Vision Committee member. She is married to Mr. Walton Neely and is the mother of seven, including two sets of twins. According to Neely the way she is able to remember when things occurred in her life is by remembering "who I was pregnant with at the time."

Now, instead of using pregnancies to organize things, Neely uses the Lektrier 100, the campus' most complicated filing machine. However, Neely insists that its operation and maintenance are simple.

"My favorite part of the job is definitely meeting and talking with people. I guess I just enjoy the students. Because I have so many kids I know that they're under a lot of stress here and the last thing the need is to come in here and have a hard time. I try to keep that in mind," says Neely. Her goal is to be a caring and welcoming figure, constantly placing students at ease and being consistently helpful; apparently she has achieved her goal.

Neely says that the aspect of her job she enjoys the least is having to rummage through the school's vault, where transcripts from as far back as the 1920's are located. But true to her style, Neely is able to find the bright side of even this task.

admitting, "It really is neat to go into the vault and see all the history that is there. Often we get calls from families that are tracing their family history, and they want to know more about someone's college career."

Neely claims her strongest virtue is the patience she has learned in raising her seven children. "Patience. It gives me extra concern about how to treat a student. I make sure I'm polite because I already understand what a student goes through. I try to show a personal interest in each student." It is this personal attention that makes Neely so popular with so many students.

In the future, Valerie hopes to see her children graduate from school and continue their education in college. She also aspires to travel to Europe especially France, Spain and Holland. For now, though, Neely be content knowing that she makes a positive difference in the daily lives of numerous students and co-workers.

"I enjoy my job at PC. It's the people at PC that make this place so special. The closeness and family atmosphere of the college are so nice," says Neely. Little does she know that she goes a long way to make PC the place that it is.

Senior dinner planned, will welcome Class of 1996 to PC alumni family

As PC's Class of 1996 is preparing for graduation in early May, the college's Alumni Affairs office is busy preparing to graduate of PC and the Executive Director of the South Carolina Workers' Compensation Commission. LeFever also serves on the PC Board of Trustees. Jennifer Fouse will deliver the invocation while Ann Pitts, president of the Student Alumni Committee (STAC) will introduce guests. President Orr will speak about the importance of alumni and what they mean to the college. Ed Timmerman, President of the Alumni Association and a 1950 PC graduate, will formally welcome the seniors into the association. According to Butch Woodward, the Alumni Association serves as a "primary link between the college and graduates. The association helps the college keep posted on what's happening in the lives of graduates and report it in PC publications. It also helps keep them up-to-date on news from the college and the good things the school is doing."

A highlight of the evening will be the senior video which captures moments from the Class of '96's four years at PC.

"The Senior Dinner is a lot of fun because it kicks off the whole excitement of graduation," said Senior Class President Mary Beth Thomas. "It is the entrance into the alumni world."

Historically, the Senior Dinner is the time when the graduating class announces its senior gift to the college.

According to Thomas, this year's class will be giving a gift, and although the final decision on the gift has not been made, the most popular gift idea proposed so far has been a new, more impressive college sign at the rear entrance to the school.

"I think it's important to have a lasting senior gift. It's something to point to and show your children years from now and say that you had a hand in having that built. It will stir up memories, too," Thomas said.

All seniors will be receiving formal invitations to the dinner in the mail. I hope most seniors will attend the dinner. It really is a special occasion for the college, Woodward said.

welcome another herd of graduates into the family of alumni.

The process of transferring from student to alumni begins on Wednesday, March 27th at 7:30 pm with the annual Senior Alumni Dinner in Greenville Dining Hall. According to Butch Woodward, Director of PC's Alumni Association, the objective of the dinner is to "unofficially welcome students into the Alumni Association. We want to encourage all the seniors to go from alumni to active business person, all while being dedicated to PC along the way."

The dinner will feature a brief program on the prospective of becoming alumni and alumnus.

Burnside still excited about teaching, learning after 33 years at PC

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

Dr. Ron Burnside set foot on the campus of Presbyterian College for the first time in the summer of 1963. The young veteran had just defended his doctoral dissertation in Bloomington, Indiana when he was hired by PC to teach history. In his college days, the small-town boy from Vincennes, Indiana never would have pictured himself as a college professor. The economics major was business-minded as an undergraduate student at Wabash College. "I was planning on going into business...to take over the world," said Burnside.

Burnside's academic plans were interrupted in the early 1950's when he was drafted to serve in the United States military. Since Burnside was a college student at the time he received his draft card, he received a draft deferment. He was supposed to serve 2 years of obligation to the United States. Burnside enlisted in the United States Marine Corps, and began what would come to be a passionate interest in world travel and foreign cultures. "It was during my time in Okinawa and the Far East that I really began to develop an interest in history," he explained. After his years abroad, Burnside was stationed at Camp Lejeune, where he met his wife. While he was at Camp Lejeune, he came to develop an interest in teaching. Burnside attributes this inspiration to a late-night movie he saw on television while babysitting a friend's child. "Teaching seemed to be the thing to do...it seemed all-embracing," said Burnside.

Shortly thereafter, he enrolled as a graduate student at Indiana University in Bloomington. He stayed at IU until he received his doctorate. In his final year of graduate study, Burnside became acquainted with PC. He was doing research for his dissertation in Columbia when he interviewed for a teaching position at the college. The academic dean at the time was building up the faculty, and offered Burnside his first teaching job. "It has been my first and last teaching job," explained Burnside. Indeed, upon his retirement in 1997, Burnside will have spent his entire 34 year teaching career at Presbyterian College. In his early years as a young professor, Burnside was inspired greatly by Dr. Whitelaw, a former professor of physics. According to Burnside, Whitelaw had been crippled early in life by arthritis, but overcame his disability. Whitelaw was a highly respected teacher, and a man Burnside greatly admired. Upon Whitelaw's retirement, he passed on his cap and gown to Burnside. During his 33 years at PC, Burnside has taken time to raise a son and a daughter. His daughter now lives in Columbia with his 3 grandchildren, and his son is in the United States Navy. "Clinton was a great place to raise our children...after all, it's a city on the grow," he commented.

If you spend any length of time talking to Dr. Burnside, you will learn that he has a great respect and appreciation for foreign cultures. According to Burnside, one of the most significant changes he has witnessed in PC's academic program is in the expansion of study abroad opportunities. "The school has doubled in size since I came here. In that time, the school has become more diverse in terms of gender and ethnic background. The school needs more diversity," he said. Burnside believes that an understanding and respect for other cultures is valuable for every individual. One way to gain that understanding is for students to travel abroad and study in foreign cultures. "If we're talking about blue sky hopes here, best possible scenarios...I think every student should be required, or at least given the opportunity to study in another culture. I think that would revolutionize the campus, in a positive sense on the word," added Burnside. He picks up where most of us leave off though. He works hard to actualize that dream. To him, it's more of a work-in-progress than simple wishful thinking. In the spring of 1994, Burnside was a member of a small PC delegation that traveled to South Korea. During that trip, PC officials reached a deal between PC and Hui Nam University establishing a student exchange program between the two schools. After their work in South Korea was complete, the delegation spent 5 days in India, attempting to establish a similar program with a university there. After his retirement from PC, Burnside hopes to be able to spend an academic year teaching at Hui Nam.

While his academic specialty is American history, Burnside indicates that he has a growing interest in the Far East. "I've been drawn more and more to Asia," he said. In 1985, Burnside spent 6 weeks in India. In 1990, he took sabbatical and spent the spring and summer with his wife in northeastern China. His passport is filled in a way that would put most to shame. In all, Burnside has traveled and studied in approximately 8 other nations: Italy, England, Greece, Austria, the former Soviet Union, Korea and India.

Back in Clinton, Burnside is a caring citizen. He looks forward to volunteering in the community upon retirement. "Life is doors closing and doors opening. I think this door is closing for me, and I want to open some other doors. I don't feel bad about retiring, because I have other things that I will be retiring to," he said. He has a long list of programs to which he wishes to contribute his time. "My wife and I have worked with a literacy program in Laurens county for a while, and I'd like to do more of that," said Burnside. "I'd also like to do some work with Habitat for Humanity and Hospice, because I think those are both very valuable programs," he added. "Mainly, I'd like to keep doing things that affect the lives of people." On campus, Burnside is encouraged by the growth of Student Volunteer Services programs. "It's good to see that students are more concerned about the world around them. I have really enjoyed seeing the campus improve SVS and get more involved in the community." Burnside has participated with students in several service projects in the past few years, including two trips sponsored by the local Habitat for Humanity chapter. "In 1993, my wife and I traveled with a dozen or so students to Homestead, Florida to repair homes damaged by Hurricane Andrew. Last spring, we traveled to Albany, Georgia and repaired a home damaged by flooding. It's refreshing to see students willing to give up their Spring Break to serve and do missionary work," said Burnside.

In the coming years, the history department of the college will go through an almost complete makeover. Following Burnside in retirement by a few years will be Drs. Coker and Needham. The school has been interviewing prospective professors. The shoes are big ones to fill. Retirement is still a little ways off for Burnside, so he looks forward to completing his remaining semesters. "Until I retire, I'll keep up with the Tai Chi lessons. I'll lay the moves on the class, and they'll probably diss me again. But of course, they have to remember that I make out the grades in the end."

"Second season" begins for men's basketball at SAC Tournament

From the Blue Hose Sports Information Office

For the Presbyterian College men's basketball team, the 1995-96 Food Lion South Atlantic Conference Tournament means a new season and brings championship hopes. The Blue Hose have advanced to the SAC Tournament championship game on three occasions, including last season when Lenoir-Rhyne ousted Presbyterian, 52-50.

"Like every year in the past, it's anybody's tournament going in," Blue Hose head coach Gregg Nibert said. "It has been the kind of year where every night out is a battle to the finish. Obviously, the edge has to go to Catawba because of the regular season they had, but, after that, a number of teams can win it. I think the key is playing consistent defense and maintaining a certain focus for three straight days."

The Blue Hose are led by All South Atlantic Conference forward Ronnie Cannon, who leads Presbyterian in scoring, rebounding, steals and field goal percentage. AGT's Academic All-District selection who ranks among the league leaders in three statistical categories, Cannon has been instrumental in Presbyterian posting its sixth winning season in seven years under Nibert. On the year, Cannon, who was tabbed to last year's SAC All-Tournament Team after averaging 12.7 points and 6.0 rebounds in three tournament contests, has led PC in scoring 10 times and in rebounding 12 times.

Joining Cannon along the front-line is fellow junior forward Brian Franklin, who has responded well enough after missing last season with a knee injury to average just under 10 points per game. Franklin moved into the starting lineup in the final week of the regular season, tossing in 15 points on 6-of-6 field goal shooting versus Carson Newman and 16 points against Wingate in his first two start-up assignments of the year.

carry the load, and could receive some timely assistance. Freshman center Eric Burrow, who started 14 games for the Blue Hose and averaged 8.4 points and 6.3 rebounds per game while leading PC in blocked shots with 19, missed the final six games of the regular season due to stress fractures in his foot. However, Burrow will most likely not return for the rest of the season.

In the absence of Burrow, the Presbyterian chores fall into the capable hands of Rothwell and Rydzewski, both of whom shoot over 50 percent from the floor for the respective careers. Rydzewski, the 1994-95 SAC Freshman of the Year who averages eight points and five rebounds per game, is returning to full form after sitting out nine games with injury during the middle of the season. Rothwell picked up some valuable post-season experience a year ago, subbing in for the injured Rydzewski during the Blue Hose's tournament run. In PC's semifinal win over Carson-Newman, Rothwell chipped in 12 points and three rebounds in 29 minutes and, one night later in the championship game versus Lenoir-Rhyne, tallied 10 points on five-of-five shooting from the floor, and three blocked shots in 34 minutes of action.

Presbyterian's point guard duties are handled by sophomore Patrick Johnson and senior Billy Murphy. Johnson and Murphy stand one-two on the team in assists and combine to add 11 points per game to the team's scoring docket. Both quarterbacks play major roles for the Blue Hose in directing the PC offensive and defensive schemes.

On the wing, junior Andre Newman ranks second on the squad in scoring, averaging 13 points per outing. PC's team-leader in minutes and three-point field goals, Newman was exceptional in last season's tournament, joining Cannon on the all-tournament team after scoring a championship game-high 13 points on seven-of-ten shooting from the floor in the loss to Lenoir-Rhyne.

Young men's tennis team struggling to win close matches

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

As a coach, there are certain obstacles that you have to expect in a season. When your team is young, lack of experience is usually top on the list.

Entering his 13th season atop the Blue Hose, coach Bobby McKee is well aware of this unavoidable hurdle. "The toughest thing as far as teaching or coaching is trying to make your players see how to win that last game to close a set. I can help them figure out a strategy or come with a game plan, but, when it comes down to it, they've got to win it themselves," McKee said.

The Blue Hose fared well over this past weekend, defeating St. Andrews 5-2 and losing to USC-Wilmington 2-5. Singles winners from the match against St. Andrews included Presbyterian players Chuck Webb, Todd Roemmich, Will Stewart, and Ronnie Setzer at the #3-#6 spots. Webb struggled earlier in his match, winning the first set just 7-5, but he posted a strong finish in the second set (6-1) to close out the match. Roemmich came back to win his match (after losing the first set 3-6) by taking the second and third set 6-1 and 6-4. Stewart and Setzer cruised victory, both winning in two quick sets.

Though the loss to UNC-

Wilmington was disappointing, the Blue Hose remain even with 3 wins and 3 losses on the season. Coach McKee stressed the need for more Blue Hose victories to boost the team's confidence level.

"There's no substitute for a confidence builder except winning," said McKee.

PC Baseball suffers a week of close finishes

by Bret Evilszior
Staff Writer

The Presbyterian baseball team played five games last week finishing a disappointing 1-4 on the week. The Blue Hose encountered not only close games last week, but several of those close games had their share of close calls by the officials on the field as well which only frustrated the team even more.

Presbyterian visited Augusta College last Wednesday where PC came away victorious in a 6-5 win. The Blue Hose rallied with a run in the ninth to take the victory, and senior right-hander Glen Bergeron (1-0) was credited as the winning pitcher. Bergeron relieved sophomore right-hander Nate Green and freshman right-hander Keith Wilson who had both contributed significantly for the Blue Hose. Freshman Brad Boleman and senior Albert Mitchell led the offensive attack with two hits apiece with Damien "Mio" Patrick adding two doubles.

The Blue Hose continued on the road Thursday versus Francis Marion. The Hose lost a tight pitcher's duel in the bottom of the eleventh, 3-2. Freshman left-hander Justin Quinn had started the game, but he was relieved by Bergeron. Both Quinn and Bergeron pitched extremely suffered the loss. Mitchell again led the Hose offensive attack with two hits.

On Saturday and Sunday, Presbyterian faced its first SAC competitor of the year, Wingate. The Bulldogs, who were ranked number one in the country last year, took both games in the double header on Saturday and defeated the Blue Hose on Saturday as well. In game number one of the contest, sophomore pitcher Clay Hall (1-2) pitched an out-standing game but suffered a 3-2 setback despite his efforts.

Senior Sean McCarthy was a big hitter over the weekend for Blue Hose baseball.

"Clay pitched his best game since he's been here," said head coach Doug Kovash. Also, Hall rounded out his overall performance for the day with three hits to lead the offense.

In the second game of the double header on Saturday, sophomore pitcher Brett Evilszior (0-3) suffered the loss. The game was marked with a number of mishaps and unfavorable calls that came under heavy questioning by the Blue Hose squad.

"Those were some of the worst calls I've seen in a long, long time," stated Kovash.

Senior catcher Janie Garland said, "An umpire shouldn't play a part in the outcome of a game, but they did today."

In a game apparently plagued with bad calls, Hall led the way offensively with two hits, along with Mitchell who added two, including a home run in the 17-4 loss.

On Sunday in game three, the Hose suffered a tough loss in a close battle, 10-9. Bergeron (1-1) took the loss in relief.

The Blue Hose lost the lead in the sixth and battled back within one run in the eighth. Led by the strength of senior catcher Sean McCarthy, his three run homer gave the Blue Hose a light at the end of the tunnel, but they unfortunately couldn't convert any other effort into another run and left Wingate with three losses and zero wins.

Mitchell had two hits offensively, and Hall reached base four times on two hits, racking up two RBI's along the way.

The Blue Hose overall record now stands at (2-9) and (0-3) in the SAC.

"We're real close, but we just need to execute and get better," said Kovash. "We know we're a lot better than 2-9, now we've just got to go out and prove it on the field," said senior Erik Andress.

The Hose returned to action yesterday at home against USC-Spartanburg, and they play at home on Friday before heading on the road all of next week, over the spring break.

"Those were some of the worst calls I've seen in a long, long time," stated Kovash.

Mitchum leads Blue Hose women cagers into Cuddy Arena to battle for SAC supremacy

From the Blue Hose Sports Information Office

Presbyterian enters the 1995-96 Food Lion South Atlantic Conference Tournament in a different fashion than a year ago, when the Blue Hose defeated regular season co-champions Wingate and Carson-Newman on back-to-back days to win the title. This season, Presbyterian comes to Cuddy Arena as somewhat of an underdog in hopes of defending the league tournament crown.

"I truly believe it's anybody's tournament to win," Blue Hose head coach Beth Couture said. "As we proved this year, in our conference, anyone can beat anyone on a given night. Now it comes down to whoever can put three solid days of basketball together. I feel good about our chances, but we've got to be consistent as well as a little bit lucky."

Four starters from last year's 74-68 championship game victory over Carson-Newman have departed, but Chris Mitchum, PC's lone senior and the 1995 SAC Tournament Most Valuable Player is back. Mitchum, the conference's all-time three-point field goal leader and one of just seven players in NCAA Division II history to record 250 or more three-pointers, will hope the rims are as kind to her and the rest of the Blue Hose as they were last March.

In three tournament games last year, Mitchum connected on 13 of 24 shots from behind the three point stripe including a SAC tournament record five-of-10 effort in the title tilt. Mitchum played in 31, 39, and 38 minutes in the three contest, handing out 20 assists while committing just two turnovers. She logged 18 points and seven assists in the win over the Eagles as Presbyterian captured its first-ever SAC Tournament championship and advanced to the NCAAAs for the second year in a row.

The 1995-96 edition of Blue Hose basketball has been a learning experience for the younger players on the roster as well as a nurturing process for Mitchum and the team's three juniors.

Mitchum and junior Karen Neeley have been Presbyterian's steady point scorers, averaging around 12 point per game apiece for the duration of the season

Both have showed signs of explosion,

Mitchum with a career high 29 points against Mars Hill and 24 versus Gardner-Webb and Neeley with 26 points against Lenoir Rhyne and 23 versus Carson Newman. Mitchum has hit at least one three-point field goal in every SAC game this season and 25 of 26 on the year.

Mitchum, a pre-season All SAC selection and one of eight players in Blue Hose history to score over 1,000 career points, and Neeley, Presbyterian's leader in minutes, steals and free throw percentage are joined by freshman Heather Couch in the backcourt, and all three have handed out over 80 assists on the season. Couch has started 15 games for Presbyterian in her rookie campaign and tallied a season high 17 points as the Blue Hose handed conference champion Mars Hill its first league loss of the season on February 7.

The Blue Hose have received a late season lift from a pair of freshman perimeter players in Darah Hultman and Amy Sharpe. In her first career start against Carson-Newman on February 19, Hultman tossed in 10 points in 15 minutes while Sharpe logged season highs of 12 points against Gardner Webb on February 17 and seven assists against Carson-Newman on February 19.

Along the frontline, junior center Watoma Williams has enjoyed a fine second-half of the season and ranks third on the team in scoring and second in rebounding. Williams, who ranks fourth on PC's all-time blocked shots list, has scored in double figures in seven of her last nine contests entering the tournament. Late season productivity is no stranger to Williams, who holds averages of 11.0 points, 7.7 rebounds and 3.3 blocks per game in three career NCAA Tournament contests.

Junior Ellison Manley, sophomore Denzel Barman and Tonya Kelley, along with freshman Jennifer Condon have all played key minutes in the post for Presbyterian this season. Kelley ranks among the league leaders in blocked shots while Barman paces the Blue Hose in rebounding.

Golf team strokin' through spring season

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

Presbyterian's Golf team has grown in its success year by year, this year has been no exception. Over the course of the whole season, the Blue Hose have accumulated two first place finishes, one second, two third place finishes, and one fourth.

Since five players play in a match and only the highest four are counted in the scoring, a variety of players have been able to contribute to Presbyterian's success on the green this year.

Freshman Eric Williamson has been PC's most consistent player, posting a 73.1 stroke average thus far. Williamson has finished #1 in several tournaments this year, and he continues to perform at level that is rewarding, not only to him, but the team as well.

"I'm pleased at how we're doing as a team," Williamson said. "Coach (Tommy) Addison has done a lot for this program since he's been here. It's weird to walk on the course and realize that other teams are kind of intimidated by us."

The reasons for intimidation are evident in one glance down the Presbyterian roster. Following right behind Williamson's 73.1 stroke average are senior All-SAC performers Chris Wilkins (75.3) and Jim Kent (76.1). Senior captain Perrin Powell posts a 77.5 stroke average, just a notch behind junior Chuck King and sophomore Chris Essy (77.3).

Coach Addison sited strong play from Gabe Southards, Cliff Hicks and Robert Murdock as well, focusing on strong efforts by all team members heading into the Cheerwine Challenge at Holden Beach, NC March 1-3.

If we have a strong finish at Cheerwine, we'll have a very good chance of making it to the NCAA II tournament," Addison said.

Right now the Blue Hose are ranked 16th in nation and 2nd in the region. Should the Blue Hose continue on their path of success, seeing how they have finished in the top four out of the six tournaments they've played, a bid to National seems to be a strong possibility.

The Golf team will participate in two other tournaments after the Cheerwine Challenge. On March 10-12 they will compete in the Max Ward Invitational, and on March 17-19 they will play in the Arby's/KFC International tournament.

What athletes say about playing college sports

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

ESPN recently ranked Gorrie as the #10 full back in the country, and, as the draft approaches, it seems as if Gorrie's childhood dream might become a reality.

"I wanted to be the best I could be," said Gorrie. "Football wasn't a stress in my life, I wanted to do it. No one forced me to go into the weight room and lift to get stronger. It's just a drive I've got inside myself to work harder than the rest. I wanted to be the best, and so far, I've accomplished everything I've wanted to except for the NFL. I'm not only did all of his hard work pay off, but a little bit of luck fell in his favor too. A scare with a minor back injury during the '94 season made Gorrie realize, for a short time, that football could be taken away from him in one unfortunate second of a game.

Senior guard Kristy Tarallo learned first-hand what that unfortunate second could do to a career in an ill-fated moment of a basketball game early this season when she tore her ACL (anterior collateral ligament). The infamous ligament, known for robbing athletes of anything from a season to a whole career, was torn along with her meniscus just

PC's Women's Tennis playing well despite tough loss against Augusta

by Kelli Kirkland
Staff Writer

Last week the Presbyterian College Women's Tennis team faced two opponents. On Wednesday, the Blue Hose battled with Augusta College at home where they lost their first match of the season 5-2, but the team recovered from the tough loss when they traveled to USC-Spartanburg on Friday, as they defeated the hosting team, 6-1.

Against Augusta the doubles winners were Robyn Loveless and Dawn Dachelet at the number two spot, and Jennifer Brim and Dana Davis at the number three spot. Chrissie Bolt was the lone singles winner, securing her match in just two sets (6-0, 6-1). Strong efforts were also posted in singles play by Loveless and Jennifer Brim, who suffered narrow defeats, taking their matches into three sets.

Despite the tough loss, the Lady Hose did not stumble, and they channeled their efforts into Friday's match against USC-Spartanburg. "The team really pulled together after the loss on Wednesday. We played with intensity and it paid off for us," said sophomore Kimberly Hampton.

Presbyterian cashed in on 6-of-7 points in the match, with the only loss stemming from a close match by Loveless in the #1 spot. Loveless, who was suffering from a slight tendon problem, lost the first match 1-6. However, she almost battled back in the second set, losing a tie breaker 7-4.

The points in NCAA division II matches are won individually, each singles position counting for one point, giving a total of six points. What can be the determining factor is the seventh point that comes from the doubles play. Three sets of doubles teams play one pro-set a piece and the team who wins two out of three of the pro-sets gets the seventh point.

The doubles point can make a big difference in a match, especially when the opposing team does not have at least six players and has to default both the number six singles spot and one-third of the doubles point. This scenario has worked in favor of the Blue Hose this season who are hardly short on numbers.

"Our doubles teams have improved dramatically from fall play because we've realized how important the doubles point is in winning matches," said Dawn Dachelet.

Presbyterian faced Wofford yesterday and they will travel to Savannah for a Tournament at Armstrong St. over Spring Break. The Blue Hose will return home to begin the bulk of their conference play after the break.

willing to make. Sometimes, no matter how much an athlete loved a sport in high school, wanting to play was not enough.

What being in sorority or fraternity or other campus organizations? What if you'd rather lie out in the sun on a warm spring day instead of sweat through a practice? Or what if you simply felt that you weren't getting the total "college experience" because you simply had no extra time? That's where athletes make the sacrifice.

Junior biology major Catherine Clayton knows first-hand about the sacrifice it takes to play a college sport. When Clayton arrived at PC in the Fall of '93, she made new friends, committed herself as a biology major, and joined a sorority. However, letting go of high school basketball proved to be too much. The following fall Clayton successfully walked-on for the Lady Hose, and began a juggling act that would ultimately prove to be too much.

"It's really hard to go to a sorority meeting after practicing and working out for three hours, then after studying for a test the next day, and on top of that, try to keep up with what is going on with your friends," said Clayton. "I really admire the athletes who can keep this balance because I know just how hard it is."

So the next time you drive by the soccer field, the tennis courts, the baseball field, or any other Blue Hose athletes in action, stop by and support them for a little while. With the spring sun shining, you'll most likely pick up a tan, and you'll be giving the athletes that work and train so hard the support they deserve.

The Last Word: Things you need to know to be a valuable person

by Leighton Hart and
Tommy Reiser

Here we are again, trapped behind this computer screen, searching for things to tell you, the students of Presbyterian College. And while we don't claim to play what people might call a "valuable" role in the day-to-day life of this campus, we would like to point out that since our last column, there have been no fire drills in Georgia Hall. That's probably not saying a whole lot, since the last paper came out about a week ago, but it does feel good to know that maybe we had something to do with that. All we have to figure out now is if those alarms stopped because people actually got tired of standing outside in the cold at 2 a.m., or if we scared too many folks with the "skin-tight leather bodyduits" comment.

What we're going to do is jump from topic to topic here, so see if you can follow along. Consider this a random collection of our thoughts, experiences, and stuff you need to know to be a worthwhile person.

The Future of the Nation

Pardon us while we editorialize here for awhile. A fortnight ago, voters in Louisiana thought it would be funny if Pat Buchanan won their little presidential primary thing. Please note that we're talking about a state where David Duke (a former high-ranking KKK member) was elected to public office. A state of people who thought the German SS was just "misunderstood." A place where organized hate and racism really isn't all that bad. All that notwithstanding, they decided (in the interest of good humor, we're guessing) that ol' Pat would be the right guy to perpetuate democracy and understanding as President of the United States. Not to be outdone, New Hampshire voters picked Pat as their man, too. Picking up on a trend here aren't we? Just to let you know, there is still time to do something about this. South Carolina, Georgia and Florida (many of our home states) haven't had their primaries yet. Go to the polls. Our pick: Lamar!

Enough of the stuff that matters, let's get down to business here. A few weeks ago, we got on the horn with Ticketmaster and got ourselves a couple tickets to the Bush concert at the Carolina Coliseum. For some sick reason, we decided to make a day of it, and took our golf clubs with us to get in 18 before the show. Now, we know what you're thinking, what business do these two trashballs have a golf course? Well, as it turns out, not much. That's a funny thing, too, because both of our fathers are PGA tour regulars. Maybe you've seen them: PGA rules say that any time a tour golfer makes a bad shot on national TV, someone must be drawn out of the crowd and beaten and flogged. So, for years, Pop Reiser and Daddy Hart have been sneaking into every major tournament, and trying to get themselves both beaten and flogged. Last year at The Masters, Ben Crenshaw made a bloody mess of them. Then, at the U.S. Open, Corey Pavin tied them to a golf cart and dragged them the length of the 14th fairway. So, you can see that we are not unfamiliar with the world of golf. But for some reason, the game was not on our side this fine Sunday. So, after we tied each other for a course record 253, we played the back 9 and then spent the better part of an hour beating and flogging each other.

Before long, we headed for the big show. That brings us to:

Concert Etiquette 101

To leave the plaid flannel shirts and well-worn khakis of PC to attend a Bush concert was quite the culture shock. Maybe a big part of that had to do with two things. 1) The average age of the student body at PC is probably somewhere around 20 years of age. The average age of the Bush crowd was somewhere around 14. 2) We drove to the show in an automobile owned and legally operated by one Leighton Hart. Upon completion of the concert, many folks assumed seats on the curbs around the coliseum and waited for mom to come get them. This actually played out to our advantage, since our car was the only one in the parking lot. You tend to get out a lot faster when you're the only one around. The look in the eye of the money-collector at the parking lot was like the one we get when we pull our little man that we keep in the ceiling out of his cage and give him his weekly corn nugget ration. He was elated to see us.

Concert rule #1: Never buy a concert shirt and immediately put it on. It shows that you're just a little too excited to be at that show. Tuck it away somewhere, like in a purse or something. The only reason you bought the shirt in the first place was to get attention, and when you're at the concert no one is going to ask you, "Hey, did you go to Bush?" So, it defeats the purpose to wear it instantly. You don't walk in the Gap and buy a shirt and immediately put it on and stand next to the display case waiting for someone to say, "Hey, did you get that shirt at the Gap?"

Afternoon Dilemma

It comes around everyday at the same time. At 4:00, we sit perplexed in front of the TV, debating the issue that remains unresolved. Will it be The Dukes of Hazard or Oprah? The pros are many for each and the cons are few. It ultimately comes down between Oprah and Daisy. Sure, you say, Daisy wears those tight, short shorts and a cute little nappin for a shirt. But you never know what Oprah might be talking about on any given day. The other day, as we flipped channels between the two shows, we witnessed Bo and Luke Duke racing through the back roads of Alabama or wherever, being chased by Roscoe P. Coltrane, while Oprah was having a very special episode on Fascist that wish to control the world. Enough already on Buchanan, we opted for the Dukes on this afternoon.

Upcoming Class Elections

It's once again that time of the year at PC when we all begin seeing those clever banners on columns and empty promises about "better quality food at GDH," pervade the campus. That's right. Political revolutionaries will seek to vastly change the world we live in as PC holds its class elections shortly after the break of spring. As many of you know, a large group of women ran our campus during the past year. We're not saying there's something wrong with that. We respect the job that each of these fine, young, beautiful ladies. In fact, any time one of you girls would like to discuss your political views, we would welcome you up here on 3rd floor Georgia. The point is, however, that it's time a guy or two makes his way into the SGA office. On the other hand, for Junior Class President, we have to support the best and most qualified candidate. In this case it so happens to be a girl, a girl by the name of Chenlu. Help us to support one of our future leaders at PC. You may not see her out giving speeches or walking around shaking hands. She prefers to stay low-key after the Homecoming queen campaign she ran earlier this year turned negative. However, the spirit of Chenlu can be felt by all. Do PC and yourself a favor rising juniors. Write in Chenlu for president.

The Conclusion

We hope that, once again, we have been able to enlighten our fellow Blue Hose in the matters that are important to us all. We live in a random world, hence the random column. It's a world where two otherwise lifeless guys can get a regular feature on the back page of a booming college newspaper. A world where people line up and pay money to be served "Chicken & Apranagus Casserole" and "Pork Steak." A world where men dress like women, and it's Clinton, our own little world.

Priceless

SACS committee finds that PC offers a strong, healthy program

by Laura Jacobs
Staff Writer

Strange faces on campus and professors' bloodshot eyes have been an indication that self-study frenzy has recently overtaken PC in preparation for evaluation by SACS, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. The commotion is the result of two-and-a-half years of work on the college's self-study, a requirement for reaccreditation by SACS, an organization which evaluates independent schools and colleges to determine their eligibility for federal funds.

"This is a process which is required every ten years in order for the college to be reaccredited," said Dr. George Ramsey, director of PC's self-study. "SACS requires every accredited college to carry out a very thorough examination of virtually everything that goes on at the college." And they do mean everything. From service programs to soccer, from faculty to funding, from intramurals to information systems, PC was scrutinized from top to bottom, first by PC insiders — faculty, administrators, students, alumni, and members of the Board of Trustees — and then by a team of visitors from other colleges in the south.

Ramsey said, "There are three main levels. First, every department carries out a study of its own work. At the next level, we have eight committees." Each of those eight was composed of a chairperson (usually a faculty member), other faculty members, students, members of the administration, and PC staff employees.

"The third level is the steering committee. They held close to fifty meetings during this three year period. The department reports went to committees, and the committee reports went to the steering committee." The fourteen member head committee included select faculty members, as well as President Orr, other members of the administration, and associate directors of the study, Mrs. Ann Moorefield and Dr. Ron Dempsey.

Dempsey explained that the visiting committee was chosen by SACS and is specific to PC; every other school requiring reaccreditation receives its own committee appointed by SACS. "We were pleased that they [members of the visiting committee] came from comparable institutions. They understand where we are and what our mission is," said Dempsey. The members were from colleges including Sewanee, Randolph-Macon, and Hampden-Sydney.

According to the 319 page document published by the self-study committee of the college, that mission is to "develop within the framework of the Christian faith the mental, physical, moral, and spiritual capacities of each student in preparation for a lifetime of personal and vocational fulfillment and responsible contribution to our democratic society and the world community."

Dempsey added that the purpose of the visiting committee was to "fill in the holes" in the self-study document. "Their main purpose for being on campus was to make sure PC is adhering to SACS standards. They examine concerns we expressed in self-study." Or, as Dr. William Moncrief, Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs, put it, "They check every thing out to see if we're telling the truth."

Moncrief described the process of reaccreditation as "important, complex, and complicated. It is hard to get the full picture of SACS across without being intimately involved with the process. Colleges have joined together and have come up with a set of criteria they must abide by in order to be reaccredited. You have to be accredited to receive federal funds. Rather than the government doing the checking, they allow colleges to set the criteria."

"We surveyed students, faculty, administrators, alumni, trustees, nearly every group that has anything to do with the college," said Ramsey. "That gave us a semi-reliable reading of how people perceive things around PC." In addition to the school-conducted surveys, members of the visiting team talked to several PC students last week, among them, McDowell Crook.

"They asked us questions about how what aspects of the school needed improving," said Crook, "what we liked and disliked about our major programs. They asked fair, good questions. They were genuinely curious, not trying to dig up any mud to sling."

After the surveys and departmental studies were completed, the results were compiled into a massive document available to anyone who would like to see it. According to Ramsey, "Ann Moorefield took committee reports and typed up the big institutional document. That document went through three or four drafts."

"All the faculty on campus are included," said Moncrief. "In the process of looking at everything, we come up with ideas of things we want to do differently. There is a whole list of proposals, things the institution decides it wants to do differently. That's the most valuable part."

The visiting committee came up with suggestions of their own called, appropriately, "recommendations." "We had an exit interview Thursday," said Dempsey, "where the visiting committee read to us recommendations, any place PC is not in perfect alignment with SACS criteria." "These recommendations are not a matter of public record," continued Dempsey, "but will be sent to the PC committee in two weeks, at which time we can respond to factual errors. Probably the first of the summer, we will receive the final document and have a chance to refute or rebut recommendations."

According to Moncrief, PC will then act on the suggestions. "Some problems will take all of thirty seconds to correct. Some will take some planning and analysis to push forward," said Moncrief. Dempsey added that "the main area we received recommendations in was the area of evaluation. We're supposed to evaluate curriculum, major programs, etcetera, which means looking at programs and seeing if we have met the goals we have set."

According to Ramsey, "Accreditation says to the public 'this college has been carefully scrutinized and really measures up to high educational standards.'" Moncrief said, "We were assured by this committee that their recommendations involved nothing major. They essentially said we have a strong, healthy program."

Letter to the Editor • Letter to the Editor • Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor:

I'm writing concerning the new Redneck Store (as it is officially called, I'm not stereotyping it) and the recent controversy surrounding it. I was discouraged to even hear about it, and have continued to be discouraged after my visit there today. I don't understand why someone feels the need to open a storefront representation of racist beliefs. I understand and respect all people's right to do so, but if it is offensive to the majority of the community, why keep it open. I think the rally held in Laurens Square and the continued media attention have shown that racism is not a societal norm. It is not to be tolerated in this community, nor others. I want the owner of the store and those he represents to know that I and a number of other members of the Presbyterian College community, both faculty and students, love him, but cannot condone the racist views being presented to the community. Nor can we tolerate the views held by the establishment of the Ku Klux Klan. Our intolerance of racism, however, does not affect our love for the store owner and other members of the KKK. In fact, it is out of love for these fellow members of the community that I write this letter.

I'm not writing this letter out of a belief that the store owner does not have the right to keep his store open. I believe in his right to hold the values he holds and to peacefully represent them. I would, however, like to ask the community, and more importantly the store owner, how the community is a better place for its being open. For racism and bigotry to be sold on the street corner like chewing gum doesn't speak well of the unity of our community. Frederick Beuchner, Dr. Martin Luther King, Albert Camus, Jean-Paul Sartre, Immanuel Kant, and many other famous philosophers and social movers have all presented us with the idea that whether or not we like it, we are members of a community. We now have two options: we can contribute productively to it or help to destroy it. I feel that racism only helps to destroy community. I may have to respect peoples' rights to hold such views, but I'm also obligated to voice my opinion that racist views are simply wrong. Racism is not in accordance with the preservation of harmony and brotherhood of all mankind. The word "unity" is an important part of the word "community." I ask that all members of the communities affected by this unjustifiable bigotry recognize the need for unity rather than division in their own immediate community. Then ask yourself, "Is this store contributing productively to our community?"

In hopes of a more unified community,
Phillip Barron

SGA holds class officer elections

Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

On Wednesday, March 20th, PC students took to the polls to elect new class leaders for the 1996-1997 academic year. Three students ran unopposed for offices representing the senior class. Matt Bishop will serve as class president, and will be supported by two class representatives, Laura Cain and Alison McNair. Serving as junior class president will be Mitchell Moore, and he will be supported by representatives Brian Gorney and Leighton Hart. Laura Keely ran unopposed for the office of sophomore class president. Keely served this year as freshman class president. Sophomore class representatives will be Karin Miller and Mary Frances Patrick, both Student Government Association veterans after serving as freshman class representatives this year.

These students, as well as those elected to serve on SGA's Executive Council, were inaugurated and installed to their offices in a small ceremony held Monday, March 25th. At that ceremony, outgoing SGA President Leigh Davis passed the presidential gavel to Blythe Matheson, who will serve in that office. Matheson, a junior from Vidalia, Georgia, looks forward to serving. "I think that this new SGA is going to work well. I think it's a good group of students...it should be a lot of fun," said Matheson.

Matheson plans on identifying and implementing ways to "strengthen" the programs SGA offers and expand the relationship between faculty, administration, and students. Last year's election centered around the issue of PC's status as what some called a "suitecase college." This year's administration tried to battle that designation, resulting in the establishment of Calhoun's. The campus pub was intended to serve as a comfortable venue for Greek and non-Greek students alike to gather and associate. "I'm hoping Calhoun's will gain popularity and that more people will go there on weekend nights, and that just may happen. With increased restrictions at fraternity court, maybe it will get more popular in the next year or so," said Matheson. With respect to the entire suitcase college debate, Matheson believes that the SGA has been successful in battling the problem and keeping students on campus during the weekends. "I've seen a big decrease in the number of students who leave this year has been so much better," she explained. Matheson also attributes much of the success of the outgoing SGA to a more open relationship with administrators. "We talked a lot with Dean Nixon this year, and he told us that maybe he had made some mistakes," said Matheson. Matheson acknowledged that communication between all segments of the PC community will be vital to the success of her tenure in office.

One unique aspect of the newly-elected SGA is that four males hold class office. Last year's elections brought females into every class position available, however when junior class representative Beth Peake left campus to study in Washington, D.C., she was replaced by Kurt Hartley. "I'm very excited to have more males on the SGA," said Matheson. "We can finally have a male point of view, and hopefully this will get the ball rolling for more males to run for office."

The new SGA will step into action at the conclusion of this semester. After exams are complete, the council will take a one-night retreat to Camp Fellowship in Greenwood, where they will make plans for the fall semester, make committee assignments, and plan freshman orientation.

PC's Thompson featured in Spring issue of Sandlapper Magazine

Dr. Dean Thompson, associate professor of English at Presbyterian College, is profiled in the Spring '96 issue of Sandlapper, The Magazine of South Carolina.

In "Presbyterian College's 'Mr. Chips,'" writer Aida Rogers interviews the popular professor sometimes known as "Dr. Death." What she finds is more than an academician.

"He's counseled them, cooked for them, invited them over for a Charlie Brown Christmas," Rogers writes. "He's been known to play Scrabble with them and even use his banjo to break their writer's block. Students invite him home on fall break, he serves them Moon Pies on sterling silver—symbolic of his passion for southern literature." Thompson, 37, is a Spartanburg native educated at Wofford College, the University of South Carolina and Vanderbilt University. This summer he will teach a course in Arthurian legends at Oxford University in England.

Sandlapper is a quarterly feature magazine about South Carolina—its people, places, history and culture. Locally, the magazine is available at Carter's Gifts in Clinton, Individual copies are $4.

This issue covers more than a dozen topics, including historic Aiken, the state ports authority and the booming equine and cotton industries in South Carolina. The Beacon Drive-In in Spartanburg, expansion plans at Brookgreen Gardens in Murrells Inlet and National Shag Dance Championship in Myrtle Beach are featured as well. The Dori Sanders Book Club, a group of "new readers" in Greenville that recently published its own book, is covered. So are the reunions of Confederate veterans and Nina Mae McKinney of Lancaster, an African-American film star in the '20s and '30s.

Rounding out this issue are columns about restaurants and inns in South Carolina, a list of public gardens and a photo gallery of children enjoying springtime activities.

Sandlapper is published by the Sandlapper Society Inc., a non-profit, 501(c)(3) organization. Annual dues are $16. To join, call 803-359-9954, or write the society at P.O. Box 1108, Lexington, SC 29071. Mastercard, VISA and personal checks are accepted.

Smith adds experience and personal touch to canteen

by Charles Smith
Staff Writer

If you have ever seen a light blue Cadillac with a white top parked outside Springs Campus Center, then you have seen the indication that somewhere within the campus bookstore or canteen Clyde Smith is hard at work. Smith has been a mainstay on the PC campus for the last sixteen years, serving as the operator of the PC canteen and bookstore in Springs since 1980. Smith has seen a lot of changes take place on the PC campus, but admits the key to running the canteen effectively is remembering that students are real customers. "The students pay a premium to attend Presbyterian College, and we know that. All the workers at the canteen try to make sure that students are satisfied with our service and that we serve the food fast."

Clyde Smith's wife, Ann, also works in the campus store and according to Smith, "she even usually does what I ask her to do. I really do like being able to work with my wife. She's been here just as long as I have."

Smith, who is originally from Laurens County, worked for Belk Simpson for twelve years where he gained a lot of his retailing experience. Smith then moved on to operate a canteen at the Whitten Center for seven years. Smith said of his time at the Whitten Center, "It was a very different experience to work with retarded children, however, it was also nice to be able to serve kids." Smith can easily recall numerous humorous stories that took place during those years.

Clyde Smith has operated the PC canteen and bookstore for the last 16 years.

Smith started the canteen operation at PC in May of 1980. He said at that time the canteen was a very small operation located in Douglas House. At the same time Smith said that he started hanging PC sweatshirts and t-shirts out as well as selling textbooks. That operation grew into what is now the PC bookstore.

About his years at PC Smith said, "I have had a very pleasant experience working at PC." He considers the students to be customers, and he often goes the extra mile to make sure that the students are satisfied and keep coming back to the canteen. However, Smith emphasizes that he has a lot of good people helping him in the canteen. Two PC students, John Johnson and Kevin Cartee, who help run the canteen on weekends and nights, are especially helpful in keeping the canteen running smoothly.

The fondness Smith has for the students is reciprocal. "Mr. Smith is a very hard-working man. He's generous and kind. His main concern is always pleasing the students. I really like working for him."

Smith was very happy when students were able to use their meal cards at the canteen. He feels that the students should have that option. With the use of meal cards Smith says that the canteen's business has skyrocketed. He hopes that more students will utilize the option that they have to use their meal card at the canteen.

Smith wants to emphasize that he very much appreciates the students' business. He will do whatever it takes to keep the students satisfied with the service at the canteen.

Chastain named Army ROTC cadet of the year for the state of South Carolina Presbyterian College senior James Chastain has been named the 1996 Major General Strom Thurmond Outstanding Army ROTC Cadet of the Year by the South Carolina Department of the Reserve Officers Association of the United States. Chastain will be honored at the Department Annual Convention Awards Luncheon on April 27 in Greenville.

While in the Army ROTC program, Chastain has served a squad leader, platoon leader, assistant operations officer, and is currently the cadet battalion commander with the rank of lieutenant colonel. During advanced camp in 1995, he received a "4" rating as a member of the honor platoon, and earned the coveted RECONDO Badge. Chastain also participated in the Cadet Troop Leadership Training (CLT) program at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, where he functioned in the capacity of platoon leader in an active duty field artillery battalion. He has also been assessed for Regular Army (field artillery) and will be commissioned as a second lieutenant in May 1996.

Chastain's success at PC has not gone unnoticed, as he has been awarded the ROTC Scholars Award for four years; been named to the Dean's List; been recognized a Distinguished Military Student, been a varsity letterman and member of the Ranger Challenge. He has also earned the ROTC Physical Fitness Award, and he has served as editor of The Highlander newsletter, treasurer of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, and as a member of the Judicial Council's Appeals Board. Chastain is also a member of the Order of Omega, and has served as a SGA Class Representative, a biology laboratory assistant, and a resident assistant.

PC comprehensive student fees to increase 4.9% for 1996-97

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

In a letter sent to PC students, parents, faculty, officers and directors, President Kenneth Orr announced the smallest percentage budget increase in 20 years. According to the letter, comprehensive student charges will increase by only 4.9%.

This small increase is the product of what Vice President of Finance Skip Zubrod deemed a "very conservative policy in terms of increases." That conservative policy was adopted by college officials as a means of keeping PC affordable to students. Part of the plan to keep PC affordable, Zubrod says, is a gradual reduction in percentage increase over the next few years. "We're trying to reduce the percentage increase yearly, to the point where it will mirror the consumer price index," said Zubrod.

Comprehensive student charges (the sum of tuition, fees, room and board charges) make up between 78% and 79% of the school's yearly revenue. The remaining 21% to 22% comes from other sources, including gifts to the school, endowment earnings, and outside earnings from the bookstore and GDH. By keeping those charges low, the school stands to benefit in two ways. First, low charges keep PC affordable to present students. Second, affordability provides the school with a competitive edge with respect to other comparable colleges. "Certainly, PC's charges are considerably below the average for other schools," said Zubrod. By keeping the school affordable, Zubrod notes, prospective students from more diverse social and economic backgrounds will be able to consider PC.

While it would seem that there is nothing wrong with an effort to save money and reduce financial burdens on parents, the conservative policy of the school is a bit of a "double-edged sword," said Zubrod. "Having student charges average about $1400 below other schools is certainly an advantage in some ways," he explained. "On the other hand, it means that the school has to do without some things that we would like to have, such as more computers and science equipment."

In addition, there are certain factors that can not be easily anticipated when the budget is made that have to be compensated for. According to Zubrod, financial aid to students, cost-of-living increases for faculty and staff, and utility rate increases can not be set in stone at the time the budget is formulated. For that reason, the school's actual budget rarely matches the projected budget exactly.

In the future, the college may begin to look to outside sources to raise revenues for the school. While college officials have no definite plans at the moment, Zubrod indicated that there are several ways the college could tap into other sources of revenue. With the completion of the Harrington Peachtree Church Academic Center, the college is now much more able to provide conference space for local industries and organizations. In addition, Zubrod discussed the possibility of leasing college land behind campus to commercial interests. "We hope that all of this shows the student body that we have a genuine concern for keeping the school affordable, and that we are seeking ways to avoid inflating student charges," said Zubrod.

The college is so serious about addressing the issues of rising costs for higher education and affordability that it has formed a special task force to deal with such matters. The task force, which is still in its infancy, is made up of members of the PC administration and the Clinton community. According to Vice President for Enrollment and Dean of Admissions Margaret Williamson, the committee has only met twice, and has just begun the process of "brainstorming" to find ways to save money and preserve affordability. Williamson indicated that reduced financial support from the federal government has led to an increased burden on the school to provide financial assistance to students, while still maintaining the same quality programs and services. "Also," said Williamson, "parents and students are looking more closely at what they will get out of education. They are looking at graduation figures and graduate school acceptance rates. Affordability is certainly more of an issue today than it was a few years ago."

From an admissions standpoint, Williamson believes that being able to provide an affordable education will benefit PC. "Certainly, PC is attracting students from more broad socio-economic backgrounds than it has before," she commented. "We are hoping that if we can keep the education affordable and continue to offer a good product, that we will be an attractive school to prospective students."

Spring Swing '96

Hundreds of Presbyterian College students gathered on the intramural fields parking lot last Friday to enjoy an afternoon of music and fellowship at the annual Spring Swing concert. The SUB-sponsored concert is one of several large events the organization puts on each year. This year the crowds were entertained by two great bands, Seven Miles and Uncle Mingo. After Seven Miles' hour-long opening set, Uncle Mingo charmed the crowd with its original sound for two hours. Students used the occasion to relax in the sun, throw frisbees, and associate with friends. The school's new public alcohol policy allowed of-age students to enjoy a frosty beverage or two during the event. The concert, which had the benefit of great weather, was well attended.

Open Door Community allows PC students to open heart and mind

by Tyler Henson
Guest Writer

If you qualify as one of the typical Blue Stocking readers, it is pretty safe to say that you have never spent a night in your life sleeping on concrete. Well, not by choice, anyways. Unfortunately though, many more people than you might imagine sleep that way every night of their lives. These are the homeless, and they will certainly tell you that cold

The basic services of the Open Door are those of a soup kitchen and clothes closet. During the week the community provides either a full breakfast or lunch, typically vegetarian, to nearly 200 persons per day. Weekly, there is also the opportunity for homeless friends to come and shower and exchange their clothes for a new clean set. Other services provided include blankets in winter, a free public phone, a public bathroom (one of only two in the area), and light volunteer medical services. The Open Door operates exclusively on donations—food, money, clothing. While we take these basic necessities of life for granted, the homeless struggle for them daily. In a city whose laws frown upon the homeless and their plight, the front and backyard of the house serve as a safe haven and refuge for any and all who may pass by.

community, was also a graduate of our own fine institution. Because of this, PC has enjoyed an exciting and special relationship with the Open Door for many years. This connection includes weekend trips to the shelter and a week-long experience through Chaplain Greg Henley's Third World class. Your fellow students have chosen to immerse themselves in this intentional community and give to it in any way possible. You name it, we've done it—from preparing meals to cleaning bathrooms, painting walls to handing out new clothes. Carrie Duello, a recent volunteer visitor, said she had "a wonderful time. I learned more about homelessness and death row over the past weekend than I could have in any other setting."

These kinds of responses are not atypical. Cathy Magee felt her experience was "an amazing one. Every PC student should go and spend a weekend there." Linck Schlich is even considering applying for a position as a resident volunteer for the upcoming summer. It is quite obvious that something special and beautiful is happening down in Atlanta.

Holly Nelson put it best when she noted how she was "struck constantly by the types of people I met. While these men and women lived such a different life from me, we were at the same time very similar." Holly saw what anyone who has ever worked to help the homeless knows that we, underneath, are all human and equally in need of God's love and affection. The community makes it clear that "We learn from each other and strive to eliminate racism, poverty, sexism, any classism in order to live in a world that treats everyone with love and compassion rather than as objects," said Nelson.

As one of the many fine programs of the Student Volunteer Services, the PC Open Door program has taken students to Atlanta for the weekend on four different occasions over this school year. Members of the Third World class have also visited. If you are interested in learning more of the details about the Open Door trip opportunities, please contact Tyler Henson at 8038 or the Chaplain's Office.

Last weekend, the Blue Hose accumulated two conference wins as they rolled over Elon at home on Friday and Catawba at home on Saturday. These two conference wins represented two of the past six victories in the Blue Hose's past matches. The Blue Hose stand 11-4 overall and have been enjoying a very successful season. The strength of the Blue Hose is evident in the fact that all but two of their eleven wins have been by at least a five point lead, and two of the losses have been by just one point.

The top rung of the Lady Hose ladder has been disturbed by the brief absence of #1 singles player Robyn Lovelless due to a wrist injury, and Dawn Dachelet has missed several matches (and continues to be sidelined) due to a hot spot in her shin. Hot spots are usually the beginning of a stress fracture, and Dachelet will unfortunately just have to wait until they go away. Other wise, PC has had strong performances in the singles spots. Kimberly Hampton, Jennifer Brim, Dana Davis, and Chrissie Bolt have all gone 6-0 in the conference. Hampton and Bolt have remained unbeaten overall in singles with records of 8-0 and 12-0 respectively.

In doubles Hampton and Bolt have held their ground in the number one spot combining to win 5 out of 5 SAC matches and go 10-3 overall. Brim and Dana Davis is 6-0 in the SAC and 9-3 overall at the #5 spot for the Hose.

Davis have also been a dependable duo at the #3 doubles spot, winning 4 out of 4 SAC matches and going 10-0 overall.

A series of conference wins began with a 6-1 win over Mars Hill. Marha Correll stepped up beautifully into the number #2 spot and won a heated match against Laura Scully 3-6, 6-1, 7-6. Correll has been seeing a large amount of playing time at the number two spot as adjustments have been necessary in that position. Stacie Buttorff has also stepped up to play in the #1 and #2 spots as well, winning a match against Lenior-Rhyne in the team's sweep (6-0) on the 15th.

In last weekend's matches against Elon and Catawba, Presbyterian secured a 6-1 win Friday and a 7-0 win Saturday. Winners from the Elon match included Lovelless at #1, Hampton at #3, Brim at #4, Davis at #5, Bolt at #6, and Brim/Davis at #3 doubles. The match, despite the 6-1 score, was closer than it was expected to be.

"When we go into a match we know we've always got to give 100%," said Dana Davis. "We never expect an easy match. You've got to have that attitude about every match if you want to win the title."

The win against Catawba and the win against rival Elon were both positive building blocks in the Lady Hose's confidence. Presbyterian plays at Frances Marion on Friday at 2:00 and then at Lander on Saturday at 1:00.

Men victorious in SAC tournament, earn NCAA bid. PC Women finish strong.

Paced by Tournament MVP Brian Franklin, the Presbyterian College men's basketball team roared through the 1996 South Atlantic Conference Tournament unblemished to claim the program's first-ever league tournament title and received the conference's automatic bid to the NCAA Division II national tournament.

PC's season came to a close when High Point University defeated the Blue Hose 76-67 in the quarterfinals of the South Atlantic Regional held in Richmond, Va. Presbyterian concluded the year with a 19-11 overall record, marking the program's sixth winning campaign in seven seasons under head coach Gregg Nibert.

Just how did the Blue Hose win the SAC Tournament?

"I've often said that the team which puts together three straight games of solid, aggressive defense will win most tournaments," Nibert said. "And that's what we were able to do. Our seniors (Billy Murphy and Ty Phillips) did a great job of leading us throughout the season, and I'm awfully proud of this team for all it has accomplished."

Defense was the key as Presbyterian held Wingate and Carson-Newman to 62 and 60 points in the opening two games. The Blue Hose then received 19 points and 13 rebounds from Franklin in the championship clash with Mars Hill as the Blue Hose prevailed, 82-77.

In the finals, the Blue Hose jumped out to a 40-34 halftime advantage as Franklin connected on all five of his field goal attempts. PC pushed its lead to as many as 17 in the second half and held on to win for the first time in four SAC Tournament title games thanks in part to shooting a tournament record 62 free throws. Junior forward Ronnie Cannon earned his second straight appearance on the All-Tournament Team with 17 points, 5 rebounds and 4 assists while Murphy and sophomore center Steve Rydzewski chipped in 10 points apiece.

Presbyterian College's women's basketball did its best in trying to defend its SAC Tournament championship with just one returning starter from last year's championship squad, giving eventual champion, Wingate University, its toughest game of the tournament before falling 54-51 in the opening round. The loss ended PC's season at 13-14.

Team MVP Chris Mitchum, PC's lone senior and First Team All-SAC selection by the league's coaches, closed out a terrific career for the Blue Hose, departing the program after four years, 74 victories and a pair of NCAA Tournament berths. Mitchum leaves as the SAC's all-time three-point field goal leader (270) while ranking sixth on Presbyterian College all-time list for points (1,213).

PC will return 11 of 12 players for next year including current juniors Karen Neeley and Watoma Williams. Neeley earned Best Offensive Player from her teammates after pacing the Blue Hose in scoring (12.1 ppg), assists (3.6 apg) and free throw percentage (.776) while Williams was named the team's Best Defensive Player after blocking and pulling down 152 rebounds.

"We had a good season," head coach Beth Couture said. "I was proud of the team for the progress they made. Sometimes the ball just didn't bounce our way and that's how it goes. Now we need to turn our attention to next season."

Baseball wins three in a row

The Blue Hose baseball squad's record now stands at 10-22 overall and 5-10 in the South Atlantic Conference. Presbyterian has won five of their last seven games, including their last three in a row.

Against West Virginia State on Tuesday, PC's game highlights included a two out, RBI single by David Smoak in the bottom of the eighth, with Nate Green recording the win. The Blue Hose took two out of three games this past weekend from SAC rival Elon College. Brett Evilsizer pitched the Blue Hose to a 9-1 win Saturday. On Sunday sophomore Clay Hall pitched an outstanding game, allowing PC to secure a 4-0 win. Hall allowed only one hit and one walk, while striking out ten of the 27 batters he faced.

Hall paces the Blue Hose pitching staff with a team leading three wins, 33 strikeouts, 51 7 innings pitched, and an ERA of 4.70. Leading the offensive attack for Presbyterian is Jason Jaitell, who is batting .331, followed by Erik Andress with a .317 average. Andress also leads the team in RBI with 24. Hall (.308) and Albert Mitchell (.292) have accumulated 18 RBI apiece, and Sean McCarthy (.288) has managed to hit three home runs, along with teammate Mio

Patrick's (.261) four home runs. The Blue Hose faced Armstrong State at home on Friday, and they had a three game series on Saturday and Sunday against Carson-Newman. This week they face Georgia College at home on the 2nd, and they will travel to USC-Aiken on the 3rd, before starting a three game series over the 5th and 6th at home against Lenior-Rhyne.

1996 Presbyterian Blue Hose Football schedule announced

From Presbyterian College Sports Information Office

Six home games long with non-conference intrastate contests with Charleston Southern, Newberry and Wofford high light the 1996 Presbyterian College football schedule, announced by Blue Hose head coach John Perry.

Presbyterian will kick off the 1996 campaign on September 7 with an away game versus Shepherd (W.Va.) College. The Blue Hose open the home portion of the 1996 slate one week later against Charleston Southern.

South Atlantic Conference play begins in week three of the season when Presbyterian travels to Jefferson City, Tenn., to meet defending league champion Carson-Newman.

Following a home game against Lenior-Rhyne on September 28 and an away contest versus Wofford on October 5, Presbyterian will entertain Catawba on October 12 for the 1996 edition of Homecoming. The Blue Hose will then make trips to Elon and Mars Hill before closing the season with consecutive home games with Wingate (Parent's Day), Gardner-Webb (Youth Day) and Newberry.

"We're very excited about the schedule," Perry said. "We feel the first two games of the season (Shepherd and Charleston Southern) will help us prepare for conference play while the other two non conference games with Wofford and Newberry are terrific rivalries."

Men's tennis team undefeated in conference play, 12-4 overall

They say a stumble may prevent a fall, and the 3-3 start by the men's tennis team is evidence that an early season stumble can prevent a losing season. After the first six matches, PC turned their season around by winning nine out of their next ten matches, including three South Atlantic Conference matches.

The success of the Blue Hose is due in part to the consistency of Tom Swift (#2), Preston Menning (#4), Chuck Webb (#5), and Todd Roemmich (#6), who have all gone undefeated in their singles positions. The doubles team of Swift and Ronnie Setzer has continued to be a success, going 10-2 overall and 3-0 in the conference. Will Stewart and Webb also had a winning doubles record, standing 2-1 in the conference and 11-5 overall.

With just three SAC matches remaining, the men's tennis team looks to continue its dominance in league play. The Blue Hose played several rescheduled matches at the end of last week and over the weekend, including a match with Carson-Newman on Friday. On April 1 they will face Lenior-Rhyne and Elon in a double-header at home for their regular season matches. PC will then take on Limestone on the 3rd, and then meet Newberry on the 9th. The Blue Hose will then battle in the conference tournament which begins on April 11.

Cannon named to the 1995-96 GTE Academic Men's Basketball All-District III Team

Presbyterian College's Ronnie Cannon had been named to the 1995-96 GTE Academic Men's Basketball All-District III Team announced by program officials. Cannon, a 6-5, 225-pound junior forward from Irmo, S.C., led the Blue Hose to a 19-11 overall record this past season as Presbyterian captured its first-ever South Atlantic Conference Tournament championship and advanced to the NCAA Tournament for the first time.

Cannon paced Presbyterian in scoring (13.5 ppg), rebounding (6.3 rpg), steals (5.4) and free throw percentage (.753) while earning First Team All-South Atlantic Conference honors. In addition, Cannon made his second consecutive appearance on the SAC All-Tournament Team after recording 17 points, five rebounds and four assists in Presbyterian's 88-77 title game win over Mars Hill.

In the classroom, Cannon holds a 3.26 cumulative grade point average while majoring in business administration.

Golf team NCAA bound after strong season

On the weekend of March 18-19, Presbyterian's golf team competed in the seventh-annual Francis Marion University Spring Intercollegiate Golf Tournament in Florence, S.C., otherwise known as the Arby's/KFC International Tournament. The Blue Hose finished a close second (by just two strokes) behind golfing rival Elon College.

Jim Kent turned in the lowest score for the Blue Hose with a two-day total of 144. Chris Wilkins finished in 10th place with a total of 148, and Perrin Powell rounded out the top three Blue Hose finishers sliding in the 18th place group of finishers with a total of 151. Gabe Southards and Eric Williamson also contributed to the Blue Hose win posting scores of 154 and 155.

The previous weekend Presbyterian had claimed the number one spot at the Max Ward Invitational in Burlington, N.C. Tournament medalist Chris Wilkins shot a two-day total of 146 to lead Presbyterian College to a one-stroke victory over High Point University. The tournament concluded Tuesday at the 6,681-yard, par-71 Alamance Country Club.

Wilkins shot a tournament-low 72 on the second day of the tournament, as the Blue Hose posted a 301 round on Tuesday and a 608 team total. High Point finished one shot back at 609, after leading the tournament with a 303 round on Monday. Host Elon finished third with a team total of 617, while Pfeiffer was a close fourth at 618.

Chuck King shot a 159 to help PC capture first place in the Max Ward Invitational Golf Tournament.

Stellar performances like Wilkins' have earned the Blue Hose enough credit to receive an early bid to the NCAA South East regional tournament.

"We're all happy with what we've done," Wilkins said. "Everyone is excited about getting invited to regionals, but we won't be happy unless we finish in at least the top ten in the nation. However, right now, we've got to concentrate on winning the conference."

At the Max Ward tournament Presbyterian captured the top two individual spots as Jim Kent shot a 148 to finish two shots behind Wilkins. Elon's Donough Forde also shot a 148, but finished third by virtue of a scorecard play-off with Kent. Finishing behind Wilkins and Kent were teammates Perrin Powell (158), Gabe Southards (158), and Chuck King (159).

The Blue Hose will enter the South Atlantic Conference Tournament on April 11 in Salisbury, N.C., as strong candidates for capturing the title. However, the Blue Hose have their sights set on a higher goal in their hope to turn out a flawless performance in the NCAA tournament and finish in the nation's top ten. In the weeks leading up to the SAC tournament, Blue Hose head coach Tommy Addison hopes the team will be able to refine its skills in order to be playing at their peak.

"Their all working very hard," said Addison. "Everyone knows that between Elon, Catawba, and PC it's going to be close (at the SAC tournament). If one team doesn't play well, the other two are going to eat them alive."

Flowers blooming in all colors, birds whistling tunes in the trees and lots of flesh. It's finally springtime on the PC campus! This is by far our favorite time of the year. There's new life abounding and a sense of relaxation that pervades the air. A fresh springlike aroma rises above lake newly thawed sewage of Lake Orr, and skirts get shorter behind the counter at GDH. That's right. A lot of big things begin to happen around here in the Spring.

For starters, springtime has always been a little more special for us when we have more time to enjoy it. If that means missing a few classes, we're willing to make those sacrifices for the sake of honoring mother nature. Perhaps we should enlighten our freshman friends to their virgin spring experience on the PC campus. We haven't found a professor yet who wouldn't look the other way about missing a week or so of classes in order to enjoy your spring. Some professors come across as stuffy and interested only in teaching, but you'd probably be surprised. Most professors are more than willing to cancel a class to go do whatever it is frisky PhD's do in their free time. How many times have we made the walk to Neville only to find a sign hanging on the classroom door that says: "Class is cancelled today. The teacher's gone surfin'...surfin' USA." You're saying, "but isn't that what Spring Break was all about?" The only thing we can tell you is that if Spring Break was meant to be experienced only once, then all schools would be out at the same time. However, seeing that this isn't the case, I think the administration knows and understands that if we wish to go with the PC break-Clemson break combo, there's nothing wrong with that. When you go down to Admin to get your absences excused, under the blank on the slip that says "Reason for Absence" just write in "Kegger in Death Valley." Now, don't get the idea that the majority of students' Spring Breaks were poorly spent. Sure, we enjoyed shoveling snow as much as the next guy over our break, but maybe we could use some sunshine in late March. This extra vacation time is one of the fringe benefits we've found that PC has to offer.

Springtime + Girls = Strange Behavior

PC spring means the outdoors as well. No more sitting around for hours upon hours watching episodes of Baywatch, it's time for us to begin making our patrols of the PC campus as well. Some people will come up on a typically nice spring day and ask one of us to go ride bikes. They may have in mind the streets of Clinton, Sumter National Forest, or even a cruise around the nature trail. Not us, however. Our ride usually consists of countless figure eights around Belk and Clinton dorms. There's a nasty rumor going around that people like to sunbathe outside those dorms when the weather is nice, but we can assure you that sunbathing girls are the last things that would keep us going on those endless figure-eights. Not a lot of people know this, but back in the 70's, engineers were experimenting at PC with new concrete mixes that are more environmentally friendly than older mixes. They happened to lay some of their new concrete outside Clinton and Belk dorms. The resulting sidewalk is incredibly gentle of bicycle tires, so to keep our bikes in good shape, we stick to our laps around those dorms. We've had complaints about the catcalls we make while we ride around, too. Some of you have read way to deeply into that. When we drool and scream "Mama!", that's just an affectionate way to pay homage to Mother Nature. What did you think we were screaming about?

One thing that we're getting more than a little tired of is all the time and expense associated with the constant formal invitations that pour into our boxes. How many trips to Adair Men's Shop have we made in the past month? They know us by name now. It's the same thing every time we walk in. "Tommy! Leighton! Is it formal time again?" We say yes, and they start to take our sizes. "Say boys, you aren't just going to dress up and try to sneak on to one of the buses again are you? You'd think after the last four times, you would have learned your lesson!" If we are anything, we are persistent. Besides, who hasn't been arrested for trespassing? Who hasn't been convicted and placed on probation for stalking? It's a rite of passage, isn't it?

Okay, so we don't have what you might call good skills with girls, but that's okay. That nice doctor our folks have started sending us to says that there's a fish in the sea for everyone. It's just a matter of waiting and waiting and waiting.

More Interrupted Sleep

Just when we thought we had nipped that fire drill thing in the bud, some concerned resident of Georgia Dorm decided that we just hadn't tuned our fire-drilling skills well enough, and decided to run a safety drill at 10 o'clock last Saturday morning. Perhaps the neatest thing about this campus is the concern every student has for public awareness and safety. Students care so much that girls have actually been spending whole nights in Georgia, hoping to have a fire drill to sharpen their skills as well. Amazing. Laughing in the face of dorm visitation policy to protect their individual safety. Pretty admirable.

The Redneck Shop

Boy, did we mess up. CEP hour rolled around last Tuesday and the boys of 3rd floor Georgia had little to do. Naturally, we all have a surprising, almost disturbing excess of CEP credits under our belts, so we decided to run off into the community and do a little shopping. We are quite the fans of Jeff Foxworthy and thought we might go check out the new shop he opened up in Laurens. So we walk in and start asking the guy behind the counter. "Hey man, how do we know if we're rednecks? Come on, tell some jokes!" In our experience, not a lot of comedians spit fire during a show, so we weren't really used to seeing it up close. For some reason this guy started going crazy. We figured it was part of the act. We started feeding him lines to get him to do the "You might be a redneck if..." thing, but it didn't work out real well.

Spring Swing

Well, this one came off without a hitch. A good day, a couple of good hands, what more could you ask for? It was a little surprising to see, though, that more people didn't show up to hear Uncle Mingo. These guys are stars. With chart-busters like "Hold My Hand" and "Only Wanna Be With You" you'd figure that the ol' intramural fields would be packed full. All kidding aside, it was quite the event. It's always fun to go out and see your favorite Blue Lady decked out in flannel and Doc Martens, kickin' and thrashin' around, slinging corn nuggets and beef fritters as far as the eye can see. Plus, with the Calhoun's beverage rules in effect out there, you know some of them had to be just a little bit more free wheeling than usual. Don't let this get around, because it might shine some bad light on our school, but just between us, a couple of our matriculats of Blue were overheard trying to figure out if the band members were "good eatin'." We don't know what that means, but we'd watch out for Mingo Macaroni Pie if we were you.

The Big Fat Conclusion

It's getting downright close to the end of the year here, and you know what that means. Leighton moves back into his little box for four months of what the parents like to call "sweat training." Training for what, we're still not sure. Just rest assured that if anyone ever needs Leighton to sweat spontaneously, he's always available. Tommy will head back to Columbia, where you can find him selling cold cuts out of a briefcase for commission. It's a tough life, but everybody's got their own ways of making ends meet. So, take the time to enjoy these last few weeks of 8 o'clock classes and leftover concoctions in GDH. It'll be gone before you know it.

Baker selected as PC Professor of the Year for 1995-96

by Tobin Turner
Editor-in-Chief

No one at the Awards Day Convocation seemed surprised when Dr. Richard Baker, Associate Professor of Philosophy, was named as PC's Professor of the Year—no one except Dr. Baker.

"I was shocked. When you look at all the other great professors at PC, to be named Professor of the Year is indeed a great honor; it's almost overwhelming," said Baker.

PC students and faculty, though, are fully aware of how deserving Baker has proven to be. "He's been a marvelous addition to our department and faculty, and has quickly generated renewed enthusiasm among students for the philosophy department," said department colleague Dr. George Ramsey.

The graduate of William and Mary's success in the classroom seems to come down to his rapport with students. "Dr. Baker really respects all of the students. He is a gentle man and treats everyone with a lot of value," says Junior Mitchell Moore. "He treats students more like friends than students."

According to Dean William Moncrief, Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the Faculty, "Dr. Baker is known for his teaching methods and techniques that show he cares about students and their development. He treats students as intelligent and capable. He pulls knowledge out of the students, and the students have a greater appreciation for what they have learned."

In fact, Dr. Baker makes it a point to listen carefully to what students have to say in class. "I believe teaching is an act of unique friendship. I go to class showing that the author or material we're covering has made an impact on my life and I want the students to appreciate it. Often comments students make in class cause me to reconsider the material, and I learn from them."

Baker, nominated for the honor of Professor of the Year by Sigma Kappa Alpha, PC's honorary fraternity, will address the Class of 1996 at graduation on May 4. Baker's contributions to PC extend beyond the classroom as ally love to teach. As a graduate student I'd have almost paid for people to let me teach them, although I never said that too loudly."

Although Baker considers grading to be a "necessary but lesser moment of

he is Chairman of the Appeals Board and Chairman of the Knight Program of Applied Ethics. Baker received his doctorate from The University of Texas at Austin and is in his fifth year at PC. Married to an ordained Presbyterian minister, Baker enjoys taking his three year-old daughter, Maya, to minor league baseball games in his free time. "She loves the Capitol City Bombers games," Baker admits.

Baker's motivation for teaching is watching his students have intellectual growth. "It's fun to see students experience awakenings where they begin to develop their own thoughts. I'd teaching," students continue to see nothing but the benefits of his teaching. Junior Cathy Clasen says of Baker: "He is a gracious person. His classes are full of discussion, but he doesn't force his agenda on the class. The students help make the class, and he isn't afraid to listen to what you have to say."

"The faculty of PC cares deeply about teaching so it's easier to be a great teacher in that atmosphere. I have been fortunate with the students I've had; they make it a joy to each," says Baker.

In Middemarch George Eliot writes: "The growing good of the world is partly dependent upon unhistoric acts; and that things are not so ill with you and me as they might have been, is half owing to the number who faithfully led hidden lives and rest in unvisited tombs."

According to Dr. Dean Thompson, "Richard Baker is an unhistoric man in Eliot's terms. In his quiet, unassuming way, he's doing the work of the saints and the prophets. It's deeply satisfying to know that somewhere on campus at any given hour of the day, and often far into the night, that voice of gentle persuasion, that unyielding intellectual curiosity, and that deep reservoir of kindness are all moving students to get beyond themselves and think about what makes a good life. It's said that great teachers do not teach their subjects as much as they teach themselves. I think it essential that Presbyterian College always offer Richard Baker 101. I know of no other course that prepares students so vigorously and joyfully for a lifetime of learning."

Greeks recognize achievements at banquet

by Beth Threadgill
and Leighton Hart
Staff Writers

On the evening of April 14th, the Order of Omega held its annual Greek Recognition Program. The purpose of the banquet was to recognize the accomplishments of campus Greek organizations beyond simply the social aspects associated with membership in a Greek organization. PC's fraternities and sororities were recognized for outstanding community service, leadership, and scholarship.

Academic excellence awards were given to those Greek students who have achieved a 3.5 GPA or better. This year, the Order of Omega gave out 50 such awards, 30 to sorority members and 20 to fraternity members. In addition the fraternity and sorority with the highest average GPA among its membership was recognized. This year, Alpha Sigma Phi emerged victorious among fraternities with an average GPA of 2.76. Alpha Delta Pi won the women's title, boasting a 3.01 GPA. The campus wide average was 2.71.

Service to the community was rewarded through several awards. This year's winner of the Sorority Community Service Award was Zeta Tau Alpha. The brothers of Kappa Alpha Order were recognized with the Fraternity Community Service Award. This year, KA's membership contributed to the Muscular Dystrophy Association and participated in numerous other service projects, including Adopt-A-Highway and Thornwell Big Brothers. The sisters of Sigma Sigma Sigma were recognized for their involvement in campus activities. They are this year's winner of the Collegiate Involvement Award for sororities. Their chapter boasts membership in 49 campus clubs, organizations, and committees. The brothers of Pi Kappa Phi reported representation in 57 campus clubs, which contributed to their capture of the Collegiate Involvement Award for fraternities.

President's Cup Awards were given to one fraternity and sorority which best lived up to a commitment to excellence, scholarship, community service, collegiate involvement and educational programming. This President's Cup for a sorority this year went to Zeta Tau Alpha. The fraternity award was given to the Kappa Alpha Order.

Fraternity man and woman of the year awards were given to one senior male and female who exemplified a commitment to scholarship, community service, and leadership development. Beth Threadgill of Alpha Delta Pi was this year's Sorority Woman of the Year. David Spivey of Kappa Alpha Order was named as this year's Fraternity Man of the Year.

Finally, awards were given to one male and one female who best exemplified a commitment to academic excellence. This year's Sorority Scholar was Mary Elizabeth Phillips of Alpha Delta Pi. Phillips has maintained a flawless 4.0 GPA while double-majoring in Accounting and Business Administration. The Fraternity Scholar award went to Brian Blackwelder of Theta Chi. Blackwelder has achieved a 4.0 GPA in his major, while maintaining an impressive 3.67 overall.

Opinion

Following last Wednesday night's CEP lecture on the Bible and homosexuality, members of PC's College Republicans group announced plans to launch a letter writing campaign aimed at PC supporters in hopes of discouraging similar programs in the future. It is the opinion of the Blue Stocking that their response was unwarranted and of an almost paranoid nature.

An article about the lecture and about the conservatives' response appeared on the South Carolina page of Thursday's Greenville News. The Blue Stocking recognizes and does not deny the right of those students to protest, but perhaps their execution of that protest could have been more constructive and of a less sensational nature. Those students turned the lecture into a media event rather than voicing their opinions to the appropriate college officials.

The article in the Greenville News stated that, "the campaign...will prevent future programs of this nature on campus." One's personal beliefs can not grow and can not be strengthened if those beliefs are unchallenged. Exposure to foreign situations and ways of thinking cause people to examine their own feelings and thoughts. As a result, those feelings are either affirmed or rejected. That is how people learn, by being tested and confronted. These situations further the intellectual pursuit, and do nothing to cheapen the learning environment. It should be noted that in the Greenville News article, a spokesperson for the College Republicans stated that it was unfair that the school did not arrange a conservative response lecture. It has never been the policy of the school to do so. CEP speakers are given wide latitude in their discussion topic. Christina H. Sommers, a noted author, spoke on campus earlier this year about personal and interpersonal ethics. Ms. Sommers endorses ideas in her writing that encourage broad moral education in schools, and family values. Those ideas would fit well to the right of center on the political spectrum, yet there was no liberal response. Nor would that have been appropriate.

While the Blue Stocking does not condone the lifestyle of Mr. Glaser or endorse his lecture, his right to present his views to the school must be respected.

Were the College Republicans truly concerned about the learning environment of PC, perhaps they would have responded like leaders, not simply as rhetoricians and ideologues.

Student questions selection process of intramural coordinators

Dear Editor:

I am writing in regards to the recent selection of intramural coordinators. In my opinion this matter was poorly handled. I am a rising senior who applied for this position and did not receive it. My being turned is somewhat understandable; however, there are females that were very qualified, but did not get the job either. Since only males have held these positions in the past, I asked before I applied if women would be seriously considered and the reply was "yes." I was also told by a few of those who conducted the interviews that I should have no problem getting the job (which was also told to other females.) When the interview began I was lead to believe that two supervisor positions were to be filled, when in actuality, only one supervisor position was being filled and the other position became secretarial. When I inquired about the other supervisor position, I was told that the budget was reworked and only one supervisor was needed. Both of these positions were filled with male applicants. One of the females that applied met all of the requirements for becoming a supervisor such as: having played sports in high school, having a complete knowledge of intramural sports, having worked intramural sports before, and also having two or more years before graduation. I do not understand why someone this qualified did not receive the job. It makes me wonder if she was ever considered in the first place. Females are just as involved in intramurals as males, but for some reason do not hold supervisor positions. This school is not male dominated, nor are intramurals only for males, therefore I do not understand why only males hold intramural supervisor positions. I just wanted to draw attention to this matter in hopes that in the future women will be taken more seriously.

Sincerely,
Crissy Ellis

Students and Alumni React to Gay Speaker

Dear Editor:

During an attempt to relate scriptures with homosexuality in the Bible, PC students and alumni reacted to Chris Glaser, author of four books. According to PC alumnus Susan Austin, the author had to be corrected several times regarding the scriptures, "He said he was sorry that he kept rambling on." The speaker tried to say interestingly for our purposes, Jesus consented homosexuality by reaching between Leviticus 18:22 and 20:13 about men lying with other men. In this passage, the Bible states, "You shall not lie with a male as with a woman; it is an abomination." Another point that the speaker tried to make was that people are born homosexuals. People are not born homosexuals, just like they are not born bigots; it is a learned behavior. Chris Glaser says that he is indeed a gay Christian who is trying to serve the church. Well, in actuality, the first step to serving the church with his lifestyle is to repent. He said he repented for "coming out of the closet."

Alumnus Brian Benenahley said, "It is disturbing to me to see my alma mater to continue to adopt left-leaning attitudes towards the education of its students. Such a trend is detrimental not only to the development of the students' minds, but to the development of their character." This event did not allow for an exchange of ideas from both sides, it was more of a bombardment of liberal ideas. Angela Campbell, a PC student says, "We are not against a person's right to free speech. We are against the fact the chaplain and others have not brought in someone from the other side of the issue and are using the money from a general fee paid by all students to sponsor this partisan event."

In conclusion, I find it is appalling that our school, which prides itself on academic excellence and integrity would allow and encourage the advancement of the homosexual agenda through an indoctrination session. The fact that this is a 'certified' cultural event which entails the use of our tuition money makes this entire situation twice as shameful. When events like this take place in the name of education, it cheapens the intellectual pursuit we are all purportedly involved in. The College Republicans and others of strong moral character will continue to stand for the values which have made our college, our state and our nation great, and we challenge the administration to do the same.

The year is quickly winding down. It's hard to believe that there is only about a week left to finish up all of those tests and projects that your teachers sprung on you at the last minute! Even though the year is ending, the 1996-97 Student Government Association is just getting started!

The FOB/TOB leaders for the Fall have just been selected. There was a great interest in the FOB/TOB program by the students this year. We had close to 100 talented applicants. The down side was that we could choose only 62 of them to be leaders. It was a very difficult decision, but we are sure that the students who were chosen will do a terrific job.

SGA will be going to Camp Fel lowship for a planning retreat after exams. At that time, FOB activities will be scheduled, committees will be formed, and goals for the Fall semester will be set. We will also review the negative and positive aspects of this year's events and determine what should be changed and what should stay the same for next year.

On behalf of the rest of the council I'd like to wish everyone the best of luck on exams. Also, good luck and congratulations to all the Seniors who will be graduating in just over a week. May life after graduation bring you much success! To everyone else, have a great summer and we'll see you back here in September!

Fouse selected as PC's Outstanding Senior for Class of 1996

by Leighton Hart
Campus Life Editor

Many saw it coming a mile away. Amidst the numerous awards handed out at last Tuesday's Honors Day Closing Convocation, one senior was selected who embodies the PC ideal. Jennifer Fouse, a Sociology major from Great Falls, SC was selected as that one outstanding senior. Fouse explained that she was startled by the announcement. "It was an honor...I was very shocked...I was awe-struck," said Fouse.

Ever since she set foot on the PC campus her freshman year, she has been laying the track that led to her award. In the four years since that first day, she has immersed herself in scholarship, leadership and service. There is hardly a club or organization on campus that she has not been a part of. Most recently, Fouse has served as SVS intern, a job which put her at the right hand of Chon Glover before Glover took a position at William and Mary. In that position, she was the liaison between Glover and the 43 student coordinators. Since Glover's departure, she has assumed many of her former boss' responsibilities. Yet, through it all, she has accepted things as they have come her way. As if her SVS duties weren't enough for one person, Fouse has been active in a diverse group of other programs, including SGA, Alpha Delta Pi, STAC, Student Fellowship Choir, and the Presbyterian College Church Leadership

Jennifer Fouse has been highly active in and out of the classroom during her years at PC. She has had the challenging role of coordinating SVS after the departure of Chon Glover. Fouse will address the Class of 1996 at graduation along with Dr. Richard Baker.

Program.

Director of Church Relations Dr. Bob Smith coordinates the PC Church Leadership Program, and has nothing but praise for Fouse. "Jennifer really is part of our family. Her Dad and I were in seminary together, and she has been part of our adopted family through the church," said Smith. "She is an extraordinarily gifted young woman, and she uses those gifts. We all, students, faculty, and staff have been the beneficiaries of her talents and gifts."

Fouse doesn't see herself as all that exceptional. "I just think of myself as a regular student," she explained. "I just see myself as a student who has gotten involved, and I'm the type of person that won't give any less than 100% to anything I commit myself to," she added.

Fouse's latest commitment begins just weeks after graduation. On June 16th, she will begin an internship at Fort Hill Presbyterian Church in Clemson. There, she will work closely with the Presbyterian Student Association of Clemson University. "I'm looking forward to staying in close contact with people my age," said Fouse. "So many people say that after they graduate, they just lose touch with folks their age. Luckily, I won't have to do that in this position," she added. When asked about her plans for the period immediately after graduation, Fouse said with no hesitation whatsoever that that time would be dedicated to "R&R." If anyone has earned it, she has.

The Last Word: Just when things were getting good... time to say goodbye by Tommy

Staff Writer

This whole thing started at the beginning of the Fall semester. Our beloved editor at the time, William G. "Danger Granger" Lesene approached us with the idea of writing this column. Being the staunch believers in the whole "While we live, we serve" thing, we told him that sure we'd write a column on the back page. And now, 10 issues later, what do we have to show for it? Sure, Leighton's driving a brand new Lexus, and so what if Tommy is off to Cancun this week in his private jet? What's really important is that we have had some fun, and contributed to the betterment of the college community, right? Forget all the expensive jewelry and fancy room decorations, look past the personal trainers and hired chefs. What we will really take away from this is the warm feeling in our hearts that we have made you smile, maybe even laugh, and that's enough to us.

It really hasn't been a half bad year. Okay, so there was that one time at that basketball game. But, we've cleared that situation up. Sometimes you just have to stand up for what you believe in, and that's why we threw the first punches. We were down there in the scrap just like everybody else. Hey, we made SportsCenter didn't we? Big deal if Chris Berman made fun of the two skinny guys with their shirts off, sometimes you just have to stand up for PC Pride.

Tommy and Leighton take a moment to pause and reflect about another academic year that shipped away.

In good news, officials finally caught a suspect in the UnaBlueT ad case. Seems that some disgruntled Blue Lady from the '60s had been living in a tiny shack in Joanna for the past 25 years, sending old GDIH food to people in disguised packages. She's responsible for at least a dozen rednecks going blind, and who knows how many people she afflicted while she was working here!

On a more somber note, this is the last time that the two of us will appear together in the Blue Stocking. Tommy's off to Australia for a semester of shrimp on the barbie and Crocodile Dundee reruns. After that, Leighton is going on his special little "sabbatical." At least, that's what the lawyers make us call it. The brochure says that "The Loving Care Center provides patients with the finest support and counseling in dealing with severe emotional and physical disorders." So, you make the call, all we know is that he's getting 15 hours of credit for his little stay. But not to worry, we'll be okay. Luckily, the Tapestry has just signed us to 6-figure contracts to advertise their clothing here on the 'ol' back page. So when you get back in August, look for us here on every issue.

In a few weeks most students will begin their summer jobs and internships. Most. Not us, though. We have a higher calling. The water beckons, ladies and gentlemen. We will take to the pool for 12 hours a day of training as we try to make it to the Atlanta Olympics for the synchronized swimming competition. You may have seen us in the Springs pool practicing. Leighton is his water wings and Speedo, and Tommy wearing nothing but a snorkel and some flippers while "The Humpty Dance" plays in the background. There's still some controversy about whether or not we'll be able to incorporate the rabid monkey in Atlanta like we do in practice here, but we'll let you know as soon as we find out. The reviews have been decent. We entered into a competition in Whitmire back in March and the judges seemed to like us. A 3.25 isn't bad, right? We're pretty sure the scoring works like golf, with the lowest score being best. One judge was even quoted in the local paper as saying, "They're performance was marginal at best. Of course, if they meant to look like a pair of wounded manatees, thrashing and flailing around, then by all means, perfect 10." So that's encouraging.

Did we catch you off guard with the whole moving to the inside of the paper here? Let us make a little introduction here: students, this is the inside of the newspaper. Newspaper, these are the people of PC. Now, don't get used to this.

The end of school is a sad time for us all, and we hate to see it coming. We suppose that every good thing must come to an end, though. So this week we'll eat one last Giant Burger, skip one last CEP and take one last naked swim in Lake Orr. So take care, enjoy the summer, treat Myrtle Beach real nice and be careful.

Women bound for nationals in Oklahoma, ranked 12th in nation

The Presbyterian College Women's Tennis team swept the South Atlantic Conference Tournament the weekend of April 11-13th, and secured an automatic bid to the National tournament in Edmund, Oklahoma on May 7th. The Blue Hose finished as regular season champs also, and posted an unblemished record of 7-0. The Lady Hose finished #1 in the East region division II and #12 nationally for the NCAA division II.

Individually, Robyn Loveless finished #29 in singles in the nation and #1 in the region. Loveless was also named Freshman of the Year and Player of the Year at the SAC Tournament.

The successful doubles team of Kimberly Hampton and Chrissie Bolt finished #15 in the nation and #2 in the region. Hampton also finished #6 in the region in singles. Right behind Hampton, was Dawn as double partners, and they finished #4 in the region at the #2 spot on PC's ladder.

Flight winners for the year included Hampton at #3 singles, Jennifer Brim at #4 singles, Dana Davis at #5 singles and Bolt at #6 singles. Presbyterian's top four singles players (Loveless, Dachelet, Hampton, and Brim) were named to the All-SAC team, and coach Donna Arnold was named Coach of the Year.

"This is the strongest team I've ever taken to nationals, so I feel like our chances of finishing among the top teams are good," said Arnold. "Our main goal was to get an automatic bid to nationals by finishing number one in the region, and we accomplished that goal so I'm proud of them (the team)."

The 1996 women's tennis team, after winning the regular season SAC title without a loss, went on to win the conference tournament.

After posting a second-place finish at the SAC tournament last year, Presbyterian's Golf team was settling for nothing but the best this year. The Blue Hose turned in the top three scores at the Tournament as Senior Chris Wilkins was the medalist. Wilkins was named Player of the Year while teammate Eric Williamson (who finished second at the tournament) was named Freshman of the Year. Senior captain Perrin Powell finished third at the tournament, and he joined Wilkins on the 1st All-SAC team. Jim Kent, who was a solid performer throughout the season, was named to the 2nd All-SAC team.

The Golf team will head to the regional tournament on May 6 where they expect to perform up to par and finish in the top 7 or 8 teams that will advance to the national tournament in Oklahoma. The Blue Hose are currently ranked 16th in the nation, and are second only in the region to USC-Aiken who is ranked #1 in the nation.

Baseball goes 8-2 in final 10 SAC games

By Brett Evilsizor
Staff Writer

After a dismal 3-18 start, Presbyterian Men's Baseball wrapped up their season on a winning streak by going 16-11 over their last 27 games. The Blue Hose finished 19-29 placing them fifth in the SAC for the season. In the conference, PC posted a 10-11 record as they went 8-2 over their last ten SAC games finishing up the season with a sweep of 2nd place finisher Lenior-Rhyne.

In the SAC tournament Presbyterian faced Lenior-Rhyne in the first round and suffered a 6-4 loss. However, after a 14-6 offensive feast against Mars Hill on Friday, Brett Evilsizor pitched a 8-2 win against Carson-Newman in the loser's bracket of the tournament to move the Blue Hose into another contest with Lenior-Rhyne. The game result in a close finish with Lenior-Rhyne skimming by with a 9-7 win over the Hose, but PC had nothing to sulk about as they went home with their most impressive finish ever, 4th.

The Blue Hose placed three players on the All-conference team. Senior Erik Andress (.317, 4 HR, 36 RBI) was a first-team selection, and Junior Jason Jallit (.335), who held a school record and conference leading 28 steals, was named to the second team. Freshman pitcher and outfielder Clay Hall (.290, 21 steals), who has the school records for complete games, shutouts, and innings pitched, was named to the second team as well. Sophomore Brett Evilsizor was named to the All-tournament team as he pitched the Blue Hose to an 8-2 victory over 2nd seed Carson-Newman. Evilsizor gave up only one earned run and struck out 8.

Blue Hose to add cross country team

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Staff Writer

During any sunny spring afternoon, it often seems that the streets are overflowing with PC students who are out running for fitness, to relieve stress, etc. For years many Blue Hose and nearby opponents have been puzzled by the absence of Cross Country from Presbyterian's list of varsity sports. After all, minimal equipment is required and there certainly seems to be a sizeable number of students on the PC campus who possess the self-discipline required to succeed in cross country.

With the addition to Templeton, new locker room space will be available to allow for expansion of PC's athletic program and cross country will be one of the new sports that is offered. PC graduate Laura Timmons, who is currently the assistant Women's Basketball coach, will serve as the head coach for this new squad which will probably be comprised of 10 males and 10 females.

Cross country is a conference sport so finding opponents will not be difficult. This fall Coach Timmons hopes to enter PC's squad in four or five meets though the Hose will be classified as a club team for the inaugural year. Timmons is excited about the opportunity to direct this new program, and she is encouraging any student with interest in participating in cross country to contact her.

Men finish second in SAC tournament

by Lucy Mahon
Sports Editor

Presbyterian Men's Tennis coach Bobby McKee has several reasons to be smiling lately. After finishing second in the regular season, the young squad comprised of one senior, three sophomores, and a handful of freshman, proved to be a group of strong finishers as they placed second in the SAC tournament. Furthermore, McKee was named Coach of the Year at the conclusion of the tournament.

Freshman Preston Menning won the flight at the #4 singles spot, as did Chuck Webb and Todd Roennmich at the #5 and #6 singles positions. In doubles, Tom Swift and Ronnie Setzer won the #3 flight as well.

The Blue Hose won the first two rounds of play with ease as they downed Gardner-Webb in the opening round 6-1 and defeated Carson Newman 4-0 in the second round. The tournament ended when PC met up with Elon in the finals, the only team in the conference they had struggled with all year, and lost 0-4. However, Menning and Swift were named to the all-conference team, and the young squad will most likely head to the national tournament if they perform well at the regionals on May 3.

Dial-up feature will offer Internet, World Wide Web access

by Leighton Hart
Associate Editor

About six years ago, one lonely e-mail terminal sat in a sterile Richardson Science Hall computer lab.

That terminal was part of a pilot project launched by the college's administrative services department in an effort to provide academic computing resources to faculty and students.

Three years ago fiber optic cables were laid between classroom and administrative buildings, thus equipping faculty members and administrators with basic internet access.

PC was in fact one of the first small colleges in South Carolina to offer such access. Since then, nearly every small college in the state has followed that lead.

Today, PC stands ready to take another step forward in its commitment to providing faculty and students with quality internet access.

This semester, the school will offer students the ability to use the internet from their dorm rooms in a way that students have not been able to up to this point.

Starting soon, dial-up modem lines will give students and faculty the ability to explore the World Wide Web using web browsers such as Netscape.

Previously, students and faculty could only fully explore the web from up access to the Internet.

The college decided to offer the service after budgets had been formulated, so as a result a small fee will be charged

Dialing up the Internet

- Students will be able to dial from their modems either on or off campus
- Service will provide access to the World Wide Web, an option previously unavailable to PC Internet dialers
- College will charge $10 per month for the added feature, which will include additional lines for the exclusive use of dial-up subscribers campus computer labs equipped with such software. The current dial-up modems are only capable of providing text-only internet service.

This means that users could visit web sites and pages, but without the seeing the graphic images that make such sites so innovative.

According to Morris Galloway, Dean of Administrative Services, a group of 87 students have already signed up for the new service.

In addition, approximately 30 faculty members have expressed interest in dial up access on a per-semester basis.

If the program is a success, an allowance will be made in the college's computer services budget, and the dial-up fee will be rolled over into tuition expenses.

Currently, the college's internet access is priced well below the commercial market.

"In the commercial market, the going rate is $20 a month," Galloway said.

PC's service will be offered to students at approximately $10 per month.

The college is trying to cover our cost, or a little bit less," said Galloway.

All of this comes at a time when college officials are working to decide the future for internet service at PC.

Most schools like PC have begun laying fiber optic cables between all campus buildings, including dormitories.

With these cables linked to dorm rooms, students can have an automatic connection to the internet, without having to dial in to a bank of modems.

According to Galloway, the school will lose no costs by the new expansion of internet service.

But, if the school expands dial-up service much further, PC could lose money.

"We're coming to a fork in the road and have to make a decision. We need a dial-up solution for commuters and faculty," Galloway said.

"We always want feedback from the students," said Galloway. Indeed, student input will be a very significant factor in the decisions that PC administrators will be making in the coming months.

Trying to keep on the cutting edge of internet technology is what Galloway referred to as a "leapfrog game." Many other schools have already wired dormitories with fiber optic cables.

"We're a little behind the game right now," said Galloway.

"When we make our next move, PC will probably be a few steps ahead of the pack," he said.

Checking in the Class of 2000

Over 290 freshmen and transfers arrived on the PC campus on August 30 and took part in four days of orientation activities.

The freshman class comes from over 18 states and is 52% female, 42% male.

Over 1100 students applied to be a part of PC's Class of 2000, according to Margaret Williamson, dean of admissions.

POINT

Campus bookstore needs improvement

Students who spent time in the long, snake-like line at the PC bookstore last week are perhaps the best spokesmen for what has become an issue that college officials can no longer ignore: the bookstore is not meeting the needs of this community.

A quick browse through the bookstore's offerings demonstrate that the establishment is more of a PC spirit shop than an academic resource center.

Students going for textbooks are treated like grade schoolers in the milk line; no one is allowed behind the magic rope! Several members of our staff alone were forced to return to the line because the bookstore staff failed to pull all of the needed textbooks for our classes.

SGA president Blythe

Moving FOB to summer might increase freshmen comfort levels

For the last several years, attendance during FOB events has fallen dramatically. After all, who can blame PC freshmen for wanting to unpack or meet upperclassmen rather than attending events that are dry and monotonous?

Many colleges and universities have moved freshman orientation

Matheson has made improving the bookstore a priority for her administration.

Our suggestions?

The bookstore should offer a wide selection of books and magazines that cater to a broad spectrum of interests.

The store should invite students to spend time reading and relaxing with some comfortable chairs and perhaps a couch or two. Cappuccino and other upscale beverages should be offered.

The store should be open every weekend and every night.

If PC firmly wishes to establish itself as an academic heavyweight, then it should follow the examples of Wofford College and Furman University and invest more into the bookstore than simply a room to sell textbooks and spirit supplies.

Voting counters apathy among youth

Certain birthdays are treasured in America because of the privileges that come with them. On our 16th birthday we can drive, and a favorite birthday on our campus is the 21st. But the 18th birthday is arguably the most important that any of us celebrate. Most of us were graduated from high school when we were 18, we started applying for credit cards and men became eligible to be drafted in times of war. One additional responsibility is bestowed upon us on our 18th birthday: the privilege of voting.

With decreasing voter turnouts at every election, the responsibility of voting has become a less important priority to many Americans in recent years. By requiring us to be in classes on November 5th, our own school helps to trivialize the importance of voting. In fact, our age bracket has one of the lowest voter turnout levels in the most recent elections.

If you're just looking at the numbers, it's easy to think that your vote won't count. But look at voting through the eyes of those who do not have the right to vote. Millions of homeless citizens are unable to voice their opinion because election laws in all but three states and the District of Columbia prohibit otherwise eligible voters who lack permanent mailing addresses from registering to vote.

I have often been frustrated with our federal government's inaction on many issues that matter. I left campus last school year frustrated with the term "government" in general. I did not want to have anything to do with a government that flies the confederate flag above the state house, attempts to legislate morality, fails to enact any proactive environmental regulations and is apathetic to the plight of the poor and underprivileged.

While many may not agree with my politics, I know you have been just as frustrated about certain issues. My frustration was leading to inaction. I was apathetic to the doings of government. But, didn't I just say that I was frustrated about our government's inaction? How could I condemn the government for apathetic insensitivity if I was just as apathetic? The government does not represent me on most issues. It never will unless I make my mark on the ballot at each election.

Many of us do not like either the Republican or the Democratic presidential candidates in this election. This year, more people than ever are frustrated with the two party system. The American public is frustrated because there seems to be only one choice. Not much separates Republicans from Democrats, particularly in an election year when both Bob and Bill seem as moderate as they've ever been.

My Turn

Other choices exist. Harry Brown, the Libertarian candidate, was on the ballot in all 50 states before Ross Perot, who for the second time, is the voice of the Reform Party. Long time consumer advocate Ralph Nader is the environment's best friend as the Green Party's candidate. And there are others... many others.

A vote for someone other than a Republican or Democratic candidate is not a waste. Ross Perot sent a strong message to both parties in 1992 by taking 19% of the popular vote. With more choices than most elections, this presidential election should have someone who represents you.

If you think that your vote won't make a difference in the presidential election, remember that there are other offices on the ballot. From the U.S. Senate to county councils, there are many politicians up for election or replacement. The people of Washington, through a grass roots campaign, evicted long time incumbent and speaker of the house Rep. Tom Foley (D) in the 1994 election. This change of representation would not have been possible if constituents in Washington had sat on their couches on election day and complained about their vote not making a difference.

A national election is no call to apathy. This is our chance to voice our opinion and make our concerns heard. In a few years, we'll inherit this nation. We might be the ones making the laws, but regardless of who we are, we will be the ones subject to the laws. Remember those whose voices will not be heard in this election, and if you feel so inspired, speak for yourself. No one does it better than you.

Sign ups for voter registration are coming to PC's campus soon. Make your thoughts heard.

SGA pleased with administration cooperation

On behalf of the Student Government Association, I would like to welcome back all upperclassmen and extend a special welcome to the 290 freshmen and transfer students who arrived on campus Friday, August 30th.

Freshman and Transfer Orientation was very successful with the help of 62 dedicated orientation leaders who started the year early to ensure the freshmen and transfer had a smooth transition to PC.

SGA had a retreat with the officers and directors of the college last week and were able to share thoughts and ideas on how to achieve goals set by both groups for the semester. SGA is pleased with the cooperation from the administration, and many of our goals have already been accomplished. These include changes to The Knapack, introducing Callioun's to the new students and continuing our work to improve the dining hall.

SGA would like to remind you that all of our meetings are open to anyone who is interested in expressing his concerns. The first meeting will be held on Wednesday, September 9th at 6:30 p.m. Again, welcome back and good luck in the upcoming year.

Hartley commands Highlander battalion

by Alison Barnard
Managing Editor

Kurt Hartley, a senior from Greenville, S.C., has always been an achiever, and his three years at PC have given him plenty of opportunities to excel.

Hartley, a business major, is a transfer from The Citadel. His activities here have included intramural basketball, indoor soccer, the SGA Junior Class Representative, and work-study with the foreign language department. The Eagle Scout also assists with local Boy Scout troops.

However, Hartley's primary interest remains with PC's Scottish Highlander ROTC Battalion, where he serves as Battalion Commander. He will head a group of 180 students, who range from freshmen to contracted senior cadets.

"I want to provide fun, interesting training for all the students," Hartley said. "I want to make people drop premonitions about the army and see what it really has to offer. If you want to fly helicopters, be a doctor or a lawyer, or go into business, the army has a place for you."

Colleagues say Hartley is well qualified for the highest student command post in the Scottish Highlander Battalion. He has held the ranks of first sergeant, command sergeant major and company commander.

"Kurt is a remarkable young man," said Capt. Mike Leonhardt, a cadre officer of the Scottish Highlander Battalion.

"He is mature beyond his years, and I have to keep telling myself he is a cadet. He is simply one of the best," said Leonhardt.

"Kurt is definitely an outstanding leader in any situation, whether it be military or civilian," said peer and cadet Welch Condor. "He gives 110% and constantly pushes his peers to do the same," Condor said.

In 1995, Hartley attended airborne school, a three week course designed to teach parachute jumping, in Ft. Benning, Ga. This summer, Hartley also attended Advanced Camp, a six week leadership evaluation course held at Ft. Bragg, N.C., and received the third highest score in his platoon. He completed his summer at Cadet Troop Leadership Training, a six week internship in Ft. Sill, Okla.

"It was a great experience because I was responsible for 15 soldiers and 200 million dollars worth of equipment," Hartley said. "ROTC is my niche. It's like a family," he said.

Hartley's responsibilities do not end with his studies and ROTC. On June 18, Hartley married Caroline Compton of Greenville, S.C., his girlfriend of four years.

Senior Kurt Hartley will command the Scottish Highlander Battalion. He and his new wife Caroline reside in Clinton.

"We wanted to have all of the paperwork and requirements taken care of for the army. Besides, if you find a good person, you need to latch onto and stay with them," Hartley said as he smiled at his wife.

Hartley seeks an active duty assignment with the army in aviation. He and his wife would like to be stationed in Alaska or Germany.

"We will be in the army for at least four years, if we like it, we may stay longer, or move back into the civilian world."

Hartley says that he has enjoyed his three years at PC.

"It has been a lifesaver for me. It is small enough that you feel like you are important, which was especially good for me since I was a transfer student," he said.

"I feel that I have gotten a very well rounded education as well as many opportunities. I will surely go to miss PC. If I could do it all over again, I wouldn't change a thing," Hartley said.

Senior village will offer housing alternative

by Gray Lesesne
Executive Editor

PC seniors should have an additional housing option by next August, college officials will announce within two weeks when they finalize plans for a townhouse style village for seniors.

The first phase of the projected $1.2 million complex, which will be located across from fraternity court and adjacent to the Shields Multicultural Center on Maple Street, will feature three buildings containing five townhouse apartments each and will offer 72 seniors an alternative to off-campus housing, said Skip Zubrod, vice president for finance.

Each townhouse will feature two or three bedrooms and will house either four or six students. The college will furnish and manage each unit. Projected rental costs are $265 per resident per month, and residents will not be required to eat on campus, Zubrod said.

"Our purpose is to offer one more option in living arrangements for our students. We will treat village residents the same as if they were moving off campus. We wanted to provide an option of quality to those students choosing to live off campus," Zubrod said.

Zubrod and other college officials currently are negotiating a lease-purchase arrangement that will allow the college to lease the apartment buildings from local developers for 16 years, who in turn will finance the project without immediate college funding. The college will then use the funds generated by rental fees to make lease payments until the agreement expires.

"Campuses are moving away from the traditional dormitory to more alternative styles of living. Times are changing and students are looking for more sophisticated options," Zubrod said.

Madden receives NIRSA service award

Madden

Bryan Madden, director of intramural sports at Presbyterian College, received a national service award from the National Intramural-Recreational Sports Association (NIRSA).

The award was presented to Madden at NIRSA's 47th Annual Conference held recently in Kansas City, Mo.

The NIRSA is a non-profit professional organization devoted to the advancement of programs and professionals in the field of recreational sports.

The association has grown since its inception in 1950 by 11 traditionally black universities to encompass more than 800 institutional members and over 2,000 professional members representing more than 12 million college and university students.

Harrington to address opening convocation in Belk Auditorium today

Presbyterian College will officially begin its 117th academic year today at Opening Convocation in Belk Auditorium at 11 a.m. Senior students are requested to assemble outside of Smith Administration Building at 10:45 a.m. for the formal procession.

Dr. W. Frank Harrington, senior minister of Peachtree Presbyterian (USA) Church in Atlanta, Ga., will address the gathering of students, faculty, staff and patrons. Harrington is chairman of PC's Board of Trustees.

The college will also pay tribute to the Irwin Belk family of Charlotte, N.C. Belk, a longtime trustee and benefactor of the college, made a historic gift of $3.9 million to PC in May. It was the largest single gift in the history of the college and one of the largest cash gifts ever presented to a South Carolina school.

Laurens County native wishes to improve volunteerism, campus diversity

Hill brings experience, local flavor to multicultural affairs

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

For Shelia Hill, accepting PC's director of multicultural affairs position was an opportunity to take on a new challenge. Hill is taking on many challenges these days, including making the move from Coker College in Hartsville, S.C., where she was director of student life and multicultural affairs, organized over thirty student volunteer services coordinators at their retreat in Toccoa, Ga., and orchestrated freshmen orientation programs for both SVS and the multicultural student union.

Hill is not one to run from a challenge.

In fact, she seems to run to them. Self-described as "crazy, caring, and complicated," she accepted her new position at PC on June 7, the day the offer was made. She was selected by a committee of students, faculty and staff in a national search that the college made to fill the position vacated by Chon Glover in January.

Brandi Casto, SVS intern and member of the search committee that selected Hill, explains that Hill's interest, commitment, and experience in both areas of service and minority affairs made her unique among the over seventy applicants for the position. "She has experience and a willingness to work with others. She jumped right in with both feet, and she's excited about moving to the Clinton area," said Casto.

Hill was born in the township of Waterloo in Laurens County, attended Laurens County schools and completed her education at the University of South Carolina, where she earned a Bachelor's degree in Mass Communications and a Masters degree with a concentration in student personnel services.

"I was very active in the Programming Board, the USC equivalent to the Student learning tool I've had — leadership, working with people, the importance of a leader's having organization, the importance of having a vision. It also taught me that there is something to be learned in less-than-stellar performances."

"PC was a good match for me because of how the college values the learning experiences that occur in and out of the classroom. There is an environment here that is in line with my professional needs," she said.

Hill's arrival has pleased college administrators, as well.

"Shelia's personality, her commitment to diversity in higher education and her great enthusiasm for those aspects of student life" make her a special person. She has already made several very important contributions. We are delighted to have her join the Student Affairs staff," said Joe Nixon, dean of students.

"Warmth," "family" and "outstanding" are the words Hill chooses to describe PC, and she speaks of the family atmosphere and the very warm reception that have greeted her here.

"The number of people who have stepped by just to say 'hi' and offer support is great," said Hill.

SVS: Making PC a better place

At Coker, Hill handled parts of orientation, minority programs and distribution of student activity fees, among her many other responsibilities there. Here, she sees a structural challenge as her largest obstacle.

"There are other things that happen through SVS and MSU that are not directly connected to the two student groups," she said.

This is a positive challenge, she said, since the two groups are so widely known and respected by the student body, and she allows that her position encompasses much more than only two organizations.

From her early days in Laurens County, Hill was interested in service.

"At fifteen, I felt like I would be an active citizen. I was torn between whether I'd be a lawyer or a public administrator. I thought I'd be a rebel without a cause. Wherever I was I thought I would be very close to my family and an active member of the community," she said.

"I want to make the community I'm a part of better, and in that way make the world better," said Hill.

"I'd like for SVS to be an organization that provides needed services within the community, that provides an opportunity for our student body to experience service and service learning," she said.

Laura Caudell, SVS intern-elect, likes the way that Hill has gone about ensuring SVS is just such an organization.

"Shelia has been very good to work with. She is very dedicated, and she's very interested and willing to help. I've enjoyed the past few weeks I've gotten to work with her," said Caudell.

MSU: Overcoming the diversity challenge

Hill's MSU philosophy centers on student involvement.

"I would hope the student group would strive to provide support for the multicultural population," says Hill, "and programs for all students to come together and learn from one another and to accentuate diversity on campus," said Hill.

"I like working with Shelia because she has high expectations for MSU as a group to make it a thriving part of PC's college campus. I think she really cares about the students. They're her first concern," said MSU president LaFaye Jackson.

In her free time, what little of it she has nowadays, Hill likes to play tennis and plant flowers in her yard, although she admits that the latter may well be a passing fancy.

"I enjoy people, so I hang out with my friends, but sometimes I like to get away and observe nature — in the winter, when the critters aren't out to get me!" she said.

She points to a poster on the wall of her office to identify her favorite quotation, spoken by Martin Luther King, Jr. "If man hasn't found something he will die for, he isn't fit to live."

"You have to have something that drives you, otherwise, you are only existing. I want to serve. I think that's what we're all called to do," Hill said.

And now it is Shelia Hill's job to call the students of PC to serve and to administer them not to take life too seriously.

"I enjoy the humor in the day-to-day," she said.

Hill said it is also her job to pass on to PC the most important lesson of her life: a lesson her parents taught her. "The greatest thing about life is meeting people who give to you and being able to give back to them."

Lady Hose win first game 3-2

New coach leads PC to victory over USCS

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

With just a little imagination, the arrival of a new coach to head Presbyterian's outstanding volleyball program could be compared to the arrival of a new conductor for a world-class orchestra.

Just as talented musicians sit poised and waiting for the first movement of the baton, fourteen talented young women in Blue Hose uniforms now spend hours in the gym reacting to the commands of the new face in Clinton.

Coach Deborah Holcombe, who was graduated from Southern Wesleyan University in 1987, arrived at PC prepared to assume command of the notably successful volleyball program and the "under construction" softball program.

For the past four years, Holcombe served in a similar capacity at her alma mater where she amassed impressive records both on the court (75-40) and the diamond (78-24-1).

Prior to entering the arena of collegiate athletics, Holcombe spent a year at Barnes High School and then two years at T.L. Hanna High School, during that time Holcombe was honored twice as Regional Coach of the Year for her achievements at the helm of the volleyball programs.

Following the promotion of coach Beth Couture to Assistant Director of Athletics, coach Allen Ansley, previously Couture's assistant, guided the Hose to a 62-19 record over the course of two years.

At the conclusion of last year, however, Ansley resigned thus opening the door for the advent of Holcombe.

If personal experience can be used to measure competence, then there should be no doubts about Holcombe's ability, she was selected as an All-American volleyball player in 1985 and 1986.

With one match under their belt, Holcombe and the Hose appear to be on track.

Despite a rough start in the contest against USC Spartanburg, Presbyterian managed to recover from an 0-2 deficit and capture the victory.

Individual game scores were 10-15, 15-15, 16-14, 15-7, 16-14.

In the pre-season SAC poll, the Blue Hose were ranked second as five starters return from the 1995 squad which finished with a 32-8 record overall and 12-2 mark in the SAC.

Presbyterian will savor the final season of standout senior Watonia Williams who led the SAC in kills last year.

THE SMARTEST COLLEGE COURSE YOU CAN TAKE

Polson's 14th team young and ready for a challenge

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

Coach Ralph Polson, who has collected an impressive 149-79-20 record during his tenure here at Presbyterian, is entering his fourteenth year as the director of the Blue Hose men's soccer program.

Last season PC's men notched a school-record 17 victories en route to claiming their third South Atlantic Conference regular season title in six years.

The 1995 Blue Hose also captured the SAC tournament crown which enabled them to secure a berth in the NCAA Division II National Tournament and fin-contribute immediately," Polson said.

Headlining the list of returners is senior NSCAA First Team All-American Jimmy May, the 1995 SAC Tournament's Most Valuable Player.

Last season he tallied seven goals and has 45 career points. Joining May in the midfield will be junior David Dore who led the Blue Hose with nine assists in 1995.

Defensively, Presbyterian will rely heavily on the talent of junior goalie Jeremy Ransom.

After notching a 1.06 goals against average and six shutouts last season, Ransom was named to the NSCAA First Team All-American squad.

Clint Galloway and Dick Hiller will also contribute to the defensive effort of the 1996 Hose. Galloway will certainly provide much leadership as he has started 56 games since his arrival here at PC, and ished the season ranked tenth in the nation.

To his dismay, Polson will not be returning seven starters, as he had originally anticipated; senior standout defensive player Kevin Smith has been lost for the entire season due to the development of a back problem which required surgery.

Though he does return six outstanding starters, Polson may face some new challenges this year as several young and rather inexperienced Blue Hose will be called upon to fill the void left by the loss of Smith and the departure of all-conference performers such as Brian Blackwelder and Chris Napier who were graduated in May.

The 1996 women's team is picked to repeat as SAC champs and has been ranked ninth in a national pre-season poll conducted by College Sports Magazine.

Goalie Emily Campbell and sweeper Liz Roe are anchoring the defense this year. Campbell gave up only 1 goal per game last year and has 14.5 career shutouts.

Roe was a second team All-American last year.

"The team is very deep. We will gain experience through the upperclassman for the years to come," said freshman Karen Markham.

Hardiman and Wright both scored six-teen goals last year.

Experienced Blue Hose prepared for new season

After a successful 1995 campaign, Presbyterian will rely on veterans for game leadership

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

At first glance, the Blue Hose football squad's 1995 record of 6-5 may seem to be merely the report card of a mediocre season, a little probing quickly reveals, however, that nothing is further from the truth.

Through the Hose tell prey to their old Bronze Derby rivals Newberry College in the final contest of last season, sixth year head coach John Perry and the Blue Hose had much to celebrate when they trotted from the gridiron last November.

Most notably, the men in blue had posted their first winning record (6-5 overall, 4-3 SAC) since 1987. After pounding their way to an opening 2-0 mark, the Hose then suffered four consecutive setbacks, three of which were particularly disappointing due to the slim margins of defeat. PC narrowly lost to top-ranked SAC opponent Carson Newman by a score of 21-24, was edged by interstate rival Wofford 20-21, and then was downed by second ranked conference foe Catawba 28-31.

In the minds of most fans, hope for a successful season had been extinguished as the Blue Hose winning percentage dipped to .333.

It was not until mid-October that the Blue Hose awakened to pound Mars Hill, Wingate, and Gardner Webb and salvage what was almost recorded as another frustrating year in Presbyterian's football history.

Despite their stint in the doldrums during September, the Hose were not without displays of brilliance.

In tribute not only to his outstanding talent but also to the ability of PC's offensive line to execute their blocking schemes, fullback Steve Gorrie was named NCAA Division II national player of the year.

In his final season wearing the garnet and blue, Gorrie tallied 1,312 yards on the ground and notched 20 TDs.

Throughout his career at Presbyterian, Gorrie amassed 3,486 yards rushing and was honored as an all-SAC performer and as an all-American.

Also on the offensive side of the ball, quarterback Randy Sullivan, who was recently selected as a Pre-Season All-American by College Football Review, posted impressive numbers and became the Hose's all-time leader in total offense with 4,931 yards.

Entering the 1996 season, Sullivan looks to surpass last year's tally of 1,292 yards in the air.

While Gorrie and Sullivan resumed their heros as had been anticipated, the performance of the 1995 defensive squad was most impressive and unexpected.

The Hose matured by leaps and bounds as they led the SAC in rushing, scoring and total defense.

"Improvement" was hardly a sufficient synopsis of the Blue Hose performance as fans watched them allow only 313.1 total yards per outing and 15.5 points.

Though Presbyterian lost two of the anchors (Antonio Merriweather and Jon Ory) of that unit to graduation, nine starters are in Blue Hose uniforms again this year.

Headlining that group are defensive last season. Presbyterian will be at home against Charleston Southern on September 14.

PLAYER PROFILE

RANDY SULLIVAN, #13

- Co-captain who is scheduled to start at quarterback
- Pre-season Second Team All-South Atlantic Conference quarterback
- PC's all-time leader in total offense with 4,931 career yards (4,000 passing and 931 rushing)

"We expect an impressive and successful season. I think our experience this year will take us lots further."

back Chris Hamilton who was named to all conference team last season, linebacker Jeremy Mauldin who was PC's leading tackler in 1995, defensive end Kevin Cox who has led PC in sacks for two years, and defensive tackle Duane Thompson who was chosen as the SAC Defensive Freshman of the Year in 1995.

Hamilton and Thompson were also selected by College Football Review as Pre-Season All-Americans.

The outlook for Presbyterian's offensive unit this season is good, as well. Though some big shoes must be filled at the fullback and center positions, there are many experienced players returning for the Hose who will help to fill that void as the squad learns to develop other facets of their game.

"Last year Gorrie was our go-to-man, especially in short yardage situations. It will certainly be different this year, we'll have to adjust," said Brian Edge, a junior line backer.

Predictions are that perhaps the Hose will look to utilize the tailback (most likely junior Terrance Grant) more this season, thus relying to a greater extent upon quickness and finesse and less upon hard-nose pounding up the middle.

The presence of returning offensive linemen such as senior left tackle Butch Estes, who joined Sullivan, Hamilton, and Thompson as a pre-season All-American selection, should enable Presbyterian to control the line of scrimmage and provide not only protection for Sullivan but also open holes for Grant.

Sullivan's primary targets will be seniors Chris Thorpe and Kevin Lindler who notched 21 and 17 receptions, respectively in 1995.

Sullivan, Estes, and Cox are serving as co-captains of this year's squad, and under their leadership the Hose hope to improve upon all that was accomplished last season.

The Last Word: Warm, misty regards from Leighton and Josh

by Leighton Hart and Josh Lamkin

Dear School,

Hello. Glad you are back. What a summer. How 'bout them Braves? So we're back and trying to keep this back page thing rolling. For you upperclassmen, you remember this little feature as a space for two lonely guys to get dizzy watching a computer screen and try to make you kids guffaw. (That means laugh.) For you freshmen, this little column is something that was created, oh, say about a year ago in one of the biggest media disasters in living history. Glad to have ya.

First, let's get something out of the way:

"Hi."

"Very good to see you too."

"My summer was fine."

"I worked."

"I can't really say. My bosses said something about broken legs if I said anything to anyone about anything."

"Oh it's nothing. It'll heal. Not anything a little Neosporin won't fix."

"Lost it in 'Nam."

These are many useful answers to any questions you might bring up in the midst of casual back-to-school banter.

The big question right now, though, is of the whereabouts of one young Tommy Reiser, lovable newspaper tycoon of the 1995-1996 school year. That's a painful topic to address, but thanks for asking. You may have heard that there were some Olympics in Hotlanta this summer. Well, the hunky Tommy managed to find a ticket or two and made his way to the little country-fried paradise for the games. While there, he got in good with the Australian women's track and field team. Last we heard, he shipped off to the land down under to be the "personal trainer" for one of the more svelte women pole vaulters. Congrats Tommy. Enter Josh.

Blue Stocking humorists Josh Lamkin and Leighton Hart conduct their own drop/add scheduling. Their latest course selection: Introduction to Watercolor and Your Feelings.

Josh is a Virgo, likes swimming, horseback riding and enjoys needlework on rainy summer days. It's darn good to meet him, eh? Josh will be filling in for the lovesick Tommy.

Leighton is a returning letterman hailing from Oshkosh, Wisconsin. He spent the summer as a yes-man for one of the tougher Oshkosh crime families. He's a Sagittarius. He likes the cheese.

We are both very glad to be back in the cultural mecca that is Clinton, USA. The sights, the sounds, indeed, the smells of Presbyterian College have provided a warm homecoming. There's really nothing quite like that first GHD beef fritter after months of grade A food and nugget-free cuisine. The Blue Ladies are back all sleek and tanned after countless hours at the Tan 'n' Tone. The end of summer is always a tough time for our glorious matriarchs of Blue since they have to hang up the Doc Martens and remove all body piercings for yet another eight months.

FOB was a raging success. Blizzard of Bucks was a big hit. Good thing PC paid those ladies countless thousands to come put on that show. The 30 bucks won by the people of fresh more than made up for that loss.

Field Day is always a blast. Josh spent at least an hour's worth of good needlework time extracting large deposits of shaving cream from his face and chest, breast, neck and head — and he didn't even go to Field Day.

"The shaving cream fight was great. Boy, we really got them freshmen good! One of 'em got me in a full nelson. I fought and fought and finally sprung free due to the tremendous lubricative powers of the shaving cream. That's when I kicked him in the back," said Leighton.

"Sounds like a pretty tough fight," quips Josh.

"Yeah, Public Safety almost intervened, but then they heard that there was a car parked in a handicapped spot behind Godfrey House, so they sped away in hot pursuit to write a ticket. That's when the guy turned on me. Fire in his eyes. Think I ruptured a spleen," said Leighton.

Now on to bigger and better things, like how to choose your class schedule. Rumor has it that every so often some marvelously gifted kid'll take up to 15 hours! That's including 10 o'clock classes. Take it easy on yourselves, folks. A lot of people will tell you that college is for expanding your mind and becoming a useful member of society. Perhaps that is true. But 15 hours? That's cutting into precious Barwatch time. Be on the lookout for advisors who sign you up for more than 9 hours in any given semester. And watch out for "labs." Cattle ranchers probably tell the little baby cows that they're just going off to "lab." The next thing you know, you've got veal patties. Wow, that was impressive. This may be the first time in the history of human communication that a lab has been compared to veal. Mark your calendars, kids.

Anyhow, about drop/add. Seemed like a pretty harmless event, eh? To an outsider, it would appear so. Though once you get behind the doors of drop/add, you'll find out that it's all a dirty, dirty racket. The folks running the computers are Dean Moncriel's henchpeople (that is, those students who are prone to hench, be they male or female). Keep your eye out for them all year. They keep tabs on the conduct of the students. If you see one, do not talk to them. Repeat: DO NOT TALK TO THEM. Hit the deck, roll to safety and wait in fetal position until the danger has cleared.

So once again, welcome to school. It's going to be an uproarious year. Let us frolic in the splendor of the City on the Grow. Eat, drink, and be merry. Don't count your chickens before they hatch. Don't put all your eggs in one basket. You've always got your health. Don't bet on a 3-legged horse. Nobody likes a cliché.

$3.9 million Belk gift to provide new dormitory, sculptures

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

Installation of three Italian geometric sculptures, construction of a new residence hall and completion of payment on Grottnes Hall will be among the first tangible benefits of the Irwin Belk's $3.9 million gift to Presbyterian College, said Kenneth B. Orr, President of Presbyterian College.

The Belk family was honored at PC's Sept. 10 opening convocation ceremonies. Belk's sons-in-law, Louis Dean Miltimore of Darien, Conn. and Edward James Waller of Calistoga, Calif., received honorary doctorates of public service during the ceremony.

The $3.9 million gift, the largest single donation in the college's history and one of the largest gifts to an independent college in South Carolina, is not the first the Belk family has given to the College.

In the past five years, 147 students have received financial aid from the William Henry Belk scholarship fund. Faculty members have benefited from the resources from the Carol Grottnes Belk Fellowship Fund. The family has also donated three buildings to the college's physical plant: William Henry Belk auditorium, and Mary Irwin Belk and Grottnes Halls, both women's residence facilities.

A history of benevolence

The Belks are an institution unto themselves. William Henry Belk, father of the current Belk generation, was the founder of Belk stores. Four of his children, Irwin, Tom, and John Belk, and Sarah Belk Gambrell, have been closely related to PC, with Irwin emerging as this college's particular benefactor.

The relationship actually began with the Belk stores themselves when store managers joined a PC fund raising effort that began in the mid-1950s.

"We began a capital gifts campaign program in 1953, one of the first ones we had done since the second world war," said Ed Campbell, who began his career at PC in 1950 as registrar and is now director of advancement for major gifts.

"In 1955, during the presidency of Dr. Marc C. Weersing, we started a twenty-five year program of development that would culminate in 1980. It was during the 1955 to 1960 period that we were fortunate to have store managers who were also owners of certain Belk stores take an interest in the college," said Campbell.

Through those managers, PC gained the generosity of the Belk family, and a relationship was born, said Campbell.

The Belk Foundation approved its first project, William Henry Belk Auditorium, in 1960. During the time that Dr. Marshall W. Brown was president of the college, Irwin Belk began giving to a fund that PC started in his father's name. As the fund grew and reached $500,000, PC was allowed to use income from the interest generated by the fund, which now exceeds $1 million.

The auditorium was the first of three buildings funded by Irwin Belk and the Belk

Students adjust to new facility

After one full semester and a summer of use, most professors and students seem satisfied with PC's newest academic facility, the Harrington-Peachtree Presbyterian Academic Center.

"The reaction to the building has been very positive," said Skip Zubrod, vice president for finance.

Zubrod cited minor problems with humidity caused by the building's air conditioning system. College officials are consulting with the building's engineers to correct the problem, he said.

Faculty in the facility have made use of its futuristic technology. However, student reaction to the building is mixed.

Junior Mitchell Moore had a mathematics class in Harrington-Peachtree this summer.

"My teacher taught completely from the overhead, for me, it just took a little getting used to," Moore said.

"It's a beautiful building," said junior Linch Schlich. "I'm glad it's on campus, but the remote control curtains are a bit of a wasted resource."

POINT

Students should take advantage of unusual Russell lecture series

From Madonna to Singled Out to comic strips and fashion trends, the modern news media profoundly influence our perceptions of popular American culture.

PC students are afforded a special opportunity to examine their own culture this academic year as the college's Russell Program delves into the hows and whys of the pop culture of this era.

For students who believe the college's CEP program is composed of monotonous, dry speakers, this year's Russell Program certainly should turn heads.

Take a look at this fall's offerings: a lecture on comic strips and characters from Harlan Ellison, author of a Star Trek episode, on Oct. 15, and a lecture from rock critic Dave Marsh, a former columnist for Playboy and a former Rolling Stone editor on Nov. 12.

The college yearly spends many dollars per student gathering experts from around the nation to discuss topics relating to modern media.

The investment the program has made into this year's topic is relevant to all students of the liberal arts, from biology to business administration.

This year's topic is exciting and interesting. After all, how often can students find CEP credit for attending lectures on comic strips or rock music?

The Blue Stocking strongly encourages the PC campus to take advantage of this unique series not only because of the CEP credit offered, but also because of the importance of the subject to modern students of the liberal arts.

Honor Code penalties should remain consistent

Student and faculty members of the college's Judicial Council and Appeals Board currently are considering amendments and changes to PC's Honor Code and the appeals process for Code violations.

Items under consideration include decreasing the two semester penalty for Honor Code violations for those students who plead guilty with extenuating circumstances (students whose actions are dishonorable but understandable, for example).

A violation of the Honor Code deserves the full two semester suspension as the normal penalty, regardless of how understandable the crime.

Lightening the stiff punishment would drastically undermine this institution's commitment to an honorable community.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Campus Bookstore*
Editorial unrealistic, childish

Perusing the pages of the Sept. 10 issue of the Blue Stocking, I happened upon an article that set me on edge. An anonymous author composed an article entitled "Campus Bookstore Needs Improvement." While I agree that the bookstore needs improvement, the author resorted to childish whining about a lack of elements that would be unreasonable, economically as well as logistically to provide to the students.

First of all, the author of this letter attacked the method in which the textbooks are distributed to the students in the first week of classes. While I agree that this method is time consuming and possibly degrading to a select few, we must keep in mind the layout of the bookstore. Because of the closeness of the shelves and their juxtaposition to the wall, it would inevitably be chaotic to distribute them any other way. People would enter a row just to get one book that was at the far end of the shelf just to find themselves blocked in by five or six more people not to mention the horrible mess that would result from trying to serve so many people in such close quarters.

Instead of attacking the bookstore staff for effectively making order out of chaos, in the face of an inability to immediately increase their facilities, we should focus on the need for a larger facility.

Secondly, the author feels that the bookstore should be transformed into nothing less than a Barnes & Noble. Except for the suggestion of a greater selection of books and magazines, the author makes some very immature and spoiled suggestions. The store should invite students to spend time reading and relaxing with some comfortable chairs and perhaps a couch or two. Cappuccino and other upscale beverages should be offered.

Presbyterian College has made enormous strides to provide relaxing environments for its students. Inklings provides plenty of couches, coffee, (and I believe even cappuccino) and a good clean place to let down as does the newly established Calhoun's. As for quiet places to read a book or study, the college has done a pretty darn good job providing more than enough there too. The library has ample seating as does the first floor of Springs Campus Center, which is filled with couches and comfortable chairs. A bookstore should not be equipped to house a bunch of students just hanging around, relaxing with their cappuccino. Just imagine the traffic jam that would occur if there were students "relaxing" while others were trying to buy their books.

Finally, as a former Furman University student, I feel that if PC wishes to "establish itself as an academic, heavy weight" then it should indeed follow Furman's example, which would not include couches and cappuccino. PC should certainly invest more into the bookstore, but we must support the hardworking people who serve us with very limited resources. Until we have a spare room nearly four times as large as our disposal, the current PC bookstore will not be able to offer anything but textbooks and spirit supplies.

Campus provides several leisure-time options

Now that everyone has finally gotten settled and into the swing of things, I'd like to tell you about some of the activities that are offered here at PC. I realize that you all study most of your days away, but at some point, although you may not want one, you need a break. There are many social outlets for students to explore.

The Student Union Board holds events throughout the year that are fun, open to every one, and best of all, FREE! SUB activities include bands, comedians, hypnotists, the Blue Sox Festival and the Grand Homecoming Court. Signs are posted around campus prior to each event, so keep your eyes open.

Calhoun's is another option students have to get away from the books. The house was opened last year as a result of students' desires for an additional social facility on campus. Calhoun's offers pool tables, dart boards, televisions, and a sound system, and patrons can order food and sit with friends in the eating area. Calhoun's is open Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and is located on Calhoun Street. Organizations may reserve the facility for meetings or other activities by contacting Bryan Madden in Springs Campus Center.

And last, but not least, there's Inklings, which is located in the basement of Georgia Hall. Inklings is PC's own coffeehouse and hangout, relaxed atmosphere. Activities held here include poetry readings, open microphone nights, mingling, and group discussions. SUB holds events in Inklings as well as in Calhoun's.

The continuation and success of these facilities and activities depend on student interest and participation. I strongly encourage everyone to try them out. Of course, if you're truly a scholar, a dozen or more CEPs are offered each month, so knock yourself out!

Student musicians play for enjoyment

by Leighton Hart
Associate Editor

When Kipper Edens was in first grade, she sat at the keyboard of a piano for her first lesson. She stuck with the piano for nine years, and from lessons and hard work sprang a deep appreciation for music. By the time Edens was in high school, she was accompanying the school's choir.

Her dedication to practice and improvement was due in great part to her father.

"Playing piano was never something I was forced into doing. My dad plays piano, and he made sure that I could always stay busy with it. He always had me playing in nursing homes and church shows," said Edens, a senior from Dalzell, S.C.

Edens' grandfather played the primary role in one of Kipper's more distinctive musical accolades.

"The harp has always been my grandfather's favorite instrument to listen to," she said. "When I was in seventh grade, he took me to listen to a woman play the harp. After that show, he offered to buy me a harp and pay for lessons and even drive me to Columbia for those lessons."

Edens continued playing the harp for her grandfather and took lessons until she came to PC. Originally, Edens was a piano major, but has since switched to music education.

"I enjoy music in school and high school," she said. "I really want to be a role model to others. This is a talent that God has given me and to do as much as I can is my return. Music has been my whole life."

Likewise, Michael Baughman, a junior from Anderson, S.C., considers music a significant part of his life. Baughman picked up the guitar about six years ago and began taking weekly lessons. After a year of lessons, Baughman began writing his own songs and playing for church groups and camps.

"I took lessons and it came pretty easy," said Baughman. Then I got the opportunity to play in front of people. I like getting people involved—singing campfire songs and stuff like that."

To Baughman, time with his guitar is quiet time spent in reflection.

"It's a good time to relax and be with myself. It's fun. I like it," he said.

Baughman's original music is influenced by virtually all musical genres.

He owes the music in his life to a camp counselor he met once.

"There was a guy at a camp I went to one time who played guitar and sang. I wanted to be like him. That's probably why I picked up the guitar," said Baughman.

Baughman's commitment to playing and singing has led to his involvement with the PC Fellowship Choir. He also has performed for students at Inklings' open microphone nights and for last year's freshmen during orientation.

Matt Miller is a self-taught guitarist from Greenville, S.C. The political science, English, and history major has been plucking since his sophomore year in high school.

"My dad tried learning the guitar and never picked it up," said Miller. "When I was in high school, I heard songs that I wanted to play and picked up the guitar."

"Queensryche's song Silent Lucidity was popular back then, and I wanted to know how to play it. That was the first song I ever learned," he said.

To Miller, music can serve two purposes.

"If I'm sitting around with friends, it's just fun and stupid. I like to sing songs everyone knows," he said.

"But if I'm by myself, I play songs that are more technically difficult. It's pretty therapeutic," said Miller. Miller thrives on playing cover songs for his friends and schoolmates. He has performed several times in Inklings and for fraternity parties. The experience can be intimidating sometimes, though. A few years ago, Miller played an original song for a crowd of about 1200 at Montreat, N.C.

"That was the most frightened I've been in my whole life," said Miller.

Will Pugh is another self-taught musician. The PC junior picked up the guitar during his sophomore year at Hillcrest High in nearby Simpsonville. Like Edens, music has always been a family affair for Pugh.

"My uncle is a professional jazz musician, so we used to play together at family get-togethers," he said.

Pugh's musical endeavors have taken him down a different road than his classmates. These days, it is rare for him to spend a whole weekend at Student musicians Will Pugh, Michael Baughman, Kipper Edens and Matt Miller play a variety of instruments for pleasure and the public. Pugh plays with Seven Miles, a band that performs around the Upstate.

PC since the band is in high demand at fraternity parties and bars all over the South Carolina. The band can be seen quite often at TD's in Clemson, a popular restaurant and bar where Pugh played his first live show with Seven Miles.

The success of the band has taken Pugh somewhat by surprise.

"I just got into it for fun. All of this came pretty suddenly," said Pugh.

Indeed it has. During his freshman year at PC, Pugh was approached by long time friend Jason Henderson and offered a spot as rhythm guitarist in the band Seven Miles. At the time, the group was looking to depart from its usual set of cover songs and begin writing more original tunes. Today, Pugh and Henderson share the majority of the songwriting responsibilities for the band.

This summer, Pugh and Seven Miles went into the studio to record a CD of original songs. The band plans to sell the CD at their live shows. Since the group has not been signed to a label, the CD was produced at the band's expense. Pugh did hint, though, that while the group was in the studio, at least one producer showed interest in Seven Miles' music.

"My main concern right now is getting into physical therapy school, but I'll go as far as the band wants to go," said Pugh.

Randall elected to Clinton City Council

by Daniel Hart
Staff Writer

For most PC students, Randy Randall, director of student activities, is the contact person for Student Union Board activities and intramurals. However, few students are aware of Randall's newest responsibility: the city of Clinton.

On Aug. 13, Randall won the election for city council in the city's first ward by fifty votes, defeating incumbent Stonewall Jackson 126-76. With over two hundred voters participating in the election, ward one had the highest voter turnout in the city for the municipal election. The victory is Randall's first attempt at elected office.

Randall is excited about his new role and looks forward to working closely with his colleagues on the city council.

"It's going to be fun," he said. "Clinton has a good group of people on City Council." Randall also praised city manager Charles Litchfield for his past work in municipal government.

Although he admits that he is just beginning to learn the ropes of municipal government, Randall has ambitious dreams for the city of Clinton.

Specifically, Randall seeks to improve the uptown area of Clinton.

"It's older and needs improving," he said. "It needs to be made more attractive."

Randall points to buildings downtown which have fallen into disrepair. Randall believes that the beautification of downtown Clinton will allow the city to attract new industry, including additional restaurants and shops. He believes this will improve the quality of life in Clinton.

"I think it's great that Randy had the interest to run for City Council," said Joseph Nixon, dean of students. "I think he'll bring a lot of keen insight and humor to that rather dull and stodgy body."

Nixon has worked closely with Randall for several years and recalls the many positions he has held at PC. Over the years, Nixon has witnessed Randall's numerous talents which include, among other things, singing and acting.

"He has a gift for getting along with people and communicating," Nixon said. Nixon expects that Randall will be a future mayor of Clinton or a state legislator.

Randall was sworn into office on Aug. 30 and attended his first meeting of the City Council on Sept. 9. Last week, he toured the city's power and water facilities and reported that he learned much from the tour about the city's pumping stations and electrical supply.

Next week, Randall will travel to Calhoun Falls to meet with other public officials from Georgia and South Carolina. Meeting officials will discuss the possibility of making Hwy. 72 a four-lane highway. Randall believes that such a plan will benefit Clinton.

A native of Washington, Ga., Randall moved to Clinton graduated from PC and chose to stay in Clinton after earning a Master's Degree from the University of Georgia. When participating in Leadership: Laurens County a number of years ago, Randall became interested in local politics and has wanted to become involved in municipal government ever since.

Clasen provides friendship, instills hope

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

As graduation approaches, senior Cathy Clasen of Kingsport, Tenn., will finish Presbyterian College an accomplished student.

Clasen, a double major in English and religion-philosophy, is a familiar face on campus. She has been active in Recycle PC, Westminster Fellowship, Fellowship of Christian Athletes, the PC choir, and the Student Fellowship Choir. Clasen is also an admissions stirling and is the vice president of Omicron Delta Kappa, the leadership fraternity. Clasen also works in the foreign language department.

Clasen knows PC was the right choice for her. Although she has taken challenging courses, Clasen believes her professors have gone above and beyond both in and out of the classroom.

"I love PC, honestly and genuinely," said Clasen. "There's a true sense of family on campus. The friendships I've formed here have been deep, intimate, fun, exciting and nourishing," she said.

"Cathy is a joyful person whose distinctive laughter and warm personality brightens everyone's day. I am fortunate to know her as a loyal and perceptive friend," said roommate Jennifer Skelton. Some students hate to think about life after PC, but Clasen is preparing for life beyond graduation.

"Since life is ambiguous and unpredictable, I can tell no plans with absolute certainty. However, I feel a strong calling to the ministry. Seminary is eventually in my to others. I enjoy her company because she's a very sincere and real person."

Clasen is beginning a ministry at PC called Common Ground, an organization for Christians who are striving to meet their spiritual needs and think that fellowship is better in small groups.

"I have a vision for PC to have a place where people can come and feel safe in exploring their faith, their doubts, and their questions. I believe that significant life change can occur in small groups, where spiritual hunger unites us," said Clasen.

In order for people to feel comfortable in a small group, Clasen thinks they must experience community. She finds community "a place to know and to be known, to serve and to be served, to love and to be loved, and to celebrate and to be celebrated."

A sense of community is the setting that she and a core group are developing and plan to begin in early November. With 30 people interested, their goal is to set up small groups according to the different needs of the participants.

"Above all else, I want to be a person of hope," said Clasen.

And hope is what she intends to instill through her friendships, both on the PC campus and beyond.

Belk counts leadership and funds among his gifts. He is in his twentieth year on PC's Board of Trustees and has served on a number of special committees.

"Irwin is a vocal member of the board, participates in board meetings and has the college's best interests at heart. He's not afraid to talk about the issue of values," said Brown.

"He has been a faithful member of the board," said Orr. "It's rare for him not to be there, an indicator of his commitment to PC."

The college is not Belk's only Presbyterian connection.

"He has a very strong Presbyterian background. Irwin went to Davidson College, and he takes his connection with the church seriously. He is a long-time member of Meyers Park Presbyterian Church in Charlotte," said Brown.

The details of the gift

$1.5 million will go toward the construction of a new residence hall to complete the Barron Grotnes residence complex on the college's east plaza. Approximately $625,000 will complete remaining payments on Grotnes Hall.

Three Italian sculptures have been purchased at a cost of $225,000 and will be delivered in October.

"A world-famous sculptor is coming to install them, and part of the funds are going to pay for his transportation, the transportation of the sculptures and their installation," said Orr.

The sculptures are abstract geometrics, and people will definitely come here just to see them," Orr said.

Why PC?

"The visibility that the Belks have given PC is one of their most important contributions," said Brown. "The Belk name is widely known and by associating with PC, Irwin Belk has chosen to honor us."

Why has Belk chosen to make this institution the beneficiary of his finances and good will?

"As far as scholarship, I think PC is one of the best colleges in the United States," said Belk.

But as far as the morals and principles they teach at that school, those are number one. I see in PC what should be taught to boys and girls all over the world—the morals and principles that will get them through life," he said.

"I think the Belks naturally nurture philanthropic interests, and Irwin was probably brought up to understand the value of giving back. I think the real motivation for his giving is his love of this institution," said Brown.

"What I love about the school is the way that everyone says 'hello' when you walk on campus. It's a friendly school," said Belk.

"There are many wealthy people in the world, but I don't know of many who have been as generous to higher education as the Belk family," said Orr.

Volleyball team looks for SAC title; victorious play continues

Team regroups after loss at Gardner-Webb

by Ellison Manley
Staff Writer

Yes, it is starting to get a little repetitive. Virtually every issue of the Blue Stocking contains an article about Presbyterian's amazing volleyball team and their unbelievable win-loss ratio.

Realizing the danger of sounding like a broken record, the fact is that the Lady Blue Hose are at it again. Opening the season with a 12-1 overall record (3-1 in the SAC), the Lady Blue Hose seem bound to yet another victorious year.

Beginning the season at USC-Spartanburg proved to be quite beneficial because the Lady Hose knew their season would not be an easy one. After falling behind in the first two games of the SAC-CVAC Tournament which was held at Catawba University, PC defeated Erskine (for the second time this season) and Queens on Friday, September 13 and then won four matches on Saturday to take the tournament title.

In the final match, which featured PC against Wingate for the second time that week, the Blue Hose had to battle for five games before securing the victory.

Following that string of victories, the Lady Blue Hose carried a 10-0 record with them to Boiling Springs to face Gardner Webb on September 16. After having beaten Wingate, the preseason pick for the Conference title, twice the Blue Hose were feeling rather confident. Presbyterian was in for a rude awakening, however, as Gardner Webb beat them 12-15, 11-15, 15-13, 10-15.

"Gardner Webb was a much-improved team," said senior co-captain Amy Lindell. "They got up every ball we hit at them and really communicated match, the Blue Hose had to regroup in order to take the win 10-15, 13-15, 16-14, 15-7, 16-14. Senior co-captain Watoma Williams led the team with 31 of their 75 kills and had 15 blocks while freshman Stephanie Cloud chipped in a team high 23 digs and has been a consistent member of the starting lineup all season.

Stephanie has a very good work ethic. She's fast and she's enthusiastic and she knows the game," said Debbie Holcombe, first-year coach.

Perhaps the biggest victory of the year in the eyes of the players was the four game win over long-time rival Wingate College.

In front of a very large and vocal crowd the Blue Hose came out strong and crushed the Lady Bulldogs 15-5 and 15-4 before sliding to a feeble 3-15 loss. The Hose came back in the fourth game to win 15-12.

"The Wingate match was the most exciting match so far. It was fun because the team got so pumped up and we beat our old rival," said setter Jenny Frailing, who handed out 57 of the team's 58 assists, a season high.

The next big milestone for the Lady Blue Hose was claiming the title at the well. "Gardner Webb has a very good team. The fact that we played badly, but still reached double digits is encouraging to me, however. We look forward to playing them at home, hopefully for the conference championship," said Holcombe.

In their last two outings, PC has defeated USC Aiken and conference foe Erskine 14-16, 15-2, 15-11, 15-12. Three conference opponents remain in the first round of play.

Williams believes the team's chances for a conference title are greater this year than they have been in the past.

"This year we have a stronger sense of direction and a deeper bench. We keep the same level of play no matter who comes in for us," Williams said.

Williams was recently named SAC Player of the Week for the fifth time in her career. She leads the team in kills (4.6 pg), hitting percentage (.349), and blocks (1.5 pg). Defensively, the Blue Hose are led by Cloud who averages 3.78 digs per game and junior Mary Kruse who posts a 90% passing rate.

Junior Beth Mann leads the team in service aces with 28 (.68 per game) and is second in hitting percentage with .291.

Two college funds also bear the Belk name. The monies of The William Henry Belk Scholarship Fund annually are awarded to academically gifted students.

The Carol Grotnes Belk Fellowship Fund allows young professors to come to PC before completing their doctoral degrees. The fund provides equipment and additions to faculty libraries, in addition to time off for writing doctoral dissertations.

"A lot of people don't realize how influential that fund has been to PC," said Dr. Ted Brown, vice president for college advancement. "It helps us recruit talented young scholars and orient them to teaching once they're on campus."

"The grants are typically given to those professors who are working on a scholarly project to complete their dissertations. Of the 48 faculty members who have received grants from the Grotnes fund, 40 still teach at PC," said Orr.

Team holds 6-0 record

Lady Hose soccer team ranked 15th in nation

from staff reports

The women's soccer team has opened their season by delivering six defeats to opposing teams within a 12-day period. A Sept. 23 ranking by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America places the Lady Blue Hose 15th in the nation among NCAA Division II schools.

Junior Brooke Wright, a forward, was named the SAC Pepsi Women's Soccer Player of the Week this week.

Such attention is not undeserved. The team, led in scoring by Wright, Elizabeth Roe, Rebecca Hardiman and Diane Hancock has garnered 31 of the 33 total points earned in their opening matchups.

The Blue Hose dealt a 4-0 defeat to SAC rival Erskine College at home on Sept. 11. Roe scored two goals with assists from Wright, Hancock and teammate Heather Jones.

Hancock scored a goal with an assist from senior Lisa Becker, and Jones completed the Blue Hose victory with an assist from senior Renee Bevil.

The team defeated Clayton State 3-0 in Morrow, Ga. on Sept. 14, with Wright, a junior forward, notching all three goals with assists from Susan Cook.

The Lady Blue Hose met Coker College on Sept. 19 at home, and handed the Cobras an 8-0 defeat. Wright led scoring with assists from Abby Vought, Anne Marie Flaherty, Hardiman, Roe and Hancock.

Hancock tallied twice in the game with assists from Sara Plank, Karen Markham, and Bevil. Bevil and Markham each scored a goal, with assists from Flaherty and Hancock, respectively.

The team travelled to Carson-Newman College for a Sept. 21 matchup, where the Blue Hose defeated the Jefferson City, Tenn. school 4-0.

Hardiman contributed two unassisted goals, and Wright finished out the Blue Hose victory with two goals assisted by Roe and senior Susan Olmert.

Roe scored three goals on Monday to lead the Blue Hose to a 7-1 victory over visiting Lenoir-Rhyne College. Wright put PC ahead 1-0 just two minutes into the match with her team-leading 12th goal of the year on assists from Becker and Cook.

At the 23:00 mark, senior midfielder Tara Healy knotted the game 1-1 with an unassisted goal.

The Blue Hose scored three more goals before halftime as Roe tallied twice and sophomore midfielder Rebecca Monroe scored once.

In the second half, Roe, Monroe and Hardiman all netted goals to round out the scoring.

Team members point to unity as their successful ingredient.

"It's a fun team and we work well together. Everyone has been busy practicing and working really hard," said Hardiman.

"The freshmen are a good class. They've jumped right and have done a good job," she said.

Bevil thinks the team's unity is a matter of pride.

"From day one of the preseason we show our unity by the fact that we all support each other, including the freshmen," she said.

The team faces SAC opponents Elon College and Catawba College next week, and will matchup with Floridian opponents Lynn University (currently ranked first in the division) and Barry University (currently ranked third in the division) over fall break.

Men's soccer team captures second place in Nike challenge

by Jeff Walker
Staff Writer

Coach Ralph Polson led his 17th ranked Blue Hose onto the Ponderosa last weekend for the Presbyterian College/Nike Soccer Challenge. The Hose were poised to do battle with South Region foes Florida Tech, Wingate University and Eckerd College. Ultimately, Presbyterian placed second in the tournament.

"Our expectations were to win the tournament and prove that we are one of the best teams in the nation," said sophomore defender Tim Wendling.

On Saturday, the Blue Hose were matched against the powerful squad from Florida Tech. Tech, which boasts a program ranked 6th in the nation and 2nd in the region, scored two quick first half goals. PC responded with goals by Trey Williams and Bryan Ridgley. They battled through overtime before ending in 2-2 tie.

"Florida Tech was a very good team," said Polson. "We were very tentative after we gave up the first two goals, but overall we played a lot better in the second half."

Wingate defeated Eckerd College 4-0 in the other game Saturday.

On Sunday PC routed Eckerd College 5-1. Bryan Ridgley and Drew Stephen chipped in two goals each and Clint Galloway added PC's other tally.

"We're pleased with the results but we finished second without losing a game in our own tournament," said senior midfielder Jimmy May.

"We are satisfied about the way we played but disappointed that we didn't come in first overall," said sophomore midfielder Brian Giunta.

Wingate ended up winning the tournament with a 4-2 upset of Florida Tech. Despite their disappointment concerning a second place finish, several individual Blue Hose were recognized for their contributions. Clint Galloway, Todd Anderson, Jimmy May and Bryan Ridgley were the four Presbyterian selections, named to the All Tournament team.

On September 14, PC notched a huge win over South Region nemesis USC-Spartanburg. The Hose defeated Spartanburg by a score of 2-1.

"This is the first time in ten tries that we were finally able to defeat USC-Spartanburg," said Polson. "They were ranked #2 in the South and #6 in the nation."

PC has also defeated Erskine College 3-1, Belmont Abbey College 2-1, and Anderson College 2-1.

The lone blemish upon Presbyterian's record, a 1-2 loss to Emory University, came during the opening game of the season. The Blue Hose, whose record now stands at 5-1-1, are ranked 3rd in the South and 13th in the nation.

Bryan Ridgley leads the Blue Hose in goals (4) and in total points (10) so far this season.

"Overall we have struggled with injuries and we aren't playing our best soccer yet, but we will continue to get better once we have our best 11 back out on the field from injuries," said Polson.

Blue Hose exhaust Buccaneers 34-26

Win gives team a 'feeling of momentum' as they approach tough season

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

Anyone who was hoping to watch an exciting football game should have been placed to their seats at the Blue Hose's eight point victory against the Buccaneers of Charleston Southern University on Saturday, October 12. The contest proved to be the epitome of a nail-biter as the intensity of the Hose waned, and suddenly the 20-0 lead which they had mounted within 16 minutes of the opening cannon turned into a 26-20 deficit during the third quarter.

"It started off real easy, [but] then we made things interesting in the third quarter," said head coach John Perry. "I was very proud of this team in the fourth quarter though...the way we came back and took the lead."

On their opening drive, the Blue Hose marched 43 yards down the gridiron for a 500-kick-off. Behind the powerful blocking of experienced linemen such as Butch Fates and Luke Lucas, tailback Terrance Grant, who was named as the offensive player of the week for the Hose, carried the ball eight times for 40 yards and ultimately the score. Sophomore kicker Zac Thuck, who was selected by the coaching staff as the special teams player of the week, drilled the extra point and the Hose were off to an early lead.

A holding penalty and two incomplete passes doomed the next PC drive, but just three plays after their first punt, the Hose were in possession of the football again. Sophomore free safety Troy Gamble picked off a pass from the Buccaneers freshman quarterback Andy Tarr and returned it 32 yards to the CSU 23 yard line.

"There really was not a whole lot to the interception," said Gamble, the defensive player of the week. "Their man cut across the middle and I just happened to be in the right place at the right time. I'll take charity when I can get it though," Gamble said.

Regardless, Gamble's heroics set up the next PC score. Five handoffs to Grant and a 4 yard rush by senior quarterback Randy Sullivan resulted in another tally for the Hose. Again Thuck was accurate on the PAT and the Hose looked as if they were unstoppable.

With 14:42 remaining on the clock in the second period, Presbyterian notched another touchdown. This strike came as Sullivan, PC's all time leader in total offense, connected with junior tight end Eric Godfree on a pattern that ultimately covered 51 yards.

The Buccaneers did manage to get on the scoreboard before the half, after a 65 yard kickoff by Gamble, Charleston Southern began a drive from their own 20 yard line. On the third play of the drive, running back Damon White broke free for a 68 sprint to the goal line.

At the half, the Hose led 20-6 and seemed to be in complete control of the game after having gained 221 yards in the first period-en route to recording nine first downs while holding the Bucs to a mere four first downs and 145 yards.

"They [Charleston Southern] came out fired up in the second half. I have to give them credit...but we also had several busted ally shows our character."

"We played a good game," said Brian Estes, left tackle. "We got off to a real fast start and then had a lapse, but we got going in the end."

plays and messed up assignments. Really we just had a mental letdown. We've got to play with intensity for four quarters," said Gamble.

The third quarter certainly spelled disaster for the Hose, but fortunately it was not irreparable. Despite his youth and challenging first half, Buccaneers' quarterback Andy Tarr stumbled upon some poise on his way back to the gridiron for the second half and led CSU to three big third quarter scores. After completions of 26, 59, and 54 yards PC's convincing lead was demolished, the cannon had not fired in some time and the Hose found themselves behind 20-26.

"This game was almost exactly like our game against Charleston Southern two years ago when we won 38-34," said Perry. "They certainly have skilled players but we let up and allowed some of those things to happen. When we were down by six going into the fourth though, you could feel it [desire to win] on the sidelines...the guys were confident and encouraging each other."

The Blue Hose regained the momentum during their opening drive of the final period. In the process of covering 80 yards, the Hose burned 7:27 off the clock. Sullivan carried the ball across the stripe for the TD which allowed PC to reclaim the lead.

After trading possessions several times, the Buccaneers had the ball on their own 21 yardline with 1:25 left on the clock. On the first play of the drive, however, right cornerback Chris Hamilton intercepted a Tarr pass and scampered 40 yards back through the red zone, only to be shoved out of bounds at the two yard line.

A handoff to Grant, who amassed 121 yards on 34 carries, resulted in the final score for the Hose and the margin of victory: 34-26.

"The key interception by Hamilton nailed the victory shut," said Perry. "This win gives us a good feeling and some momentum. Knowing we came from behind re-

The Last Word: Tornado warning throws campus into frenzy

by Leighton Hart and
Josh Lamkin

Many of you may have been just where we were when we heard the fateful announcement. It'll probably live with us forever. Just like your parents can remember where they were when Kennedy was shot. Just like most of us can remember where we were when the Challenger exploded (freshmen excluded, you were still fetal). Just like the youth of today will remember where they were when Blind Melon met its end. Dinner time—the microphone crackled, and the voice boomed out of the sky, "Attention students, we have just been informed that there is a tornado warning in effect for this area. You are advised to take shelter immediately!" Trays clattered, glasses clinked, and general hysteria swept over the mass huddled in GDH as everyone simultaneously muttered to themselves, "Lady, please. We're eating."

We were two of the lucky bunch assembled in the Gourmet Dining Haven when the twister scare swept campus about a week ago. We knew we were safe. No tornado would touch GDH. We as a student body just aren't that lucky. Knowing that GDH was not the place in which to be trapped, the two of us grabbed our trays and elbowed our way to the trayvator (isn't that Luke Skywalker's father?) and ran for our lives. Okay, so it was more of a quick jog. Or brisk walk. Or a boisterous trot. Fine. We strolled on out to see how the rest of the campus was reacting to the big scare.

We know that Springs is the hub of social life at PC, so we headed up that way. As we passed Richardson, three professors tore out of the building with something that looked like a cross between a water heater and R2D2 and jammed it in the back of a big yellow pick-up truck. One of the professors bore a striking resemblance to Helen Hunt. Another one looked like Bill Paxton. They were followed by another team of professors, these fellows clad in all black. They too were hauling a water heater and dropped it in the back of a black pick-up truck. Both trucks squealed out of the parking lot, not to be seen again.

Josh and Leighton pack a bag of provisions and head for the depths of the Richardson Hall cellar. They spent 44 hours last week waiting for the phantom tornado.

As we ambled through Springs, we noticed a crowd of folks assembled in the canteen region. They seemed hesitant about leaving. Their expressions reflected perhaps a culinary angst. So we interviewed a couple of 'em.

Josh: "Hey. Watcha doin'?"

Student #1: "Waitin'."

Leighton: "You know there's one of them twisters headed this way, don't you? They say it could rip this campus to shreds, like a puppy with an old pair of shoes. Your life is not safe. You should probably take cover."

Student: "I know I am not safe. I'm still waiting on my lunch."

Leighton: "You know it's after dinner time, don't you?"

Student: "Sure. It happens all the time. I'm getting used to the wait. If I slam my head hard enough on one of these tables, I can knock myself out for a good hour or so. It really shortens the wait."

Josh: "Congratulations. Well, you take it easy. Throw some ice on that melon of yours."

As Leighton and Josh leave the canteen, an uproarious cheer is heard. A sloppy grilled cheese and some soggy fries are strewn across the counter. The students attack like a frothy, rabid pack of angry dogs. Josh and Leighton pick up the pace.

After leaving Springs, we made our way up to the Smith Administration Building (a.k.a. Fort Orr) to check on the administration situation. (Ha-ha. That rhymed. Not exactly spleen-shredding humor, but we try.) The building looked deserted, so we headed inside. No one in sight. Somehow or other we made our way down to the deeper recesses of Fort Orr (a.k.a. the basement). A glance behind a copy machine twice licked by the tongue of time revealed a passageway that took us to another passageway, and so on. All of a sudden we found ourselves blinded by an angelic light, and that was when we made The Discovery. Deep 'neath Clinton rests a stately pleasure-dome used by college officers in emergency situations which came to be known by us as EXCALIBUR!!! (a.k.a. The Boar's Nest).

Seems that back in the days of ol' William Plumer Jacobs (known by insiders as 'WuPluJac'), an elaborate fort was constructed underground, to shield the college administration from the Redcoats. The college was founded about 100 years after the American Revolution, but word didn't reach these parts until about ten years ago. We're still unsure how the Civil War came out. So anyway, we sat down in two of the dozen or so platinum thrones, and no sooner had we been seated than a scantily clad waitress offered us each a refreshing beverage (an icy mug of cool malt liquor). We were greeted warmly by the college officers, who had already decked themselves out in robes of silk and were toting swords and shields.

We yucked it up with Uncle Ken for four or five hours before we were each dealt a blow to the head and returned to our dorm rooms. Those were some good hours though, as we were enlightened about some of the college's deepest, darkest secrets. For example, why PC doesn't have an architecture major, the real meaning of the words Blue Hose, and how the administration puts the 'board' in board meeting.

So there's our story of one fine PC misadventure.

World Wide Web pages bring the Internet home for PC

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

PC students have an opportunity many do not even know exists: as of last year, students have access to create their own home pages on the Internet.

"The facilities are available now," said Morris Galloway, dean of administrative services. "If you have an account at cs1 [the student computer server], you can have your own home page. We have that capability."

Students may choose to set up their own home page for academic or personal reasons. The pages may contain information at the student's discretion. However, guidelines do apply to material appropriate to PC's purpose and character. Having access to a home page in the "presby.edu" domain requires that students not use their publications for personal commercial gains and that they do not propagate illegal or offensive materials.

According to Galloway, the weakest link in the system is training students to create their own pages. Dr. Bill Yarbrough, a professor of computer science, started a class during the spring 1996 semester that gives students information concerning the use of World Wide Web capabilities.

Galloway anticipates more and more students will take the class of home page, and other students how to make their own page in the coming years.

Galloway sees the opportunity opening up and having many students take advantage of the privilege.

"I don't know that Web pages will become as popular as e-mail, but it's easy to underestimate this stuff. That's a guess. I do expect it to grow and grow rapidly," said Galloway.

He taught us about pages, and required us to do a few little things. Then I took it from there to design my own home page. I worked on it in June, and the product you see now was finished in August," Scott said.

Scott's home page brought him recognition in several ways. He won a home page award and was contracted to work professionally designing a home page for Enon Plantation, a hunting plantation whose site

Designing a page for yourself

Scott, MacLeod, and senior Joshua Petit will be leading a Saturday morning class later this fall for students interested in creating their own home pages. The student-led classes will begin later this month when dial-up Internet access is available.

There are additional means of learning to create World Wide Web pages. Spring semester will provide a course for students who want more depth in making their pages. Programs are also available in the Harrington-Peachtree and Richardson computer labs that can lead students through their own production. WebWeaver or Network Utilities folders can help interested students make their own pages.

"A competent student who wants to learn can almost teach themselves because the Web itself is a great deal of instruction," Yarbrough said.

"It's not hard to design a home page," said Scott. "It just takes a lot of work to get it to look the way you want it."

The Web as a marketing tool for PC

PC's home page links current and prospective students, alumni, staff and administration, and other institutions to the school. Now available on the site are a virtual tour, calendar, admissions information, course descriptions and a visitor's center.

The site also provides schedules for student life and athletics and a directory of addresses and statistics about faculty and students.

As technology improves, the PC site may offer a library card catalog, financial aid balances, and computer registration for classes. All of these services are ways for users to get a real sense of PC. It keeps current students in touch with campus happenings and encourages prospective students to seriously consider the school.

"Studies have shown over and over that if we can get people on campus, there is a much greater chance of getting them to attend," said Galloway. "The Web turns out to be a very good middleman."

"I think there is some student use on our Web site that we haven't tapped into yet. I don't think the students have either," said Vosburgh.

Vosburgh plans to implement the interactive calendar into all areas of PC life. In addition, he hopes to add historical and student activities tours as well as athletic rosters and schedules.

"The first phase was to get it up. What we're doing to do in this semester now is add more information and look into the feasible aspects to do that," he said.

PC on the Internet —

A continuing look at the Internet and PC

Web pages: "Pages" on the World Wide Web that are designed for visitors to "browse." Web pages may be accessed in computer labs or via modem. Individuals or organizations may design their own "home" page. PC's home page is reached at <http://www.presby.edu>.

Home pages as job opportunities

Grant Vosburgh, senior director of public relations, believes more students will develop their own home pages in the coming years.

"I think that a lot of students will go that route. I know some of the introduction to computer science classes are beginning to delve into authoring Web pages. Some faculty got some training in it this summer. I think students will begin to do it, maybe even just because they can," he said.

Currently it is unknown exactly how many PC students do have pages. During spring semester approximately 12 had pages, but that number likely has expanded. Yarbrough predicts as many as 200 students will have their own home pages by the end of this semester.

This is a rapidly growing phenomenon, he said. "I predict almost all students coming in now will probably have their own Web page before they graduate."

Junior John Scott is one student with his own home page. His page includes information about him, his fraternity, links to other sites, and a poem of the week. Scott specializes in custom graphics and photo manipulation. He created his page over the summer with the knowledge he gained from Yarbrough's class.

"I did figure out everything mostly on my own, but I got started with Dr. Yarbrough's introduction to computer sciences. He taught us about pages, and required us to do a few little things. Then I took it from there to design my own home page. I worked on it in June, and the product you see now was finished in August," Scott said.

Senior Chris MacLeod also won a home page award, and he now has a job on campus that involves his work on the computer.

"I am now working for the public relations department doing maintenance on the school's home page," said MacLeod. "I'm hoping I will be able to go into some kind of design after I graduate."

This type of opportunity is one of the greatest benefits of students having home pages, according to Vosburgh and Yarbrough.

"If they [prospective employers] are looking for the best and brightest, what better way than to look where an answering machine is operating 365 days a year?" said Vosburgh. "It may lead to future students finding their jobs through this. We're using it to market PC. I don't know why someone couldn't use it to market their own skills. I don't see why they can't use it as a type of 'want ad.'"

"For many, it is just going to be a pastime, a hobby," said Yarbrough. "Yet I can see ways it can be much more than a diversion. A student can tell a prospective graduate school or employer their Web page address, which will be the way for at least the next several years that a student can introduce themselves to a graduate school or employer," said Yarbrough.

Scarborough finds aid, happiness at PC

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

Entering her eighth year of employment at PC, Cindy Scarborough, the Associate Director of Financial Aid, still considers her job a rewarding one. After graduating from Clemson with majors in psychology and business, she worked in admissions at various colleges.

"With admissions experience, a transition to financial aid seemed natural," Scarborough said. The job requires her to talk with prospective students and parents who want to know how they can make college affordable.

Scarborough tells parents and students their options and which paperwork to complete by when. Many times the paperwork is sent back to parents for verification, and she helps them solve problems.

"Financial aid work is important because we're helping students find a way to pay for their college of first choice," said Scarborough.

Parents who have the attitude of "we'll do what it takes" are the kind she most enjoys working with. After graduation in May, a parent came up to Scarborough and said her son's birth and his graduation from PC with Scarborough's help were the happiest days of his life.

Scarborough likes the staff at PC, particularly her colleagues in the financial aid office who she describes as a "caring and dedicated" group.

"Cindy is a very easy person to work with and a pleasure to know," said Janice

Noffz, an administration assistant who has worked with Scarborough for six years.

"I enjoy working with the students while she works with their families and helps launch them on their way to success," said her husband Norman, an as-

60 x 2000 development program to encourage alumni giving

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

Presbyterian College has introduced a plan to reach 60% alumni participation in the college's financial development program by the year 2000, according to Bill Kinard, associate director of PC's annual fund.

The plan targets the 7,122 alumni of the college who are being asked to contribute to the fund through tax-deductible donations. Some of these donations will be designated gifts, but most will be unrestricted and will go toward student aid and faculty salaries.

"The key words to describe this effort are 'participate' and 'consistency,'" said Kinard. "Unfortunately, a lot of people have the misunderstanding that if they can't give a very large gift, their gift will be inconsequential. Nothing could be further from the truth."

While the overall amount raised is important — the college has set a goal of $1,050,000 — the primary purpose of 60 x 2000, the name of the new program, is to encourage each alumnus to give as much as he can.

"The most important thing is to participate. Each gift counts the same in a participation total. The challenge is to get everybody into a giving mode that is consistent and comfortable," said Kinard.

The plan is the brainchild of the PC

Evidence of alumni participation is also important to potential donors of major gifts. "Yes, 60% is a prestigious level to achieve, but what is more important is that when we go to major foundations for grants and large gifts, the first thing they ask is

If those 64% had repeated their gift then the combined participation for all alumni would have been 58%.

"If we can encourage consistency, we will be successful because 73% of our alumni have given at some time. That's 73% of our alumni showing us that they care. I think we'll go above 60% if we can convince alumni of the importance of consistency," said Kinard.

"I think we can obtain this goal because over 70% of our alumni have given at some time," said Butch Woodward, director of alumni affairs. "If we can get alumni to realize the importance of giving every year, we can reach that goal."

"Many alumni even work for companies that will match their gift dollar for dollar," said Woodward.

The difference between a good college and a great college is the support of its alumni," said Kenneth B. Orr, President of Presbyterian College.

The sad part is there are so many people who have been out of college for ten or twenty years who have never given to PC. An alumni director that is very sad for me today," said Woodward.

We want our alumni just to find a pattern that suits them and to continue it every year, said Kinard. The most important thing that recent alumni can do for PC is to make a gift.

Alumni Association's Board of Directors, a regionally elected group that discusses issues of recruiting, fundraising, and suggestions for the college. The Board published its first public announcement of the plan last year in a pamphlet that was distributed to all alumni. Richard Shirley, a 1966 graduate of PC, is the national chairman of the plan itself.

Reaching 60% alumni participation would put PC among the nation's top five colleges in that category. The percentage is important to publications such as U.S. News and World Report who use alumni participation as a leading factor in their ratings figures for top colleges.

what our alumni participation level is. They want to know if our own alumni are supporting us in a major way. If they are, that's often the impetus for [the foundation] to do something for the college," said Kinard.

A large part of the marketing plan for 60 x 2000 is aimed at the 49.4% of the alumni base who graduated between 1980 and 1996.

"We are paying special attention to these classes because they comprise such a large percentage of our alumni," said Kinard. 64% of these alumni have given to the college since they graduated. Those who gave last year, however, totaled only

Lady Blue Hose to focus on consistency to finish season

by Ellison Manley

Few would argue with the idea that the most popular aspect of the game of volleyball is the hard driven spikes that leave opponents wondering what hit them.

And no one can argue that the Lady Blue Hose are not among the best around when it comes to that facet. In fact, the entire offensive attack of Presbyterian College is without a doubt the best in the conference.

As a team PC is at the top of the field in both hitting percentage (.282) and assists per game (11.59). Individually, three PC front line players are ranked in the top eight of the conference in hitting percentage. Senior Watoma Williams is second with .359, Beth Mann is sixth with .302, and Erin Olson is in seventh with .295. Williams is at the top of the conference for hits per game with 4.75 and Olson has 3.36 and stands in sixth place.

Junior setter Jenny Frieling is leading the conference for assists per game with 10.96 and Mann ranks third in the conference with .68 service aces per game.

All of these statistics would be meaningless, of course, if the Blue Hose were not putting them together for wins. Fortunately for the Blue Hose, these individual accomplishments have led the team to a very impressive 20-3 record.

The Blue Hose have the best overall record in the conference, but with two losses to conference opponents, they find themselves in second place. The most recent loss came to long-time powerhouse Elon College.

In a two and a half hour home match, the Blue Hose slipped 11-15 15-9 10-15 12-15. Inconsistency seemed to be the problem for PC as they watched a fourth game lead of 12-4 vanish.

On a better note, the Lady Blue Hose defeated several regionally ranked teams in a tournament at Armstrong State in late September. The tournament began with a disappointing loss to USC-Aiken, 14-16 8-15 10-15. PC had beaten USC-Aiken only a week before, and according to head coach Debbie Holcombe, the Blue Hose went into the game too lightly.

"We didn't play well. They were tired up to play us because we were ranked and because we had beaten them. They are a good team, however, they would not let that defeat them at all," Holcombe said.

The Blue Hose fought back to blow out the loss and defeat a ranked top 100 team, Rollins University, 16-10 16-10. The five game match (1-15 16-14 10-15 15-8 15-8) Holcombe credits as a very proud of PC's determination to the match.

This was the first match in which we played with intensity in all five games. The girls knew they would have to play well to win and they did it," Holcombe said.

The Rollins match sent PC on a six game win streak with victories over Armstrong State, Furkine, Newberry, Carson Newman, and Wingate.

Defensively, the Blue Hose continue to be led by junior Mary Kruse, with a .886 passing percentage, and freshman Stephanie Cloud, with 3.62 digs per game. Williams leads the team in blocks with a 1.3 per game average.

Five regular season conference games remain for PC and their chances are still high for coming out on top of the conference. Gardner Webb and Elon are currently tied for first place and PC plays each of these teams again.

"We have a good chance of winning the regular season," said Frieling. "We just need to regroup and play consistently. We certainly have the potential to beat both of the top teams."

Despite drop in rankings, women's soccer team remains determined

from staff reports

The PC women's soccer team dropped from 4th to 20th in the latest NCAA Division II rankings this week, but the drop in rankings was not an indication of the team's achievements and seven victories, one tie, and one loss on the road and at home within the last three weeks, team members said.

The Blue Hose travelled to Gardner-Webb University in Boiling Springs, N.C. on Sept. 28 and won the matchup 2-0. Wright scored one goal with an assist from Monroe, and Hardiman scored a goal unassisted.

The team met Catawba College on the Ponderosa on Oct. 2 and dealt the school a 2-0 defeat. Wright and Markham scored goals with respective assists from Jones and Roe.

The team stumbled into trouble on Oct. 5 when they met Elon College at Lenoir-Rhyne College 7-1 on Sept. 23.

Junior Brooke Wright scored a goal with assists from Lisa Becker and Susan Cook. Senior Elizabeth Roe scored three goals with assists from Rebecca Hardiman, Diane Hancock, Karen Markham, and Rebecca Monroe.

Hardiman scored a goal with an assist from Abby Vought, and Monroe tallied twice in the game.

The team hosted Wingate University on the Ponderosa on Sept. 25 and handed the North Carolina team a 9-0 defeat. Wright landed two goals with assists from Heather Jones, Renee Bevil and Cook. Roe tallied twice with assists from Heather Jones and Becker. Hardiman contributed one goal with an assist from Bevil, and Spangler tallied one goal with an assist from Elizabeth Taxel. The team came back from the frustrating match with Elon and met with Newberry College on The Ponderosa on Oct. 9 and dealt the Indians a 9-0 loss.

The team lost a frustrating battle 0-3 to Francis Marion University on Oct. 11.

Determined for a comeback, players handed Queens College a 3-0 loss on Oct. 15, with goals from Wright and Monroe. The final goal resulted from a deflection.

"Everyone got to play in the Queens game, which doesn't happen often. It brought us closer together as a team," said Sara Plank.

"We're not playing as a team, but as individuals. The team chemistry just hasn't been there so far this year," said Polson.

During the first week in October, PC traveled to Florida to play #2 Lynn University and Barry University. Although the Blue Hose fought hard, they fell behind 2-0 early in both contests.

"These teams weren't better than we are, we just got behind early and had to play catch up the whole game," said Polson.

Archival Newberry visited the Ponderosa on October 9 to do battle with PC. The Hose jumped out to a quick 3-0 lead on goals by Jimmy May, Bryan Ridgley, and Roddy Dismore. By halftime, most of the starters were able to rest while Polson substituted some of the younger players into the match. Brian Gault and John Kury scored second half goals to make the final score 5-0.

On October 1, the Blue Hose continued their extended road trip with a stop in Mars Hill. At the end of regulation, the scoreboard revealed that the Hose were headed for another overtime. PC's two goals were contributed by Clint Galloway and Jimmy May. During the extra period the teams exchanged goals and ultimately the score was a 3-3. Senior Dick Hiller chipped in the Hose's final score. All conference goals by Jeremy Ransom, who lasted for the duration of the match, tallied six saves.

On October 13, the Blue Hose played host to Lenoir Rhyne. PC wasted no time in mounting a lead by tallying three quick goals, two by Brian Ridgley and one goal by Brian Gault. The final score was 6-0.

"We have a tough road ahead with all of these conference games left. We need to win all of these games to get the #1 seed for the South Atlantic Conference tournament," said Polson.

Outstanding performers for the Hose thus far include Bryan Ridgley who leads the team in goals (8) and in total points (18) and goalkeeper Jeremy Ransom who has recorded two consecutive shutouts and a total of three on the season.

The Blue Hose have several important conference matches remaining, including a contest against the unbeaten Indians of Catawba College on October 27. PC's record currently stands at 8-3-3.

Blue Hose football tied for first in South Atlantic Conference 19-15 Homecoming Victory Propels Hose to Top of Conference

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

If an ESPN camera crew had been anywhere near Bailey Memorial Stadium last Saturday, PC might have gained national fame for its incredible victory over undefeated conference foe Catawba College just as she gained recognition for the little side-show which occurred last winter at the PC-Newberry basketball game.

This time, however, Blue Hose fans would have been beaming with pride as the Presbyterian men captured an exciting 19-15 win in front of a large homecoming crowd.

"It was definitely an exciting win," said former center and now assistant coach Chris McCarty. "It was the first game since we've won a game in a long time, and it was a real morale booster for the team."

The Hose's victory over Catawba was the first of a three-game winning streak for the Blue Hose. The team's record improved to 19-15, and they moved up to first place in the South Atlantic Conference.

favorite targets with four receptions for 110 yards, and senior Kevin Lindler accounted for another 59 yards of the total on five receptions.

While the outing was certainly one to be remembered in PC's history, it also brought disappointment as 2nd team All-SAC senior quarterback Randy Sullivan was injured on the first play of the game.

Smith certainly stepped in to meet the challenge, but the loss of Sullivan is significant, especially considering the fact that he had recently broken the record for the most total yards in a career which had previously been set in the 1960s.

The most recent diagnosis of Sullivan revealed that he had broken his collarbone and that he would miss the remainder of the season following surgery, which was scheduled for Wednesday, Oct. 16.

Although the Indians of Catawba notated more first downs (18, 131 yds.) and gained more yardage on the ground than the Blue Hose (13, 75 yds.) did, the final score served as testimony to the advantage that the Blue Hose enjoyed, and the victory.

Junior fullback Terrance Bryant tallied 11 yards on six carries, including a 10-yard run in the fourth quarter that helped the Hose to a 19-15 victory.

Other PC scores were added in the second and third quarters when the Hose recorded two field goals.

The fun of the 3-point gamblers was added by Thack who was successful on 26 yards out, junior Chris Kiser chipped in the other field goal to split the up-rights from 25 yards out.

Although the stats are not as highly publicized and appreciated by fans, the defensive unit of Presbyterian College deserves much of the credit for Saturday's victory.

Turnovers have plagued the Hose all year, but the Hose did an outstanding job of preventing the Indians from capitalizing on PC turnovers that were committed in the first half.

Based upon last week's performance and assuming that the Hose are able to continue to play well, the team is expected to finish the season with a winning record.

Cross country team completes impressive inaugural season

by Larianne Collins
Staff Writer

It would hardly require a stretch of the imagination to assert that one of the primary constants at Presbyterian College now is, ironically, change. The addition of a cross country team to the ranks of competitive sports is the first step in a larger plan of expansion that ultimately will include the addition of a softball team and more offices and locker rooms to the Templeton Center.

Although the cross country squad was only at club level this year, head the men but was unable to record a score since the Blue Hose did not have a sufficient number of male runners to enter the race officially.

In the second meet of the season which was held at Lander University on Sept. 14, the Blue Hose men finished in fifth place while the ladies captured third place. On Thursday, Sept. 19, the Presbyterian runners entered a competition at Wingate University, and another strong showing by the young Hose landed the women in third place and the men in second.

The final meet of the season was held at Mars Hill University on Sept. 28. The Blue Hose women placed 7th out of nine squads and the Blue Hose men captured 9th out of 11 entering teams.

"I've had a great time with this team. We had good chemistry and really did well."

---Alan Jenkins

coach Laura Timmons, who is a 1994 graduate of PC and is currently in her third year as an assistant coach for the women's basketball team, anticipates that cross country will become an NCAA sport for the Blue Hose next fall.

"If we do go varsity, we will definitely be able to compete," said Timmons.

The team has successfully completed all four of its scheduled meets. Beginning the season on Saturday, Sept. 7 at USC-Spartanburg, the Lady Hose placed third out of six. Top female runners Jennifer Hansel and Erin Smith finished ninth and tenth, respectively. Alan Jenkins placed eighth for

"It's been a lot of fun and very exciting," said senior Lori Hayes. "We won a plaque at the Wingate meet which, I think, shows that this program has lots of potential."

The season's team was composed of nine females and six males. The new faces in Blue Hose uniforms were as follows: Lori Hayes, Jennifer Skelton, Jill Webster, Jennifer Hansel, Christina Train, Heather Couch, Erin Smith, Mollie Gratz, Katie McGinley, Jay Shippen, Alan Jenkins, John Moorman, Eric Stribnick, Andrew Hardin, and Matthew Braswell.

"I've had a great time with this team. We had good chemistry and really did well," said senior Alan Jenkins.

Men's soccer ranked 6th in nation

by Jeff Walker
Staff Writer

The ascension of the Blue Hose men's soccer team up the National Soccer Coaches Association rankings to 6th in the nation has come as a surprise to many. Due to injuries and a lack of cohesiveness, the squad has posted only a mediocre record of 3-2-2 since the Presbyterian/Nike Challenge, but when added to their performance during the beginning of the season and the talent which still permeates the squad, there is no doubt that the honor is deserved.

"Since the tournament we've had such lackluster performances," said head coach

Ralph Polson. "We need to be winning conference games."

On September 25, PC traveled to Boiling Springs, North Carolina to battle Gardner Webb. The Blue Hose fit up the scoreboard first with a goal by David Dore which was set up by a pass from Todd Anderson, but Gardner Webb managed to notch a goal in the waning minutes of the match to extend play into overtime. The game ended with the score tied, 1-1.

The day after the frustrating trip to Gardner Webb, Presbyterian faced conference foe Carson Newman, and despite the fact that the squad's optimism had been plagued by injuries, the Hose managed to record a win by the score of 2-1.

The Last Word: An interview with HM Queen Matheson

by Leighton Hart and
Josh Lamkin

We, as esteemed colleagues of our selves on this our fine school rag, had the pleasure to interview Miss Blythe "Carbeurator" Matheson. In case you missed the festivities, or in case you enjoyed them too much to recall, she was crowned Homecoming Queen during the football game last Saturday. Our notes from the interview are a bit sketchy, so we will not be using her "exact" words. But please respect our journalistic right to embellish. Also, please donate to our legal defense fund so we can get off the hook for the libel suit with which we will be smacked when this hits the newsstands (a.k.a. top of trash can in the Springs' hallway). The interview took place late last Sunday evening, after Miss Matheson had spent many an hour in calm reflection upon the whirlwind excitement of the ceremony.

We were in our usual nocturnal places doing our usual nocturnal things (a.k.a. trying to write this horrible article). Leighton was decked out in his spandex Star Wars pajamas and Josh in his wrestling singlet from the 8th grade JV squad. We were lacking any immediate source of content for this space, so we decided to reach out and touch someone. That someone happened to be the lovely Miss Matheson. It took a good thirty minutes to decide who would make the call. Josh, being already bedecked in grappling garb, handily won the ensuing wrestling match, thus winning the privilege of making the call.

The conversation was light and pleasant. Blythe was peppy. Josh was nervous. He pulled questions from a pre-ordained list that Leighton had written only moments before. So with that in mind, remember that stupid questions often beget stupid answers. On to the interview.

Josh: Boxers or briefs?

Blythe: (Sorry, answer not suitable for print.)

Josh: Were you pretty excited to win Homecoming Queen?

Blythe: I was very excited to win. I didn't know that bribes and kick-backs could carry so much weight with the student body. And you know, it isn't a contest — it's just a bunch of pieces of paper and some of those short pencils from the Putt-Putt in Laurens.

Josh: This might be a little personal, but who is your favorite Sesame Street character?

Blythe: Probably Oscar, but I have a soft place in my heart for Grover.

Josh: Hey, what's the deal with Oscar and Grover? I mean, what kind of animals are they?

Blythe: Dogs?

Josh: Are you sure? I don't know too many dogs who live in trash cans and are grumpy all the time... then again, I haven't seen too many blue or green dogs... and of course there's the problem with them talking all the time.

Blythe: Yeah...

Josh: But you think they're dogs?

Blythe: I'm not sure about Oscar, but I think Grover has got some monkey in him.

Josh: Yeah, I can definitely see that...

(Long silence)

What do you think about Snuffy? Snuffy is so hairy. What's up with all that hair?

Blythe: I think there are definitely some personal hygiene issues that need to be addressed there, but I do think he's got some elk in 'em.

Josh: Yeah, I think there's probably some elk in the buffers around town, but that's a whole different article altogether.

(Long, awkward silence follows. Josh freaks out and hangs up the phone, shattering the receiver.)

Our most sincere congratulations to her for the victory Saturday. On to other topics for us.

All Break is only hours away. If you're like us, you'll be slaving here watching reruns of Arrowfall and drinking cheap store brand soft drinks to the point of illness. Here's hoping you can plan more creatively than the two of us. If not, here are a few ideas of good, clean ways to spend your four days of freedom.

Idea #1: Everyone loves the Amish. Try having an Amish weekend. Leave the car at school and grab the horse and buggy and head back home or wherever it is people go for Fall Break. In the mornings, rise early to get a head start on the chores. If anyone questions you about this, tell them, "Look, tough guy. The Amish are people too." Then run for your life.

Idea #2: Take a karaoke tour of some of the small towns surrounding Clinton. According to inside sources, there's a fantastic little karaoke bar on the right before reaching the lake as you drive to Greenwood. Refuse to sing anything but old Lionel Richie songs.

Idea #3: Even though PC will be shut down, that doesn't mean that the tattoo parlors shut their doors. Go nuts.

Well, this article should serve as delightful leisure reading on those flights home tonight. If not, the people in Adm'n and academic departments tell us the back page makes a delightfully soft toilet tissue. So enjoy.

Orr to retire in June; Trustees to begin presidential search by Alison Barnard and Leighton Hart

Orr

After 18 years of service to Presbyterian College, President Kenneth B. Orr this week made public his desire to resign his post. In a letter sent to faculty and trustees, Orr stated that his resignation will be effective June 30, 1997.

According to Orr, his decision to retire has been several years in the making.

"When I look at the juncture at which this institution stands, I see that this is the appropriate time," said Orr.

Orr stated that he wanted to oversee the completion of the self-study project before leaving. In December, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools will meet to reaccredit PC, marking the conclusion of the self-study process.

Having completed the self-study, college officials and trustees are now ready to design a new strategic plan for the school. The current plan will expire at the end of this year. Orr said he wants to avoid having too much influence on the formulation of the new strategic plan to allow his successor to mold the progress of the school in his own right.

"I don't want the new plan to be finalized by one CEO and handed down to another," he said.

Orr stated that most likely a new plan will be drafted and his successor will have ample input on the college's new objectives and direction.

Orr also cited his 63rd birthday as a factor in his decision to retire.

"I've always wanted to be able to retire in good health, when I'm still on top of my game," said Orr. "I didn't want to have to be carried out or pushed out."

Dr. Orr's tenure at PC has been longer than the average for his profession. Orr stated that The average president of a private school stays for eight years before moving on, he said. Orr's extended duration at PC indicates his commitment to the school and the personal investment he puts into the advancement of the institution.

The Board of Trustees will decide during its meeting this week whether to accept Orr's resignation. Orr took his case to the Board out of loyalty.

"I was hired by the Board of Trustees," said Orr. "I don't feel that I can unilaterally decide to retire without their approval."

The board will likely accept Orr's retirement request, at which time a search committee will be formed by the board of trustees. The job of the search committee will be to recruit and hire Orr's successor. According to Orr, the committee will be made up of trustees, administrators, faculty and students. Orr speculated that a new president would be selected by the time his retirement takes effect in June.

He pointed out that his decision to retire came under no pressure from any source inside the college or outside. The decision was made in close consultation with Dr. Frank Harrington, chairman of the board of trustees and long-time friend.

Orr's plans for the future are uncertain, but he intends to remain active. Immediately after he leaves PC, Orr has planned "a 90 to 120 day, personally-financed sabbatical" to his family home in Montreat, N.C., during which time he will read and relax.

After his brief sabbatical in the mountains, Orr imagines himself using the skills he honed in the corporate sector and at PC to start some sort of, "quasi-business enterprise," he said.

"I don't want another job that will require 60 to 70 hours a week like this one does...but I don't want to be idle either."

Orr does not intend to use his retirement from PC as a springboard to another job or occupation.

"I'm not on the corporate ladder, trying to find the next step," he said.

Orr also said that he would not enter the political scene.

"I've always had a love for politics, but I would not want to run for office or be in a political office," said Orr. "I might consider it if I were 40, but politics is for the young."

Although Clinton has been home for the Orr family for the last 18 years, the president has no intention of residing here after leaving in July. In addition to their home in Montreat, Orr and his wife also own a family home in Davidson, N.C. Their time will be divided between those two homes.

To Orr, retirement is bittersweet. He will now have the chance to pursue interests he's too busy to pursue presently, but that means he must leave behind the place where he has become an important part.

"We will miss PC," said Orr. "I would not have stayed 18 years if I had not loved it. But in a healthy way, we all need to move on to the next stage of life. That is what keeps life from getting stale. Part of the pleasure of life is to keep growing, and learning new interests and skills. It's fun to anticipate the new opportunities and adventures."

"I'm excited about retirement, but not about leaving PC," he said. "This is perhaps the best job anywhere."

Orr expects that the Board of Trustees will follow an established plan for naming a new successor to the presidency. Orr speculated that the Board would hire a national search firm, publish the opening in the Chronicle of Higher Education, and then begin to narrow the search.

Orr retirement correct decision at the correct time

There is no question that Dr. Kenneth B. Orr's presidency has drastically altered the face, spirit and image of Presbyterian College. Orr's announcement earlier this week that he intends to retire in June 1997 marks the beginning of what will be a sentimental reflection of a positive and productive relationship with this community that began over 17 years ago.

The 63 year-old's leadership has been essential to the progress of this college; our endowment has dramatically expanded, our facilities have become first-rate, we have hired more qualified faculty members than ever before and our admissions standards are at their highest in the history of the College.

Indeed, when the prospects for many small private colleges are, at best, mediocre, the outlook for PC is positive and stable, thanks in large part to Orr.

The College is approaching a turning point where the hard work led by Orr must be combined with a grounded vision for PC's future that contains fresh ideas and different perspectives. After almost 18 years in office, even an administration with a track record as stellar as Orr's will reach a certain unavoidable stagnation.

Orr's decision to leave is best for PC and reflects his genuine concern for the College and its continued growth. The College only can grow if Orr passes the baton to someone as qualified and vision-oriented as he was in 1979 and has been ever since.

Although he will be missed, his legacy of aggressive development and common sense administration will manifest itself in the manner our institution grows.

Look off campus for Orr's successor

The search for a successor to Orr should be limited to qualified candidates who are not currently associated with Presbyterian College.

While several qualified candidates exist who could fill Orr's job, including Dr. Bill Moncrief, senior vice president for academic affairs, Dr. Ted Brown, vice president for college advancement, and Dr. Frank Harrington, chairman of the College's Board of Trustees, it would be futile to hire from within.

The College needs and deserves a president who will bring a fresh perspective and independent governing style.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

•Election '96

Dole would provide economic boost to nation

As November 5 approaches, I wanted to share with the faculty, staff, and students of PC why they should vote for Bob Dole and Jack Kemp to become the next president and vice president who will lead our great nation forward into the next century.

The centerpiece of the Dole/Kemp vision for the future is to help the most basic and important unit of our great country---the family. President Clinton's own Commerce Department tells us that American families are paying higher taxes than ever before--Bob Dole will change all of that. Never before has a president waged such a vengeful and destructive attack on the family. President Dole will bring us a 15% tax cut, a $500 per child tax credit, a balanced budget, and an increase in take home pay.

All our families, yours and mine, can use tax relief. The failed, liberal economic policies of the Clinton administration have brought us nothing but stagnant wages and families that must have both spouses working--one to pay taxes, and one to put food on the table. Never forget, President Clinton promised us a middle class tax cut in the 1992 election--and as with most promises from Mr. Clinton, it never happened.

Don't let the Democrats continue their negative scare campaign by telling you a President Dole would blow a hole in the deficit. The 104th Congress delivered a $250 billion tax cut combined with a balanced budget. It's a simple fact in black and white. It was President Clinton who vetoed it.

Further, don't forget President Clinton's planned hostile takeover of 1/7 of the American economy with a government seizure of the health care industry. Again, we have Bob Dole to thank for the blocking of what would have amounted to an invasion of socialism on our free-enterprise economy.

In addition to a return to sound economic policies, the Dole vision includes restarting the war on drugs. Over the past four years, the Clinton administration has failed miserably by allowing the rate of usage of most drugs to increase dramatically and by cutting funding for the war on drugs tremendously. President Clinton did not even bother to appoint a drug czar until one year before his election. As always, Mr. Clinton, the consummate politician, realized he was vulnerable and should get his act together.

I urge you to cast your vote for men of character, honor, integrity, and trust--Bob Dole and Jack Kemp. It's time to end the attack on the American family by the liberal Clinton administration. It's time for a better man for a better America.

Misconduct in CEPs provides poor reflection upon institution

As an extension of our liberal arts education, PC's Cultural Enrichment Program is designed to make us all more well-rounded and to expose us to events that we may not attend otherwise.

I realize that we all get tired of going to 11:00 convocations and taking time out of our busy schedules to attend occasional evening performances, but it really is for our own personal growth. We also get to see many events for free for which world outside PC has to pay.

One problem that has occurred at several events this year has been disruptiveness by PC students. We are all considered to be adults, and therefore, we should all behave like adults, particularly when we are hosting guests on our campus.

We the students represent Presbyterian College and have a major influence on the opinions that our guest speakers and performers hold of our institution. Hence, we have the duty of making a good impression. When these mishaps occur, it not only reflects poorly on the students involved, but it also discredits the upstanding reputation that PC strives to maintain. I would encourage you to treat all of our guests courteously and maintain proper decorum in CEPs.

Peer Connectors offer counseling, support

by Dan Hart
Staff Writer

If one were to describe PC in a single word, "supportive" might be the first word to come to one's mind. Nothing epitomizes the supportive atmosphere of PC better than the work of the Peer Connectors, an organization which provides students with the opportunity to discuss their per-exception to this principle, therefore, has been granted to Peer Connectors, provided they are clearly acting within their designated role.

Peer Connectors often encounter difficulty in separating their roles from the other leadership roles that they fill, since the communication skills that they acquire through participation in the group often become a natural part of who they are. This is due largely to the informal nature of the program.

Although the Peer Connectors operated a telephone hotline in the past, they now encourage students to disonal concerns or problems with sensitive fellow students.

Alison Bishop and Dr. Eric Johnson, associate professor of psychology, advise the Peer Connectors. According to Bishop, students actually assume much of the group's leadership.

Although PC has a team of professional counselors available to listen to the problems or concerns of students, the Peer Connectors offer students an alternative to traditional counseling.

"Peer Connectors may not be for everyone," said Bishop, "but they are there for those who don't want to speak to someone who is not a peer."

The Peer Connectors define themselves primarily as listeners. Rather than trying to force their opinions on students who need to talk about their concerns or problems, Peer Connectors seek to help people focus on what they themselves must decide to do.

"We don't want to tell people how to live their lives," said Johnson. "We're not in the advice-giving business, but we want to help people look within themselves for the tools that they need to find solutions to their problems."

In addition, the Peer Connectors sometimes sponsor lectures or workshops on campus. The Peer Connectors sponsored the Date Rape lecture last year and the Creative Dating and Alcohol Awareness workshops this year; they will also play a large role in the wellness fair in the spring. The organization hopes to become a resource for other groups on campus, such as fraternities or residence halls, that wish to discuss issues relating to wellness and emotional health.

Despite the numerous contributions which the Peer Connectors make to the campus, many students do not even realize that the organization exists.

"I don't think it has been well advertised," said Alan Workman. "I think we would be utilized if we were better advertised."

Since the Peer Connectors inevitably become familiar with the personal concerns of other students, members of the group are sworn to strict confidentiality concerning the privacy of others. In fact, Peer Connectors who fail to maintain confidentiality are considered guilty of violating the Honor Code.

The issue of confidentiality, however, is not always as clear as one might expect. According to the Honor Code of Presbyterian College, students who are aware that a fellow student has violated the Honor Code, but fail to report it, are themselves guilty of an Honor Code violation. An rectly call a Peer Connector with whom they would feel comfortable discussing their problems. Other changes to the organization effected in the past year have also made the Peer Connectors a much less structured program than it previously was.

"We don't have a hotline; we don't have a confession booth," said Johnson. "But we have students who take an hour out of their week to learn how to support other people on campus."

Composed of 17 select students with diverse interests, the Peer Connectors have several new members this year to replace students who either graduated last year or are studying abroad. In order to make the group approachable to the entire student body and representative of the entire campus, the selection of peer connections is based, in part, on the activities that each applicant is involved in.

New Peer Connectors applied last semester and were trained to deal with a number of issues which they may encounter, including eating disorders, alcohol abuse, and suicide. After a book signing ceremony similar to the Honor Code signing ceremony, new members were initiated as Peer Connectors last spring.

Johnson sees himself "primarily responsible for facilitating training—anything from providing feedback with students about issues that they encounter to contacting speakers and leading programs," he said.

Last year, the Peer Connectors focused on becoming familiar with the warning signs for depression and suicide, as well as becoming familiar with resources on campus which can provide immediate supervision of students who are facing potentially life-threatening problems. This year, Johnson hopes that a greater array of outside speakers (including faculty members not officially involved with the program and experts from the local community) will help the Peer Connectors to acquire more skills in counseling fellow students.

Every semester, the Peer Connectors go on two retreats to learn skills in listening and referring and to draw closer as a group. In addition, they meet every Thursday night in the basement of Douglas House.

"The stuff that I've learned through Peer Connectors," said Workman, "has helped me out in everyday conversation."

Judicial Council conducts two hearings

The Judicial Council conducted two hearings in October regarding Code of Conduct violations.

The Council met on Oct. 16 at 4:30 p.m. in Harrington-Peachtree 209 to consider a charge of improper conduct. The defendant pled guilty to the charge and called two character witnesses. The prosecution made a brief statement. The defendant did not take the stand.

The Council went into deliberation to determine an appropriate penalty, and voted 9-0 to sentence the student to 20 hours of community service and a formal apology to the individual(s) offended.

The Council met on Oct. 25 at 2:00 p.m. in Harrington-Peachtree 209 to consider another charge of improper conduct. The defendant pled not guilty and the prosecution presented its case. The defense did not call any witnesses and discussed mitigating circumstances. The defendant did not take the stand.

Council members went into deliberation and determined that the student was guilty of improper conduct. The Council determined the following penalty for the student: 15 hours of community service to be completed by spring break of 1997, mandatory attendance at four of the seven remaining CEPs of the semester, a letter of apology to the offended individuals to be approved by a faculty member and a discussion of proper CEP behavior with a faculty member. The Council decided to grant CEP credit for the event in question.

The defendant appealed the penalty imposed by the Council to the Faculty Appeals Board, which convened on Oct. 31 at 3:00 p.m. to consider the appeal. The Board denied the appeal.

Roberts finds pleasure in work on and off campus

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

In the world of private higher education, money is an important factor. Small colleges like PC can't survive merely on tuition dollars, and it is often necessary to rely on the benevolence of alumni and friends. Jan Roberts, PC's director of donor relations, seeks out the charity of those alumni and friends. In that capacity, Roberts has come to be a valuable part of the PC development staff.

"I think I'm very lucky to be at PC," said Roberts. "I've always appreciated that I can work here. It's never boring, always something to do better."

Appreciation is a theme of Roberts' view of PC. She appreciates her position here and works to make donors and PC's alumni contributors feel that the school and students truly value their gifts.

"Principally, it [the job] is stewardship," said Roberts. "It is how we express appreciation. First of all, it is how we care for donors."

Roberts has been at PC for 16 years. She is originally from W. Va., but her family moved here due to her husband's job transfer. She finished her degree at PC in 1983, after all four of her children were through with undergraduate education. She describes herself as a "nervous student" because the professors she had here were former colleagues, which made far a unique situation.

For eighteen months, Roberts worked as a reporter until an opening was available in PC's development office. She was waiting because she enjoyed previously working in development at Salem Academy and wanted to continue in the same field here.

"I wanted to stay in development," said Roberts. "I enjoyed that work. I was glad the college had an opening for me."

Roberts loves to look out her office window in the Development House and see the expansive view of campus. Her office view and her home's proximity to campus, give her the feeling of a connection to the school. She said she honestly enjoys hearing the cheers from the football games and the sounds of parties coming from fraternity court. It all combines for Roberts as an "extension of my backyard," she said.

Roberts feels it is very important for students to be involved in their education and respect those that have contributed to their ability to attend PC. Each fall, Roberts sends letters to donors concerning 507 scholarships. These letters include profiles of students who have benefited from the donor's gift to this institution. The letters make donors feel that their contribution is worthwhile, and the recipients become "real" to them. For the students, it makes them realize the significance of alumni contributions.

"I think it is so important for our students to understand who came before them, that they are just individuals in a long line of people," said Roberts.

In the spring, Roberts begins a similar process. She asks professors to write donors of their endowed chairs, fellowships, equipment, and other funds in regards to their appraisal of such gifts.

"Someone who gives once to PC, we thank them," said Roberts. "This way, we thank them at least once a year."

Besides being a form of thanksgiving, the letters serve in another capacity. Roberts sees the letters as a way to carry on memories by reminding donors of PC's appreciation. If someone makes a contribution in honor of a loved one, that loved one lives on in the life of PC.

"As a Christian, church-related institution, we are saying that we value someone a long time ago that they thought enough of this institution to make a gift," said Roberts.

Also, by getting students to write their supporters, it may spark an interest in them to donate their own money in their later years as alumni of this school. In this way, the tradition may live on.

Roberts also enjoys the companionship of her peers on the development office. Thirteen people presently work in the office, including those in Alumni Affairs, many of whom Roberts has worked with for 10 years.

"We are very much like a family — a family full of different interests, values and characteristics," said Roberts. "We all have the same objective, though: to support the fund-raising efforts of this college."

Roberts related an anecdote as proof of this connection between co-workers. While waiting for their flu shots, they were all joking and enjoying each others company as they always do when away from work, and a nurse in the infirmary remarked as to how happy they all seemed. For them, it is just a part of the job.

Roberts has another connection to the school. She and her husband "adopted" two PC students through their church, and that is an avenue where they can enjoy being involved in student life at PC.

"I have a church connection," said Roberts. "We are so proud to have that because it gives us an opportunity to know about their lives."

Development is not Roberts' only job. Each Thursday night she volunteers at the Good Shepherd Free Medical Clinic, which her husband helped to establish.

"When we're not working there, we're thinking about it," said Roberts.

Jackson finds time for academics, service to organizations

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

Senior LaFaye Jackson says she admires Martin Luther King, Jr. because "not only did he talk the talk, he walked the walk."

Jackson came to PC solely to follow in the footsteps of her older brother, but in her four years here she has walked her own walk, and in doing so has forged a path for other students to emulate.

"I like the small atmosphere of PC, the closeness and the way everyone knows everyone else. People here are like an extended family," said Jackson, who has called Woodville, Ga., home for her whole life.

Jackson, a biology major, chose to study in that field because of its good reputation at PC and because of the biology faculty.

"For the past four years, the biology department has been like a second family to me. I enjoy the people in that department," said Jackson. "My favorite professors in the biology department are Dr. Wetzel and Dr. Zimmerman. Dr. Zimmerman is my advisor. He has been great to me for my four years here. Dr. Wetzel is somebody who, if you have a problem, is there for you whether you are in his class or not."

"I don't have time for hobbies," said Jackson, but she does have time to participate in several extracurricular activities at PC. Jackson has been a Thornwell Big Sister through Student Volunteer Services in the past and has been a member of the Freshman Orientation Board every year since her sophomore year.

Currently she is involved in the new start. Our vision is to get MSU where people realize that it's for everybody and to enrich people about different cultures," said Jackson.

In the few months since Hill came to PC, she and Jackson have built a strong working relationship.

"I think Faye is a very concerned student because she takes the life of the organization to the positive influences of her close family.

"The people who most influenced my life are my father and mother and my aunt because of the way they raised me to think for myself. No matter what I did they were behind me, but if I was wrong, they told me I was wrong," said Jackson.

"The most important thing I have learned from PC is that just because a person is different on the outside doesn't mean they're different on the inside. I also learned to get along with all types," said Jackson.

While Jackson has been satisfied with her years at PC, she acknowledges that there is room for improvement.

"The minority enrollment here needs to be increased," said Jackson. "It's only four percent right now, and I think a good way to go about increasing it would be to provide more scholarships especially for minorities. I would like to see more minorities who are non-athletes."

Ten years from now, Jackson sees herself "paying off student loans and hopefully working in my field of choice," she said. After graduation she plans to go to graduate school and eventually work in a medical lab doing research. "But if a good job comes along now, I'm not going to turn it down," she said.

Careful of being too future-oriented, she shared her personal philosophy: "Just take one day at a time!"

"I think Faye is a very concerned student because she takes the life of the organization as her own life."

--Shelia Hill, director of multicultural affairs

Multicultural Student Union, Student Government Association, Judicial Council, and Student Fellowship Choir.

"Student Fellowship Choir is a chance for me to get together with friends, praise the Lord, and have a good time," said Jackson.

As president of the MSU, Jackson has spent much of this year working with Shelia Hill, PC's new director of Multicultural Affairs and Volunteer Services, on revamping PC's established multicultural program.

"We have a different vision for MSU this year. I'm going to help change something in MSU that will go on for years. I am part of a zation as her own life. The vision she has for MSU is a good vision. That's a very good sign of a student leader — to have a vision to leave something better when you leave," said Hill. "Faye is a fun-loving, easy-going person, and I've enjoyed working with her."

Jackson's appeal is felt all over campus. "Faye is my best friend," said Erika Wright, Jackson's roommate. "She sets forward a good foot with everybody. I think her dedication and hard work make her who she is. Faye accomplishes what she strives to accomplish."

Lady Blue Hose finish season with 27-7 record

by Ellison Manley
Staff Writer

For the tenth year in a row, the Lady Blue Hose volleyball team has surpassed the 25 win mark, finishing the regular season with a 27-7 overall record. Three more victories will put them at the 30-win mark for the sixth consecutive season.

Very few teams in the country can show such a consistently impressive win-loss percentage over such a long time span.

For the third time, senior Watoma Williams has been named first-team All South Atlantic Conference. This year, however, Williams was named Player of the Year for SAC.

And this year she also put herself in the record books, not only as the all-time leader at PC in kills, but also as the fourth ranked player in NCAA Division II for kills. With 2,141 kills, Williams has a chance to move further up the ranks this weekend at the SAC Tournament.

Junior Beth Mann was also named first-team All-SAC, marking her first time as an All-Conference selection. Mann tallied 339 kills this season and also led the team in service aces.

In addition, Mann was a consistent defensive player, ranking third on the team in digs with 343.

Erin Olson, a junior who played in 124 of the team's 130 games this season, was chosen as a second-team All-SAC player. This was the first such honor for Olson as she posted 450 kills and 145 blocks this season.

Despite having three all-conference selections, an amazing win-loss percentage, and undoubtedly the best offensive attack in the conference, the Lady Blue Hose find themselves ranked third in the conference at the close of the regular season. According to Coach Debbie Holcombe, this speaks loudly about the competitiveness of the South Atlantic Conference. It also says something, however, about the problems the team has faced in the midst of their triumphs.

"We are obviously the best hitting team in the conference and we have the ability to totally dominate offensively. But defensively, we don't dominate. It has been our serving and our serve reception that have been the problems all season," said Holcombe. "But when you look at the point spread in our games, less than 10 points separate us from being conference champs! This makes me very excited about our chances of coming out on top in the tournament this weekend," she said.

PC will face tournament host Carson-Newman in the first round. A victory would most likely match them against Gardner Webb in round 2. PC lost to Gardner Webb both times that the teams met during the regular season.

If things go their way, however, the Lady Blue Hose look forward to a rematch with regular season champion Elon College in the finals. PC has a tradition of playing well at the tournament, as they have won it four of the last five years.

Presbyterian ended the regular season at home Monday night with a loss to Francis Marion.

Francis Marion holds an impressive 25-1 record and their consistent defense caused the disappointing loss on Senior Night. Four members of the PC squad were honored Monday for their contributions over the last four years. Amanda Way (team manager), Amy Couch, Amy Lindell, and Williams compiled a very impressive record of 122-31 during their time as members of the outstanding Blue Hose volleyball team.

Blue Hose football team hands Wingate 26-23 victory

Presbyterian plagued by turnovers, falls to 3-3 in SAC

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

To an outsider, the life of a coach may seem glamorous and enviable.

After all, neckties and power suits are usually forbidden and freebies from sponsors can be numerous.

Certainly most coaches must love their chosen profession; what could be more exciting than pursuing that elusive yet attainable satisfaction of having a squad perform regularly to its maximum potential. However, the stress of the job cannot be overlooked.

Inconsistency is a coach's worst nightmare, and when a team becomes plagued by such an ailment, the emotional roller coaster ride begins.

To the dismay of Presbyterian head lead after senior quarterback Chris Smith connected with senior tight end Vick Vickery on a seven yard touchdown pass, Presbyterian's intensity had declined, and by halftime the Hose had already coughed up the pigskin five times.

One fumble and four interceptions could have spelled doom for Presbyterian. Fortunately, however, the Bulldogs were unable to capitalize on several opportunities and the score was only 6-12 at the midpoint of the contest.

"I thought we were in great shape only down 12-6 at the half, considering all that had happened. Our defense hung in there and kept them off the board on several occasions," said Perry.

Approximately three minutes into the third quarter, the Hose narrowed the gap to 9-12 when junior Chris Kinert split the tailback from 44 yards out.

Wingate answered, however, with a 12-play drive that covered 76 yards and culminated in a touchdown for the Bulldogs.

Down by ten points entering the final period, the Hose lit up the scoreboard again with 9:45 remaining in the contest. Smith

What upset? The only upset in our conference is when someone beats Carson-Newman. They [Wingate] are a very credible team...

--John Perry, head football coach coach John Perry and his staff, the Blue Hose have recently shown some of the symptoms of infection.

After posting a monumental victory (19-15) over SAC foe Catawba College during homecoming weekend and vaulting into a tie for first place in the conference, the Blue Hose squeaked by the fighting Christians of Elon College (27-23) on October 19 and then fell to last place SAC opponent Mars Hill College (24-29) on October 26.

In last week's action, the Blue Hose lined up against Wingate, another SAC adversary whose record stood at 3-4 overall, 1-3 in the conference prior to visiting Clinton on November 2.

As the last seconds ticked off the clock and the scoreboard revealed that the Bulldogs had been victorious by a score of 26-23, some reporters and fans described the outcome as an upset since the Hose (now 4-5 overall, 3-3 SAC) were favored in the contest; Coach Perry was quick to point out, however, that such a conclusion is not valid for a SAC matchup.

"What upset? The only upset in our conference is when somebody beats Carson-Newman. They [Wingate] are a very credible team. And the turnovers we had just gave them too much," said Perry. Turnovers were indeed the most revealing statistic of the ballgame.

Though the Hose had taken an early found sophomore wideout Ben Power, who notched four receptions for 103 yards during the outing, in the endzone under a 4' yard bomb.

Kinert converted the extra point and the Hose had pulled within three, 16-19, final drive by the Blue Hose ended in a 1 yard touchdown run by senior tailback Vasio Smith, who finished with 67 yards on 12 carries, and propelled the Hose to their first lead (23-19) since the beginning of the first quarter.

With approximately five minutes remaining in the game, Wingate regained possession and marched down the field for another touchdown to surpass the Blue Hose once again (26-23) and record their final margin of victory.

The Bulldogs' 12-play 65-yard drive was sparked by the precision of quarterback Carvie Kopley who finished the day 18-of-23 for 277 yards.

"We moved it [the ball] a little ourselves in the second half, and played ourselves back into the ballgame," said Perry. "But they had the drive. They came through and made the plays when they needed to."

The Hose are set to face conference opponent Gardner-Webb at home on November 9 and then will close the season against the neighboring Indians of Newberry College.

Womens' soccer team captures South Atlantic Conference title again

Team posts 15-3-1 overall record

by Jeff Walker
Staff Writer

The PC women's soccer team continued the tradition of winning and finished 15-3-1 overall and 9-0-1 in the South Atlantic Conference.

"Our primary goals this year were to win the regular season and the conference championship of the SAC. Our secondary goal was to receive a bid from the season at home with a convincing 7-0 victory over Anderson College. Brooke Wright scored two goals and Susan Cook, Rene Bevil, Lisa Becker, Diane Hancock and Abby Vought each scored once.

"It was a fantastic season, and we were looking forward to winning the SAC Tournament and possibly getting a bid to the NCAA Tournament," said Abby Vought.

Brooke Wright was named the South Atlantic Conference Player of the Week for her two goal performance against Anderson College. Wright also broke two records this year, most goals in a season (24) and most points in a season (50).

NCAA II Tournament," said head coach Brian Purcell.

On October 15-19, the Lady Hose traveled to Florida to play Lynn University and Barry University, two of the top ranked teams in the nation.

Against the number one team in the nation, Lynn University, PC lost 6-1. Lynn scored quickly and Presbyterian never had a chance to recover. Brooke Wright notched the lone goal for the Hose.

Barry University, ranked eleventh in the nation, defeated PC by a score of 2-0. Barry tallied both goals during an eight minute span in the first half.

"Despite injuries, we played well," said senior Susan Olimert. "We concentrated on the SAC Tournament and were able to bring the trophy home to PC."

The Lady Hose finished the regular tributed 10 goals and a total of 25 points this season, earned what Purcell dubbed "the triple crown," she was named the SAC Player of Year, First Union Year Scholar Athlete of the Year, and SAC Tournament Most Valuable Player.

"Overall the team played up to my expectations and I am very proud of them, since we had to battle the season with some tough injuries," said Coach Purcell.

PC earned the top seed at the Food Lion/South Atlantic Conference Tournament and ultimately became the first team to win back-to-back conference championships.

The Lady Hose defeated Lenior Rhyme in the first round 4-0 and then shutout Catawba 1-0 in the semifinals. Presbyterian defeated Elon 1-0 in the championship game and finished the season with a record tainted only by a tie with Elon.

The Last Word: A Fall Break visit to Graceland

by Leighton Hart and
Josh Lamkin

Okay, think back to the Friday of Fall Break. Everyone else from the illustrious College of Presbyterians has gone to do something cool for the extended weekend. Our respective families have long since disowned us due to this freakin' article business, so there's no chance of us showing up at home without meeting the cops there too. Josh is catching up on some lost needlework time. Leighton is filling out applications for employment in some of Greenville's finer venues of geriatric convalescence. If you haven't quite gotten the picture, we didn't have plans to do anything over Fall Break. We're just not "that cool."

Enter a svelte young German boy. To protect his identity, we'll call him Linck. Linck Schlich. Linck is without plans as well but is a very well known and widely respected figure in towns all over the Southeast. Plans, should he want them, are at his fingertips. Linck proposes at trip to Memphis, where he has a friend we can stay with (a.k.a. mooch off of). Linck conjures the trip quickly in that handsome Prussian cranium of his, and tells us that ValuJet can take us from Atlanta to Memphis for the bargain rate of $29 each way. Sure, Linck tempts us with the in-flight service. He tells us we could all have a healthy sip of a coke on the way. The answer: a resounding NO.

Linck, as you all may or may not know, is a very persuasive guy. After two hours under GDH heat lamps and intense badgering, Josh agreed to make the pilgrimage. Leighton with his stone-willed conscience, wanted to stay at PC. After 25 long seconds of coaxing, Leighton conceded to come aboard.

By the time this had all happened, we missed our chance to catch the evening ValuJet to Memphis. We decided that it would be in our best interest to drive to Atlanta, spend the night with Linck's nubile cousin, and catch perhaps two or three hours of sleep before risking our lives on the bargain airline.

The trip down to Atlanta was uneventful, except for a traffic jam on I-85 in Atlanta. We were flanked on all sides by Grand Cherokees, BMWs, Explorers and shiny Accords, all of which were bedecked with blue PC parking decals. We were unfortunate to be caught in the mad dash back to Buckhead, but we felt right at home.

When a plane leaves at 7:35 a.m. and bed time is 3 a.m., morning comes quickly. Picture this: three strangers to Atlanta trying to find the airport at 5 a.m. It just wasn't pretty. We make it in plenty of time to be thoroughly accosted by about every security guard at the Atlanta airport. In their defense, we have never had gentler or more friendly body cavity searches.

Sunday afternoon was a day that will live in infamy. In case you didn't know, Memphis was home to American icon and civic hero Fitz Spabernagen. Also, Elvis Aaron Presley lived there. Sunday was our tourist day. After a quick drive past "Spaberland" we joined the 20,000 other sequin-clad camera-toting tourists for a trip through Graceland, home of The King. Elvis was an interesting fellow. His taste in furniture was, well, neuveau riche to say the least (that means he had lots of money and spent it on anything brown or shag that he could find). We saw Elvis's living room, fully furnished with stained-glass peacocks. Surprisingly enough, this room was the only one that didn't have shag carpet. We made our way to what we like to call the green-shag hallway, which is a hallway tastefully decorated, top to bottom, with none other than green shag carpet.

Then, we made our way to the best room in the house: the rec room. The highlight of this room, other than white shag carpet and yellow leather furniture, was the handsomely crafted glass monkey which adorned Elvis's coffee table. O that funky monkey. The second best room in the house was the "jungle room." Apparently, Elvis took the monkey motif one step further by purchasing an entire set of wood-carved simians (a.k.a. monkeys) in the shape of couches, chairs, and yes, an ottoman. We are sure there were many other noteworthy items in Graceland, but to tell you the truth, the monkeys were kind of mesmerizing.

After our tour of The King's home, we headed directly across the street to the cheap souvenir shops, where we purchased various and sundry Elvis memorabilia. Then we haggled with the store owner about whether she or Linck loved Elvis more. A swift arm-wrestling match settled the whole affair, and Mrs. Elvistorowner was triumphant. The climax of our trip had already passed. The rest was cheesy plot resolution. Our goal was definitely to get Elvis shirts from a Graceland store. The actual tour of the home was secondary.

The flight home was beset on all sides by thunder and lightning. Inside the oh-so-safe and comically decorated plane, Leighton and Josh prayed for their lives while Linck slept like a baby, occasionally cooing for effect.

The moral of the story: never be afraid to take a spontaneous trip to the home of Elvis Presley with a handsome German named Linck.

Williamson announces resignation, move to Winthrop University

by Dan Hart
Assistant Editor

After 14 and a half years at Presbyterian College, dean of admissions Margaret Williamson announced her resignation effective January 3, 1997. Believing that it is time to make a professional move.

In January, Williamson will begin her new job as the dean of enrollment management at Winthrop University, her alma mater. As the director of admissions, financial aid, and the registrar's office at Winthrop, a university with 5,000 students, Williamson will have a great deal of administrative responsibilities in her new position and looks forward to meeting the challenge.

Although enrollment at PC has dropped over the past two years, Williamson denied that the administration pressured her in any way to resign. She also sought to dispel any rumors that her resignation is connected to the retirement of Dr. Ken Orr or the resignation of Coach John Perry.

"It's just a coincidental timing," she said.

Williamson referred to her resignation as "bittersweet" and said she feels mixed emotions about leaving PC.

"It's been fun to be here," said Williamson. "The institution has changed so much over the years and the people couldn't be better."

Williamson added that she will especially miss having close contact with the students at PC and promises to return occasionally in order to keep in touch with old friends and colleagues.

"Margaret will be greatly missed," said Eddie Rogers, an associate director of admissions. "Not only does she represent PC very well on a national level," he said, "but she is greatly respected. Winthrop is getting a great admissions professional, and I wish her the best."

"It's been a pleasure working with Margaret," added Ronnie McKnight, who is also an associate director of admissions. "She's consistently fair, she has high expectations for the office, she gives us a great deal of autonomy, and she always shares praise. Her style has helped our office become a close group of friends."

The search for the new dean of admissions is expected to begin sometime in the spring. Until a new dean is hired, McKnight and Rogers will serve as co-directors of admissions and are confident that they will be able to handle the responsibilities of the admissions office.

"I'm confident that Margaret has been a good teacher," said McKnight. "Until the college names a new dean, Eddie and I will be able to handle any emergencies, but I think the office will operate pretty smoothly on its own. We [the admissions staff] have more than 95 years of combined experience in the office, and it's an extremely talented and hard working group. We'll work together and get through the transition."

Williamson

M. McKnight also points out that those who work in the admissions office are not the ones that have to worry.

"Margaret's replacement has a real challenge," he said. "It will take an extraordinary person to replace Margaret Williamson."

Perry departs PC athletic program

by Gray Lesesne
Editor in Chief

Amid a swath of campus rumors, PC head football coach John Perry announced his resignation from that post in November.

"I appreciate the opportunity the Presbyterian College gave me to return to my alma mater and direct the football program," said Perry in a written statement issued by the college November 18.

"At this point, however, I believe it's in the best interest of all involved for me to step down and pursue other opportunities in or out of the coaching profession."

Perry's resignation came amidst rumors of sexual harassment, but college officials firmly deny any knowledge of formal allegations.

"That is just a rumor. His resignation was a resignation. I'm not in a position to give a comment on anything else," said Kenneth B. Orr, President of Presbyterian College.

Orr would not confirm that the administration pressured Perry to resign, citing the fact that personnel matters are confidential.

Other officials deny knowledge of allegations against Perry.

"I have not received any complaints to investigate," said Skip Zubrod, the college officer responsible for the handling of sexual harassment cases.

Allen Morris, PC's director of athletics, declined comment on the issue.

"Everything we wish to say is in the statement," said Morris.

"We certainly appreciate the effort and hard work that John Perry has given PC," Morris said in the official statement. "We wish nothing but the best for Coach Perry as he pursues new opportunities."

Perry held a six-year overall record at PC was 29-37, with an overall coaching record at 64-79.

Morris said that PC will conduct a nationwide search for a head football coach.

Thurmond saves PC ROTC unit from defense cuts

by Alison Barnard
Managing Editor

The PC Scottish Highlander Reserve Officer Training Program was removed from the U.S. Department of Defense's ROTC closure list last month, culminating more than six months of effort to save the 77-year-old ROTC program.

In May, college officials were informed by the Department of the Army that the PC ROTC program was on a list of 31 ROTC programs to be closed at the end of this academic year because of their low numbers of commissioned cadets. In November, after almost six months of negotiations with army officers and aides of U.S. Sen Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), college officials were informed that Presbyterian was removed from the ROTC program closure list.

Scottish Highlander Cadre attribute the persistence of PC President Dr. Kenneth B. Orr, Newberry College President Dr. Peter French, Lander University President Dr. William C. Moran, and the work of Thurmond and his staff.

"We knew that the Army had already made its decision and that our best option was the political route," said Lt. Col. Kirk K. Thomas, head of PC ROTC's unit.

"The political intervention of Sen. Thurmond was enormously helpful," said Thomas.

"Even though we are a small program, we were required to commission 15 cadets each year, which is the same goal that a large university such as USC has," he said. "Our required number to be commissioned is now ten and that is a much more reasonable number."

As the Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the most senior Senator in the Senate, Thurmond authored an addition to a defense appropriations bill that stipulated that Army officials must justify closure of ROTC units before the Senate Armed Services Committee. Thurmond also orchestrated the removal of the Scottish Highlander Battalion from the closure list.

Thomas said that only two schools, PC and Niagara University (N.Y.) were removed, leaving 29 programs on the current closure list with an 40 additional ROTC units scheduled to close this spring.

"We couldn't understand with all the cutbacks in the military why the Army kept giving us a number quota when this program was producing the high caliber officers that the Army wanted," said Kurt Hartley, Cadet Battalion Commander.

"We like to think that we produce quality, not quantity," said Hartley.

In addition to being removed from the U.S. Army's closure list, the 1996-1997 student commissioning class had all eight cadets placed in the duty and branch of their choice. Seven cadets requested and received active duty, one requested and received reserve duty. All eight cadets also received their top choice for their service branch: three will be in field artillery, two in the corps of engineers, one in ordnance, one in medical service and one in aviation.

"I think that our 100 percent success rate reflects the quality of the program as well as the quality of the cadets that we had this year," said Thomas. "I don't think that our achievement was just chance or luck."

"I've talked with other schools and many of their cadets did not get their first choices," said Hartley.

"This has been an encouragement to the other cadets and to everyone in the program. It's all been a combination of the cadre and everyone's hard work," Hartley said.

The Scottish Highlander Battalion has graduated 14 general officers, including one Medal of Honor Recipient. Currently, 100 PC graduates are serving in uniform.

POINT

Community apathy leads to quick disposal of charges against Perry

The college's handling of the resignation of head football coach John Perry leaves much to be desired in the public relations department.

Perry's resignation, clouded by numerous campus rumors of sexual harassment and fervent denials of any impropriety on the part of college officials, leaves the PC community without the true facts of the story.

Indeed, we here at the Blue Stocking were denied coverage of the story at every turn. Allen Morris, director of athletics, refused to discuss the allegations, only referring us to the statement the athletic department submitted to the media some four days after rumors of Perry's impending resignation circulated about campus.

Instead of addressing the issue head-on, and either affirming or denying its existence with credible evidence or an appropriate remedy, college officials have simply swept the issue under the rug.

And the issue of sexual harassment, particularly on a campus where approximately 50 percent of its student body consists of women, is never something to be ignored.

The College would do well to look to the example of the Army, whose efforts to either investigate or dispel sexual harassment rumors have at least represented a genuine effort. One would think the college might wish to use its public relations arm to challenge the rumors about Perry that linger around campus rather than allow them to continue.

Why has the administration won this battle? We find one reason: an apathetic community willing to turn its back on any uncomfortable issue rather than to confront it.

The general apathy among the student body on campus is inexcusable. Only one person filed for each of the six executive positions on SGA last March. That sort of indifference allows college officials to skirt issues and ignore the very students who provide the funds for their paychecks.

And the faculty is no better. Few faculty members, either for fear of turning upside down the status quo or for losing their jobs, will talk on the record about this issue.

The college campus is supposed to provide an ideal community that allows for a frank discussion of the issues that come before it; however, we apparently don't play by those rules on this campus. When college officials deem it a good idea to talk, we talk. When the administration plays dumb or says no, nobody talks.

Ready for Christmas? Bah humbug!

The holiday season is upon us, colored lights and Santa Claus adorn lawns, shoppers flock to shopping malls to make extravagant and expensive holiday purchases, and families congregate for dinners, reunions, and cocktail parties.

No wonder we've lost the meaning of the holidays! If the spirit of Christmas is drop-ins and gift giving rather than a time of religious worship and dedication, we cannot expect to find any meaning beyond the capitalism and the social butterfly cocktail parties that define our holiday season.

Why have we discontinued attendance traditional worship services at the local church in favor of a private Christmas dinner with our family? The answer lies in an overkill of the capitalist notion that the holidays are nothing more than a season of giving gifts.

Retailers depend upon the Christmas shopping season to make their yearly profits. Christmas gifts and displays adorn our shopping malls in October. Shoppers now taunt proudly that they have completed their Christmas shopping by the end of September. American children become indoctrinated from birth in the notion that the Christmas season exists for them to receive gifts. Indeed, little Johnny's parents wouldn't want to be the only ones on the block without a visit from Santa!

As much as we like to deny the fact, the hustle and bustle of the Christmas season is the rush to the malls, the Christmas music and "holiday cheer" are solely the propaganda of our capitalist culture to further the myths of the season and to lure the credit cards into the stores. Since when did a white Christmas have anything to do with the birth of Jesus Christ? Since when did a living room laden with new toys and appliances have anything to do with God's gifts of the Advent season?

Who is the grinch who stole Christmas? The grinch undoubtedly is our society's insatiable greed to have more of everything. We've turned the season of a miraculous birth of a Savior for Christians into a 24-hour shopping fest. We're in need of serious repair when Wal-Mart is open 24 hours a day and our time at the church is relegated to a 30-minute service of Christmas carols.

Gray Lesesne

Our reverence for the true religious gifts of the holiday season will return only when our society makes a commitment to give up the Christmas gifts in order to return to the fundamentals of the season: a time for religious reflection, a time for thanksgiving and celebration of the gifts of God, and, for Christians, a time to keep the commandment of Christ: to love (and thereby serve) our neighbors in need. Yes, keeping the true spirit of Christmas means that we must give up our Christmas gifts, give up our voracity and fraternity Christmas cocktail parties, give up our Christmas trees and multi-colored reindeer that adorn our front lawns.

We must force ourselves to turn away from the rooms of pop culture in order to embrace the religious foundation that is the holiday season. The money we funnel into Christmas gifts and decorations, given charitably to the poor, would provide more dollars for the needy than any government welfare program could ever dream of (imagine a liberal advocating a charitable program independent from government jurisdiction!).

I'll sit in my cozy living room on Christmas day and watch as my family members open box after box of underwear, after-shave jewelry and overcoats. My stomach will turn at the fact that all of this happens on the very birthday of a savior who associated himself more with the poor, the prostitutes and the ill rather than the shopping mall, the Amy Grant Christmas CD or Santa Claus.

Until our society can focus on the true meaning of the Christmas season, I say bah humbug!

President encourages involvement

Now that the fall semester is winding down, it's time to wrap up all of those final papers, projects, and tests. For many of you, exams are actually going to be a relief! It is also a good time to reflect on all the things you have accomplished so far this year and begin to consider what you would like to do next semester.

Three SGA members, Karin Miller, Laura Caudell, and Leighton Hart, will be studying abroad next semester. This is a great opportunity for them, but it's also a great opportunity for you to get involved with us. We will put out applications on Jan. 20 to fill a sophomore class representative position and a junior class representative position. If you are interested, your application will be reviewed by the Executive Council, and then you will be interviewed. Other activities you may want to become more involved in next spring are Student Volunteer Service, including the Special Olympics, which will take place on campus later next semester. There will also be many Student Union Board events which I'm sure you'll want to attend. Basketball, baseball, tennis and softball will be in full swing, so go support the Blue Hose!

I hope you all have a fun, relaxing and safe holiday and return in January ready for another exciting semester. Good luck on exams, and don't forget about the study breaks in GPHS Sunday through Wednesday nights from 11 p.m. to midnight each night. Merry Christmas and Happy New Year!

Smoak finds PC a comfortable home

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

With only one semester left until graduation, senior Daniel Smoak of Orangeburg, S.C., is well prepared for what lies ahead.

As a Christian Education major, PC has offered Smoak to decide your own beliefs not just memorize other people's, he said. "I've learned many things here that will prepare me for life."

The PC faculty has also meant a great deal to Smoak. He says the professors are people willing to spend time talking to him outside of class. "They want to impart their lives to me, not just their knowledge," said Smoak.

Dr. Dean Thompson of the English department has never had Smoak in a class, but their friendship has grown over the years.

Daniel Smoak shares a laugh with fellow senior Alyssa Kapustay in a familiar PC site, the Springs mail room.

promising relationships and rewarding experiences. Since his freshman year, he has been involved in Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Presbyterian Church USA Church Leadership Program, intramurals, and he has been an admissions sterling. Through the work-study program Smoak has been a receptionist at the front desk and has been able to meet "the real people who run the school." Recently, he has led worship services at the Presbyterian Home.

Smoak, in his second year as FCA president finds that "FCA gives me a place where I can feel at home more than anywhere else. I have been able to watch a spiritual group grow over the past four years which has in turn helped me grow."

Smoak says the relationships he has formed and the friendliness on the PC campus have been most important to him.

"I have been able to live with people and get to know them real well," he said. "It creates an openness that only college can give you. I've found a group of people committed to carrying out the commands of Christ and to living out the precepts of scripture."

Junior David Welchel is one individual that Smoak has had a close friendship over the past two years.

"Daniel Smoak is a testimony of the way a Christian should live on this campus," said Welchel. "He's always looking at things through a Christ-like perspective."

Smoak finds the classes at PC challenging, he says they stretch his mind. "The climate is one where you have

"Have you seen him eat," Thompson said. "Have you watched him sash his three year roommate, Barry Jenkins, about being a shrimp? Have you seen him look goggle-eyed at his sweetheart? Then you've seen someone who loves life and enjoys it to the hilt. But have you also seen Blondie lead worship services in the infirmary of the Presbyterian Home? Have you listened to him talk about the retreats he's planned for FCA? Have you sensed his excitement about heading toward the ministry? Then you've also seen someone who has a heart the size of Texas. He's a life-affirming combination. May his tribe increase."

Smoak is certain he is being called to vocational ministry, but his search for a seminary is now underway. He says that he is seeking God's calling for his future.

One definite plan for after graduation is his marriage to 1995 PC graduate Amy Morris. Morris teaches at Greenwood High School, and she and Smoak are very excited about June 14th, their wedding date. Smoak is thankful that God led him to PC and brought the two of them together.

Smoak lives by Psalm 46:10 "Be still and know that I am God."

"The most important thing in the life of a believer is to spend time silently seeking God," said Smoak. "Go to him and let him reveal all that he has in store for your abundant life."

Construction to begin on long-awaited senior village

by Alison Barnard
Managing Editor

Construction is set to begin within two weeks on the proposed senior village following the approval of the Board of Trustees' construction committee last week. The three buildings, fifteen unit $1.2 million dollar project will be contracted, designed and built by Clinton-based Templeton Construction under a 16 year lease-purchase agreement.

The contract negotiation phase of the project has taken longer than PC officials expected, said Skip Zubrod, vice president for finance. The college had projected in August that construction would be underway before the end of September.

"It just took time to get the contract worked out with both parties, and then we had to confer with the board construction committee," said Zubrod, vice president for finance.

The apartments will consist of two or three bedrooms and a kitchen. Rent, which will include water, sewer, basic cable and furnishings will be approximately $265 per month. The village will be considered off-campus housing, and officials plan to limit residency to those who are already eligible to live off campus. While college officials antici-

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council conducts four hearings

The Judicial Council conducted three Honor Code hearings in November. The Council met on Nov. 15 in the Harrington-Peachtree amphitheater at 2:00 p.m. to consider a charge of cheating, an Honor Code violation. The defendant pled not guilty to the charge. The prosecution called one witness, the professor of class in which the violation occurred. After questioning from the defense and members of the Council, the witness was excused. The defense called four witnesses, the first of whom was the defendant. Two of the defense witnesses provided character references for the individual. The prosecution and defense made closing statements and withdrew at 4:00 p.m. so the Council could deliberate the charge.

The Council deliberated and determined a guilty verdict. The defense was allowed to present mitigating circumstances, and all parties again withdrew so the Council could determine a penalty. The Council imposed the normal Honor Code penalty: suspension for the remainder of the current semester and one additional semester, withdrawals in all current courses, and a grade of "F" in the course of the violation. The defense was reminded of the right to appeal, and submitted an appeal on three grounds to the Appeals Board. The Appeals Board convened on Nov. 20 at 4:30 p.m. and denied all three appeals.

The Judicial Council met on Nov. 15 in the Harrington-Peachtree amphitheater at 5:15 p.m. to consider another charge of cheating, an Honor Code violation. The defendant pled not guilty to the charge. The prosecution called one witness, the professor of class in which the violation occurred. After questioning from the defense and members of the Council, the witness was excused. The defense called five witnesses, the first of whom was the defendant. Three of the defense witnesses provided character references for the individual. The prosecution and defense made closing statements and withdrew at 5:50 p.m. so the Council could deliberate the charge.

The Council deliberated and determined a verdict of not guilty. A verdict of not guilty is not subject to appeal, and the case was closed by the Chairman. With no further business, the Chairman dismissed the Council at 6:30 p.m.

The Judicial Council also met in reference to a charge of stealing, an Honor Code violation. The Council convened on Nov. 25 at 6 p.m. The defendant was notified of the evidence against him/her and agreed to accept the normal penalty of suspension for the current semester and the next semester. The defendant also agreed to sign a statement indicating he/she would not return to Presbyterian College. The Council deliberated and imposed the normal penalty, with an additional requirement that the student sign a statement agreeing never again to seek enrollment in Presbyterian College. Neither the prosecution nor the defense called witnesses in the hearing. With no further business, the Chairman dismissed the Council at 7 p.m.

pate filling the complex, their alternative plan is to lease the apartment to new faculty and townspeople should student demand not fill the complex.

The senior village will take first priority over other anticipated construction projects, Zubrod said. Bids for the addition to Templeton Athletic Center and construction of a new dormitory behind Barron and Grotnes Halls will be sent out on Jan. 10, 1997 and are due for the college's review on Feb. 18, 1997. The new dormitory will not be completed in time for the fall semester, Zubrod said.

SVS leaders start Girl Scout troop

Leaders, children provide service to the Clinton community

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

The girls in the Clinton area have a new opportunity thanks to some of PC's SVS volunteers. For the first time, PC students are coordinating local Girl Scout programs.

"I decided to get the Girl Scout Program started because there were a lot of kids in the Clinton area interested, but the leaders weren't there," said Susan Cannon, student coordinator. "I thought some people on campus would enjoy it, too."

Cannon and Lisa Printup work together with about 30 fourth and fifth graders at M.S. Bailey Elementary School. The children are responding well to the new organization.

"M.S. Bailey is primarily a low-income school, and the kids have never had this opportunity before," said Cannon. "They enjoy being together and having a different environment than they're used to."

Cannon says they take the troop on field trips and out for other activities.

"This spring I'll be taking my troop camping," said Cannon. "We go ice skating and to the zoo. Some activities are badge-related. Whatever they want to do, we'll do if we have the money."

Julie Olson and Kelly Tankersly are in charge of a Brownie troop. Their group is also at M.S. Bailey Elementary, with girls in second and third grades. Olson believes that the new troop has really helped the students develop better relationships with each other. The girls come from many different backgrounds, and Brownies can bring them together and give them a common interest.

"The best thing I've seen is that they [the girls] went to the same school, but they weren't really friends," said Olson. "They are friends now."

For the holidays, the troop plans to make cookies and Christmas ornaments to decorate the tree in the activity center at Thornwell School.

This program is a dual service opportunity because while PC students are doing a service to local children, those children are in turn serving their own community.

"It's the best service project for me," said Olson, "because it was something I did when I was little. Brownies and Girl Scouts have a lot of useful things that girls love."

The Girl Scout program is an outreach from the PC community to the children of Clinton. The students benefit, the children have an opportunity they never before had, and the community of Clinton benefits from this new organization.

"Girl Scouts is all about helping people," said Olson.

During this thirtieth year of the successful operation of Student Volunteer Services, it may be hard to believe that PC's largest student organization began with a vision and spirit.

In 1966, the vision of Dr. Jack Presseau, a new religion professor, was to help a small mill church in Laurens with its after-school program. The Laurens Child Outreach Program was born, shortly to be followed by Students Participating in Tutoring (SPIT).

"It just sort of took off," said Presseau. The program encouraged student involvement with the slogan, "Help Get SPIT off the Ground" and evolved into the present day Student Volunteer Services, which involves almost one third of the student body in thirty-four different programs. SVS serves five major areas: child outreach, Thornwell mentoring, elderly outreach, tutoring, and social services.

Presseau attributes part of the early success of SVS to the social atmosphere of the late 1960's.

"Students were willing to serve," said Presseau. "That was part of their protest — helping people. We picked up all kinds of altruistic students and put them to work. Then the programs just proliferated."

Presseau received a grant in 1972 from the Presbyterian boards of Christian Education and National Ministries to fund a full-time director of SVS for three years. PC called the Rev. Sidney T. Ayer Jr. to be the first director, and when the grant ran out, the chaplain's office took over the operation of SVS.

PC's chaplains generally held temporary positions, and Presseau "between chaplains, I would pick [SVS] up and keep it going because I didn't want it floundering. The elevation of the office to a directorship reflected the growing importance of the program."

Presseau also cited the First Presbyterian Church of Laurens as a "sponsoring" which provided funds for the first SVS van in 1969. "That meant we could take a whole group places," Presseau said. "First Church in Laurens gave a very generous grant, and students did fund raising."

This year, SVS celebrates its thirtieth anniversary and the expansion of its ministry from that first van to the many areas of the Clinton/Laurens community which it now serves. Several activities such as a Parents' Weekend presentation and a faculty reception have been planned as part of the celebration. The SVS office has also designed a commemorative slide show.

Shelia Hill, Director of Multicultural Affairs and Volunteer Services, says that the idea for the celebration stemmed from the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration in 1991. The steering committee for that celebration included Hill as well as Brenda Castro and Laurie Casdell. SVS met and intern elected for 1996-97, respectively.

"We consulted with Dr. Presseau, Dean Nelson, and Gary Hervey on how to do the celebration," said Hill. "You can't really win Parents' Weekend. We were able to use Parents' Weekend as the kick-off event, and that worked well."

SVS plans to continue to celebrate the celebration through various activities which will host from the Student and Special Olympics.

"We're looking at a January or February weekend for Into the Storm," said Hill of the day that of divide and entire to community service and providing students with one-time opportunities to serve. One goal will be to increase the effective number of student volunteers for Special Olympics, she said.

"The one thing I hate we didn't do," said Hill, "was to have an SVS reunion during homecoming. We'll keep that in mind for the next celebration in 2001."

Both Hill and Presseau mentioned the success of SVS in unifying "town and gown."

"When SVS got launched, there were so many students doing so many good things that the community was able to see the other side of the college student," said

Presseau.

Hill noted that with its 34 programs, SVS is the largest organization on campus and a key component to achieving the college's mission in Clinton.

The efforts of the college and the Laurens community have kept this organization going for 30 years. "We want that to be a positive impression. We are all working together to do good in our community," she said.

While celebrating 30 years of the number of students who volunteer through SVS, Hill believes there is always room for improvement. "About 80 to 90 percent of students participate," said Hill. "I would like a blessing in a postcard, but I all ways have more. I would like to see our numbers approach 100 percent. I think that's a realistic goal."

Besides an extremely opportunistic environment and the "quantum leap" in the form of Laurens First Presbyterian Church, Presseau said that SVS has continued to grow because each generation of students requires the next generation.

Students may go into service for a variety of reasons, but it still changes them," said Presseau. "I'm an optimistic Calvinist. I don't believe our motives are entirely pure, but the important thing is that we get the job done. That's what it means to be human. Jesus said, 'Who are my children?' In as much as you've done it to these, you've done it to me."

Men's soccer team completes challenging season

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

The PC men's soccer team finished up the season strong by being co-champs of the SAC in the regular season and winning the South Atlantic Conference Tournament. PC finished with a ranking of 19th in the nation and a 15-4-3 overall record.

"I was happy with what we accomplished this year but disappointed that we didn't get a bid to the National Tournament like we did last year," said Head Coach Ralph Polson.

PC played three games in the SAC tournament and out scored their oppo-

Anderson scored twice.

The final placed PC against Catawba. PC shared the regular season championship with Catawba. Earlier this season PC defeated Catawba 3-1. PC shutout Catawba this time 2-0. Drew Stephen and Ridgley each scored once.

"This was a great way to end my career here at PC," "I feel good at all that I have accomplished here," said Dick Hiller.

"I am sad to see this senior class leave," "They had an overall 55-19-7 record, 3 SAC Championships and 1 NCAA Bid," said Polson.

Ridgley was named tournament MVP and also to the All-Tournament Team. Jimmy May, Jeremy Ransom, Todd Anderson, and Dick Hiller also were named to the team.

Blue Hose men's basketball comes up short, but shows impressive potential

Next home game set for Jan. 4, 1997

by Windham Pridgen
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose men's basketball team took the floor on Dec. 2 in front of a near capacity crowd in the Templeton Center to face a 2-2 Erskine College Flying Fleet (now we know that PC has the second most unusual nickname in the NCAA) team in a heated rivalry that dates back to 1969.

Both teams were looking to take a 32-31 lead in the series score.

The Hose were trying to rebound from a tough 85-82 loss to Pfeiffer College in the championship game of the UNF/Sea Turtle Shootout in Jacksonville, FL on Nov. 29 and 30.

Eric Burrow led the team with 19 points and seven boards in the losing effort.

The Flying Fleet came to town riding the coattails of a 71-65 victory over Lees-McRae college on Nov. 23.

Coach Gregg Nibert's squad, the pre-season favorite to win the South Atlantic Conference, is returning last season's starting five players as well as six other returning lettermen.

Leading the charge for the Blue Hose this year are pre-season All-SAC nominees Andre Newman and Ronnie Cannon.

Newman and Cannon bring a combined 25.6 points per game to the floor and valuable senior leadership to the young yet experienced Blue Hose team. Also back this year are junior point guard Patrick Johnson and fifth-year senior Brian Franklin, last year's team leaders in assists (3.2 apg) and field goal percentage (57.7%), respectively.

Burrow, a 6-10 sophomore from Bowersville, Ga., returns to be the big force in the middle. Burrow blocked 19 shots last year and pulled down 5.9 rebounds per game.

Erskine came out running against the Blue Hose breaking open an early first half lead. The Fleet broke a 3-3 tie with a long range three-pointer and never looked back.

The Hose, despite a 12 point first half performance by co-captain Newman, shot only 32% (8-25) from the floor in the opening half of play.

PC narrowed the margin to as low as 21-18 on a "Jordan-esque" turn-around jumper in the paint by Brian Franklin with 4:10 left in the half.

Nibert, needing just one more win to tie PC's all-time record of 128 wins held by Blue Hose legend Lonnie McMillan, took his squad into the locker room down 33-23.

The second half opened with Newman hitting a three-pointer followed by a steal by Patrick Johnson that lead directly to a converted 3-point play just 2.5 minutes in.

The two teams proceeded to battle each other on both sides of the floor. PC went on a 17-11 run over the next 7:16 pulling within four of the Flying Fleet with 10:16 left to play. Senior co-captain Kent Stollard brought the Hose within two as he nailed a pair of key free-throws with 4:20 remaining in the game.

However, Erskine pulled away for the final time as Fleet sophomore Mike Noble, a 6-7 leaper, capped the victory with an impressive reverse dunk with :21 seconds to play.

Newman led all scorers with 19 and Burrow grabbed eight boards (five offensive) to go along with three steals.

The Blue Hose travel to Anderson College for a battle with the mighty Trojans. The next home game for PC is on January 4, 1997 when they take on Lenoir-Rhyne College in their first conference game.

Women's tennis team ranked 9th in NCAA Division II preseason poll

by Jeff Walker
Staff Writer

The PC women's tennis team has come off a fantastic fall season. The team is currently ranked 9th in the latest NCAA Division II Preseason Poll.

This fall season the team completed in three tournaments. The Rolex in Spartanburg, the Georgia College Tournament, and the Augusta College Tournament.

"The team had a great season and I hope we can continue the momentum heading into the spring season," said freshman Alle Burriss.

The biggest of these tournaments was the Rolex in Spartanburg. This tournament has a big effect on individual rankings for both the East Region and National.

Christie Bolt upset a seeded player in the first round. Kimberly Hampton lost in the quarterfinals to the #2 seed 3-6, 6-3, 6-7. Dawn Dachelet won the consolation singles round. In doubles, Kimberly Hampton and Christie Bolt got to the finals, losing to the #1 seed 6-2, 6-2.

The team had a very good fall despite the small numbers. "I'm definitely looking forward to the spring season," said senior Christie Bolt.

In the Georgia College Tournament, Dana Davis lost in the finals of the consolation round. Kelli Kirkland won the consolation round in her flight.

PC's best showing was in the Augusta College Tournament. Christie Bolt, Martha Correll and Kelli Kirkland each won their singles flight. Kimberly Hampton lost in the finals of her singles flight.

In doubles, Kimberly Hampton and Christie Bolt, Martha Correll and Kelli Kirkland each won their own flights. Dana Davis and Dawn Dachelet lost in the final of their doubles flight.

"We are coming off a great fall season, but the spring season is going to be even tougher," said sophomore Kelli Kirkland.

A lot of the PC team are individually ranked among the east region and nationally. Hampton is ranked second in the east, 21st nationally. Dawn Dachelet is ranked 9th nationally, and 66th in the nation. Dana Davis is ranked 21st in the region.

In doubles rankings, Hampton and Bolt are ranked first in the region and 11th in the nation. Dachelet and Davis are ranked 7th in the region, and 40th in the nation.

"We've had a good fall, but we need to stay healthy for the spring season since we have a small team," said Head Coach Donna Arnold.

The Last Word: A farewell tribute to our dear Uncle Ken

by Leighton Hart and
Josh Lamkin

Okay kids. We here at The Last Word are a little burnt-out with the writing scene. In the place of our usual hilarious column, we will let you in on a little project we've been working on. Since Dr. Orr announced his resignation, we have been authoring a little note of thanks to him for his years of service to the school. Between bouts of uncontrollable sobbing and incontinence, this is what we have come up with. Let us know what you think.

Dear Uncle Ken:

As you and many others on campus know, we are pimps. There is no way you can be as pimpish as us. Pimpish, pimpish, pimpish. Leave the pimping to us. With us, there will be no shortage of pimping. We pimp to the left. We pimp to the right. Barbecue pimp, pimp burgers, pimp kabobs, pimp casserole, pimp on the barbie. One day we want to be pimpin' boat captains. You're in good hands with Pimpstate.

Okay, that was completely unnecessary and completely untrue, as we know all too well. We get a little intimidated by you sometimes, so that was just a chance for us to glorify ourselves before we engage you in discussion.

On a more serious note, we have many thanks to offer you. Many people do not know the virtual ruin you have pulled this school out of since you arrived in 1916. You got us through the Great Depression, McCarthyism, neo-McCarthyism, post-neo McCarthyism, and Milli Vanilli. Under your leadership, Springs Campus Center has been transformed from a crumbling, rat-infested fire trap into the gleaming brick monument to capitalism that we see today. Three cheers for the canteen! Hip-hip-hooray!

Under your tutelage, we have constructed a fantastic space-age dining hall, equipped with Jetson-esque peanut butter and jelly domes. We know you were the catalyst behind the creation of the corn nugget as well. Sunday lunch is the most splendid time of the week, and we are glad that you recognize the comfort that we feel in knowing that we will be served the EXACT SAME THING EVERY SUNDAY. And we would be remiss if we did not thank you for the re-run at Sunday dinner. Three cheers for Chinese P.A. Pork! Hip-hip-hooray! Okay, three more cheers for Me-he-co night! Hip-hip-hooray!

In addition, during your tenure several new dormitories have been built. Most of them haven't survived the tests of time and have subsequently burned down, but we're big fans of Doyle Hall. Keep 'em coming.

Uncle Ken, we'd like to thank you for letting some of the things that we have done slide past the eyes of the administration. When we backed the SVS van into Spencer Hall, demolishing it completely, thanks for saying it was all part of a new construction plan and throwing up a new $5.2 million facility. Also, thanks for letting us put our three sculptures up around campus. You helped us pass a troublesome ceramics class. We apologize for the physical/mental state we were in whilst sculpting.

Remember the time we sought refuge in Fort Orr during the twister scare? Thanks for arranging the hot oil massages and cucumber mud masks. Our complexions haven't been the same since. And remember when Josh got caught by Clinton police running across campus clad only in snake-skin cowboy boots and a gunbelt? His parents appreciate your covering for him by saying that it was part of a new and still highly experimental "Art in Action" class. Also, thanks for taking care of Leighton when he was caught stacking trays of dishes and putting trays on pegs in GDH, even though the signs clearly read "Never on a peg, please. It is TERMINAL."

In short, Doc, thanks for looking out for us.

Thank you for your dedication to academic advancement. When you arrived during the Jazz Age, things were quite backward around here. So much has changed. You didn't waste time in eliminating some of the more frivolous of classes. We were happy to be rid of "Automobiles: Scapegoat of the 20th Century," "Beware of Television!," and "The Alternative Nautical Experience in History: the Colored Beard Pirates" as required curriculum. There was no hesitation when you slashed the budget of the Alchemy department.

Your retirement is fast approaching. We can picture you now, walking the sun-kissed beaches of Tahiti, supple skin bronzing in the summer's rays. We hope you enjoy the PC plaid Speedo we bought you. You will certainly have more time to spend at the race track, betting on your dogs. Now you won't have to constantly leave campus for those little "emergency meetings" in Greenville. We also hear it's a lot easier to run a "family business" from the safe confines of a foreign land.

So to wrap it up, it has been enjoyable. You have indeed left your mark on this campus. So has your dog. According to Blue Stocking calculations, your little canine friend has walked a total of 186,000 miles (the distance to the Sun and back). That's a lotta truckin' for those little furry feet. So while it may not mean much to you to get this little sentimental outpouring from two miniature college kids, please know that every time we bite into a beef litter or are apprehended by local authorities, our thoughts will be with you.

Love Always,

Leighton and Josh

Unprecedented excitement surrounds advent of new coach Former Tennessee quarterback Daryl Dickey to lead Blue Hose program

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

Anyone from the piedmont or lower segment of South Carolina can attest to the fact that winters are relatively uneventful in these parts; certainly, cold weather visits for a few months but typically no unusual precipitation falls from the clouds which linger in the drab sky.

Even the slightest hint of snow or sleet, however, can send the masses in hysteria; suburban crowd grocery store parking lots as shoppers race to secure enough food for months of survival.

The excitement which has filled the air at Presbyterian College during recent days has been even more intense than that which accompanies the prediction of snow.

Since Christmas and New Year's have passed and temperatures have been hovering in the high 40s, the only possible explanation of the strange mood was an unusual development.

Presbyterian College has recently been the bearer of great news, in a much anticipated announcement made approximately two weeks ago, the College declared that Daryl Dickey, Most Valuable Player of the 1986 Sugar Bowl and most recently the offensive coordinator and quarterback coach for Georgia Southern University, would guide the Blue Hose into the 1997 football season.

Dickey is by no means a stranger to athletics or, more specifically, to the gridiron; he was reared in a family which has played and continues to play an integral role ship roles and their strategies. Now I am as excited as I can be about being the leader of the Presbyterian College football program," said Dickey.

The reaction of the PC community has duty and I certainly recognize that I do not have all of the answers and I will not say that I do," said the new coach.

"I will say, however, that I am committed to the student athlete and trying to make their college experience the best that it can be... College football is not for everybody. It is a very demanding game and especially here at PC the demands are even greater because of the academic requirements. We have stressed and will continue to stress that academics comes before football... My job is to ensure that our players have every chance and every opportunity for success on and off of the field," said Dickey.

As far as strategy and goals for the upcoming season are concerned, Dickey's tough philosophy is unmaskable.

"We will run a pro-multiple offense. We will have a balanced attack, with an aggressive and attacking style of play. Offensively we must be balanced; I do not think that you can do one thing well and another poorly and win consistently. You have to maintain balance," Dickey said.

"Our goal is to compete for the SAC 8 conference championship and position ourselves in the Division II playoffs so that we can make a run at national championships... that will be our goal year in and year out. Notice, I did not say that we will win a national championship every year, what we want to do is put ourselves in the position to make a run at the championship."

With experience as his roadmap, enthusiasm as his fuel and integrity as his compass, Dickey will undoubtedly work to rekindle the fire of excitement that once surrounded Blue Hose football.

in the national sports arena. Prior to becoming the Director of Athletics at the University of Tennessee, which is the position that he now holds, Dickey's father Doug served as the head football coach for the Volunteers and then for the Gators at the University of Florida; overall, Doug Dickey spent 16 years in coaching and Daryl Dickey easily recognizes the impact that his father has made upon his life.

While developing his own style and approach to the game, Dickey has had the opportunity, or what he calls "the luxury," of working with some legendary coaches; the list includes Johnny Majors at the University of Tennessee, Bill Curry at the University of Kentucky and Bobby Bowden at Florida State University.

"I've been building toward the opportunity to be a head coach for most of my life. As a player, I kept my eye on the coaches to learn their methods of putting a program together and creating a game plan. Then, as an assistant coach, I kept my eye on the head coach to observe their leader-mirrored Dickey's excitement.

"I think that Coach Dickey is a very personable young man and that he has good experience that will allow him to be successful at PC," said Blue Hose football legend and former athletic director Cally Gault.

"We are excited about attracting to PC someone with the college coaching exposure that Daryl has," said Presbyterian Director of Athletics Allen Morris.

"We believe that he will be an excellent recruiter for Presbyterian College football, and he will relate well to players, as well as the alumni, the faculty and staff, the community here in Clinton and Laurens County, and all the Blue Hose fans," he said.

Though Dickey has been in his new post only two weeks, he has wasted no time in getting his feet wet.

"We had our first official meeting as a team on January 14th at 4:00 and I think that we got off to a tremendous start," Dickey said. "There are going to be some growing pains... there is no question about that because this is my first head coaching

Former professor sues college

LAURENS — Thirteenth Circuit Court Judge Charles V. Pyle, Jr. threw out former history professor Dennis Thomson's breach of contract and bad faith lawsuit against PC on Jan. 16 by granting the College's motion for summary judgement.

Attorneys for Thomson have not indicated whether they will appeal Pyle's decision.

Thomson's suit, which alleged that the College had failed to abide by the terms and provisions of the Faculty Handbook in the tenure-granting process, stemmed from the former assistant professor's denial of tenure in February 1996.

"The claim that he was entitled to apply for tenure just doesn't make sense," argued Greenville attorney Theodore Gentry, who defended PC in the suit. "PC can terminate probational professors without any reason."

PC issued Thomson a contract in March of 1995 indicating his $32,497 position for 1995-96 was his "final contract at Presbyterian College. There will not be a renewal for 1996-97."

Thomson's attorneys argued that he was entitled to apply for tenure after serving for six years as assistant professor, and that the College failed to act in good faith by not properly considering Thomson's tenure application.

POINT

Faculty and staff should be accountable to college Honor System

One of the primary reasons for the 1986 renewal of Presbyterian College's Honor System was to renew a sense of community bound together by mutual trust and a shared sense of common, decent values. And for 11 years, one part of the PC community has held up to its end of the bargain.

Students are paraded before the Judicial Council each August and are compelled to sign their lives away by pledging to uphold the Honor System in the great leather book of names. Students are charged with Honor violations, appear before the Council and are given an opportunity to clear their names of any impropriety. And students are obligated to enforce the System or else face a stiff penalty of a two semester suspension.

However, the System still faces one major pitfall: the faculty, staff, and administrators who also enforce the System are not bound to the System itself. Those who demand the truth from students are themselves free to mask the truth without consequence or penalty. This exemption creates an atmosphere of mistrust and unease that are uncharacteristic of a community bound together by mutual trust and shared values.

We believe that anyone (faculty, staff, or administrator) who holds a part-time, paid position or higher at Presbyterian College should be bound to the Presbyterian College Honor Code and should face similar consequences (i.e., suspension without pay) for the misrepresentation of the truth, for stealing, or for failing to uphold the PC Honor System. A process similar to the current student Judicial System could be easily implemented to ensure a fair trial among peers for those charged with violations.

Many faculty members and administrators will perhaps roll their eyes, citing more paperwork and bureaucracy to a system loaded with meetings and pencil pushers as reasons to overlook this proposal.

However, what is fair is fair. If students are expected to uphold and enforce a system of proper behavior, then it is only natural to expect the same from their community counterparts. If we all aren't bound to the same rules, then we aren't bound to any rule at all.

— SIDEWALK TALK

What is your impression of student activities on campus?

"I think that student life is extremely important to our school, both on weekends and on weekdays. Without organization sponsored events, this school would be nothing but a suitcase college."

Sandy Boyd, sophomore

"For some people, life at PC is a series of weekends marked by who was the drunkest, who was where, and who hooked up with whom...I suppose it could be called a life."

Micah McCracken, junior

"Student life is picking up a little bit. Different kinds of groups are sponsoring different kinds of activities on campus. However, I can tell that more people are going home or off campus on the weekends than my freshman year."

Matheson outlines SGA agenda

Welcome back! I hope you all had a nice, relaxing break and are ready to begin the spring semester. It is sure to be an exciting one, especially for all the seniors as we prepare for graduation.

I'd like to tell you about some of the SGA sponsored events that are coming up this semester. On Sunday, Jan. 26, there will be a Super Bowl party at Calhoun's. There will be free food and entertainment. Look for signs!

SGA will also be sponsoring an Open Forum sometime in the next few weeks. The forum will be for the purpose of allowing students to voice problems, concerns, and opinions on topics pertaining to PC. Keep an eye out for signs posted with the time and place. I want to encourage all students, especially underclassmen, to become more involved with SGA by attending meetings, talking with SGA members, or by participating in SGA sponsored events. I think this is important since elections for next year will be here before we know it. I hope you will seriously consider becoming a part of SGA. We are the students' voice to the administration and faculty on the issues that matter to you. Only with you can we accomplish the many goals and objectives that the student body has indicated are important to them.

Good luck with your spring classes!

Fall docket busy for College's Judicial Council

by Dan Hart
Assistant Editor

With a total of six cases heard by the Judicial Council last semester and still more cases pending this semester, Council Chairman Alan Workman said that the number of cases brought before the student judicial body last semester showed a definite increase from recent years.

Although he referred to the unusually high number of hearings as "very overwhelming," Workman was hesitant to ascribe the increase in cases to any particular factors. Believing that the situation may possibly be little more than a random divergence from the norm, Workman is waiting to see what pattern will develop next semester.

The unusually high number of Judicial Council hearings last semester, nevertheless, has led some students to consider ways in which the campus judicial system might be improved.

Senior Kurt Hartley, Commander of the Highlander ROTC Battalion at PC, suggests that the Honor Code be modeled after those at West Point, The Citadel, VMI and other prestigious military academies. A former student at The Citadel, Hartley has sat through judicial proceedings both at PC and at South Carolina's military college and considers proceedings at PC to be "too administration-controlled."

Specifically, Hartley would like to see two major changes made to the judicial system at PC. First, Hartley proposes that students be granted the right to a trial before twelve randomly picked peers (as cadets at The Citadel are permitted) and that the Honor Code be revised to allow for greater leniency. Hartley believes that a jury composed of randomly chosen individuals is less likely to be influenced by the administration.

In addition, Hartley suggests that Judicial Council hearings be open to the entire student body.

"Anyone who wants to sit in on proceedings ought to be allowed to do so," Hartley said. "Other schools will not restrict you."

Workman expressed some misgivings about Hartley's proposals. Although "very appreciative" of faculty involvement in judicial council hearings, Workman disagrees that the faculty have any major say on the outcome of hearings and pointed out that the student to faculty ratio on the Judicial Council is 1 to 2.

Workman maintains that there is an equal opportunity for all students to be on the Judicial Council.

"If a lot of students were interested in being on the Judicial Council, it might be necessary to have a jury of randomly picked students," said Workman. "But interest has not been big."

In addition, Workman stated that Judicial Council hearings are kept private in order to protect those involved and maintain the integrity of the proceedings.

Similarly, Joseph Nixon, dean of students, defended the closed-door policy of the Judicial Council on the grounds that the College is required to conform to the Privacy Act and that even family members of the accused are forbidden to attend the proceedings.

"I can see some advantage to [having open hearings]," said Nixon, "but it would be an invasion of a person's privacy. Student disciplinary records are private in nature."

Nixon also stated that PC's Honor Code is modeled after those at Davidson College and Washington and Lee, rather than after the honor codes at the military academies.

"The honor codes at Davidson and W&L," said Nixon, "were more in line for what we thought was proper for a liberal arts college."

Hartley is not alone, however, in his desire to improve the judicial system at PC. Jamie Moses, a PC graduate, expressed slightly different concerns. Moses, who graduated last December, fears that freshmen are unfamiliar with some of the finer points of the Honor Code when they pledge to abide by it.

According to Moses, students at military academies are given over twenty hours of training in the honor code of their institution before they promise to uphold it.

"[PC] does nothing to ensure that students know what they are signing," said Moses.

According to Workman, the majority of incidents brought before the Judicial Council last semester involved a lack of understanding about instructions for take home tests.

"But," Workman maintained, "it's your responsibility to get the information correct."

Dr. J. William Monerel, senior vice president for academic affairs, believes that students should understand what is expected of them even if their professors do not give explicit instructions.

"When you sign something," he insisted, "you should make sure you know what you sign."

Nevertheless, Monerel stated that an institution of higher education is not a legal system and that "it behooves the College to make every effort to make sure that the students understand [what is expected of them]."

The college's Faculty Honor Code committee, chaired by Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy, is scheduled to make its Honor Code revision proposals this spring. Better educating the student body about the Honor Code is a goal for this semester, according to Workman.

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council conducts three hearings

The Judicial Council conducted two hearings regarding an Honor Code violation on Dec. 11, 1996 in H-P 214. Three students were charged with cheating, but due to complications two hearings were ordered.

The student in the first hearing pled guilty to the charges. The Council implemented the normal penalty, suspension for the remainder of the semester and one additional semester and a grade of F in the class of the violation.

The students in the second hearing pled guilty to the charges. The Council also implemented the normal penalty.

All three students filed appeals to the sentence imposed and procedural errors. The Appeals Board denied appeal for procedural error, but upheld the appeal for the sentence imposed. The punishment was changed to a grade of F in the class where the violation occurred.

The Judicial Council also conducted a hearing on Tues. Jan. 21 in H-P 300. Two students were charged with cheating, an Honor Code violation. The accused pled not guilty. The Council found the students guilty and implemented a penalty of F on the assignment in question.

Chinese study abroad offered

PC students will again have the opportunity to study in China in the fall semester, according to Dr. Ron Burnside, professor of history. Students will earn sixteen hours of credit, ten of which will be in Chinese language. In addition to the language course, students will take two courses in English: China in Perspective, a survey course taught by Chinese scholars that is designed to increase the student's understanding of various aspects of Chinese culture, and Literatures of Social Transformation, taught by a faculty member from the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill.

In addition to course work, the program features a variety of activities and excursions in and around Beijing. Students will have the opportunity to attend theatrical performances, films, opera and festival celebrations; in addition, students will visit temples, the Great Wall, and the Ming Tombs.

The cost of the program is approximately $8440, and PC financial aid applies to the study abroad. This cost includes orientation, room, board, tuition, organized cultural excursions, textbooks, other educational materials, textbooks, visa fees and round trip airfare. The program will be competitive and student must submit applications by March 1. Students should have a minimum GPA of 2.8, demonstrated ability in foreign language study and serious interest in the study of Chinese culture.

Interested students should contact Burnside in Neville 301, and should attend an informational meeting on Jan. 30 in Neville 104.

CHAMPS brings enlightenment to promising 7th grade students

by Emily Benthall
Staff Writer

When Dr. Jermain Disasa, PC director of special projects, talks about his CHAMPS program, the excitement on his face is contagious. CHAMPS is an acronym for Communities Helping Assist and Motivate Promising Students, Disasa said. The program is an educational partnership among Presbyterian College, the Laurens County School District and the Laurens County Chamber of Commerce.

"The goal of CHAMPS is to motivate the CHAMPS child to continue their education to secondary school and further that education in college," said Disasa. "CHAMPS not only prepares students academically, but it also builds their social and character skills for life." CHAMPS students spend two weeks residing at PC living with PC student counselors during the summer. These weeks are packed with activities, games, and opportunities for learning the disciplined life.

CHAMPS students and their PC students spend times in followup activities throughout the year.

"The unique aspect of CHAMPS is that it isn't like camp, where you will never see these kids again. We follow up each month to touch base. It is so rewarding to see them grow and change," said Cathy Clasen, who is one of the CHAMPS mentors.

Children's teachers, guidance counselors, churches and parents are also involved.

"This involvement is the beauty of the program because it creates new possibilities and ideas for the growth of the CHAMPS student," said Disasa.

Students interested in becoming involved in the CHAMPS program should contact Disasa in the Chaplain's office at ext. 8377.

McKnight remains busy during spring application months

Ronnie McKnight is quite possibly the busiest person at PC right now. McKnight and his colleague, Eddie Rogers, are acting as interim co-directors of admissions to fill the vacancy left by Margaret Sandra Alexander, an administrative assistant in the admissions office, has worked with McKnight for over six years. "He has a good sense of humor and is very conscientious. I am happy to have him here," she said.

McKnight will be performing his duties as interim co-director of admissions for the next six months.

"No social life for me," McKnight joked with a grin. His weekends are booked with prospective students' names from College Board sources so PC can begin sending them mail. McKnight must choose these names based on a demographic outlook which is geared towards good students and diversity. He is also in charge of admissions office publications, budget, and internal affairs.

This is the first year that PC has had an early decision program, and McKnight is now busy with these applications. Beginning in February, he will serve on a committee to select a new Dean of Admissions. After the new Dean is in place, McKnight will return to his duties as Associate Director of Admissions.

"March and April are chaos," McKnight said. This is the time of year that high school seniors accept enrollment and juniors come for campus visits.

His favorite project is the annual Academic Scholarship Competition. He arranges two faculty interviews for each student. The field is then narrowed to about twenty students, and the final committee makes the decisions on academic awards. To reduce the work load of the professors, the admissions office determines many of the academic awards itself.

"We're trying to make it easier on the faculty," McKnight says.

College receives $1.3 million gift

Presbyterian College has received a $1.3 million gift from the estate of a former member of the college's Board of Trustees.

Dr. Virginia S. Hardie, a resident of Pendleton, S.C., who died Oct. 28, 1995, served for many years as director of the counseling center at Clemson University. After serving on the Presbyterian College Board of Visitors, she joined the PC Board of Trustees in 1968 and served on that governing board for 15 years.

In 1962 the Newton G. Hardie, Sr., Memorial Lecture Funds was established in memory of Newton G. Hardie, Sr. by his wife, Dr. Hardie, and his son, Newton G. Hardie Jr. of LaGrange, Ga., to bring outstanding lecturers to the PC campus.

This most recent gift will be added to the Newton G. Hardie Memorial Lecture Fund to assist in particular and projects.

"Virginia Hardie was a great friend of Presbyterian College and an excellent trustee," giving special leadership in the area of student affairs," said Dr. Kenneth B. Orr, president.

"By providing for this generous gift to Presbyterian College in her will, Orr said, "her influence and that of her husband will continue to have a positive impact on the quality of our educational program for years to come."

Bishop finds PC more than academics and grades

by Taryn Davison

With only three months left until the graduation of PC's class of 1997, senior Matt Bishop of Columbus, Georgia anxiously awaits the future.

Bishop, a political science major and a double minor in history and business administration, plans to attend graduate school at the University of Georgia for a master in public administration. His dream job is to be governor of Georgia after being a city manager and getting involved in politics.

While at PC, Bishop has been an active member of the student body by playing football his first two years, by serving as an FOB leader, and by being involved in the Order of Omega, the Student Alumni Council, and the President's Council.

"I have gotten a chance to work with the administration and to see how PC works on the business level. The administration hears our opinions as students, but our requests are not met all the time. For example, we need to upgrade our fitness center to not only benefit students already here, but also to help recruitment in the future," said Bishop, who currently Bishop has worked in Springs with Randy Randall and Brian Madden and is now the student supervisor of intramurals. He frequently referees games and tournaments.

"Matt's been fun to have in the office and has been a big help not only through intramural work, but also as a student government leader. He keeps us up to date on the student body," said Randall.

"Matt's worked for us about three years and we have changed some of the intramural sports with the student input he has given us," said Madden.

Looking back at the past three and a half years, Bishop finds his decision to attend PC was a rewarding choice.

"My father is a Presbyterian minister so that's how I became interested in PC. I got into the Davidson football program, but the people here were a lot more friendly in comparison," he said.

Decrease in nuclear waste dump funds lowers Tuition Grants for S.C. residents; PC students left with higher tuition bills

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

PC students who are South Carolina residents had a little surprise on their spring tuition bills—their South Carolina Tuition Grants failed to cover the costs once committed from the state government in the spring of 1996.

The state's General Assembly overestimated the amount of educational monies they were to receive from the Barnwell Nuclear Waste Dump, as a result, the Legislature was forced to cut funds from South Carolina's schools.

South Carolina Gov. David Beasley (R) allocated money from the Barnwell plant to go to both public and private education. For students enrolled in private schools, money from Barnwell increased state tuition grants.

The Independent Colleges and Universities of South Carolina (ICUSC) lobbies for money and funds to the 18 20 private schools in the state. Each S.C. private school receives a specific amount of money for the tuition grant based on their percentage of in-state students in attendance. As of spring of 1996, PC was granted $3,900, up from the 1995 total of $3,270. Even after the cuts, PC still has more than last year, with $3,588. Students here lost an average of $312.

"The thing we need to remember," said Judi Gillespie, director of financial aid, "there is the fact that in 1996-97, the total grants were up several million dollars for the state."

Approximately 380 PC students receive the grant, which is primarily need-based, but which requires that also meet standard academic requirements. Freshmen must meet the state average SAT score and be in the top 3/4 of their graduating class. In order to keep receiving the money, upperclassmen must take and pass at least 12 hours per semester. Eighty percent of PC South Carolina residents qualify financially to receive the grant. Students who qualify may get $200 or more, depending on their need.

Financial aid coordinators, as well as legislators, are aware that any decrease, no matter how small, may be very difficult for students to compensate.

"Even though we do appreciate that we got more money, it's hard to make new plans when we're losing $312 per student," said Gillespie.

This is only the second time in Gillespie's 15 years at PC that the grant has decreased mid-year. Several years it has even increased mid-year, she said. The total amount normally increases from year to year, she said.

"In general, in the years since the grant has started, it has increased each year by an average of three percent," said Gillespie.

Grant Vosburgh, senior director of public relations, said that the tuition grant program is really a benefit for all taxpayers in South Carolina.

"By having a tuition grant program, there is some incentive for students to go to the private school sector, and it reduces the burden on taxpayers," said Vosburgh.

Education lobbyists say the best way to keep tuition grant money coming to the schools is for students and parents to write their legislators and let them know how much the money has meant for them. These letters are most influential because they help put a real person behind the funds.

"In recent years the public relations departments of colleges have led a campaign to get students to write letters and take students to meet with legislators," said Gillespie.

"We had attempted to do two things," said Vosburgh. "First and foremost, we want to thank legislators for the tuition grant. The second part has been to continue some visibility for that program. As other business comes to the legislature, the tuition grant needs visibility in order not to be forgotten."

The South Carolina legislators are committed to not lowering the grant again, Gillespie said. "The state Tuition Grant Commission is holding off making next year's grant in order to be sure that this won't happen again because they know how difficult change is."

College officials say PC admission standards or numbers have not drastically changed. PC's 1996 freshman class was PC's freshman class scored average in their first semester grades, but an increased number of PC freshmen have been placed on academic probation because of their fall grades, according to Dr. William Moncriel, senior vice president for academic affairs.

The overall GPA of the freshmen class was 2.51, which represents no significant change from other freshmen classes in the past, according to Moncriel. Only 4.2% of the freshman grades were Fs, he said.

PC sophomores scored an average of 2.52 after their first semester in 1996, while PC juniors scored an average of 2.48 after their first semester grades in 1995, said Moncriel. Similar statistics were unavailable for PC's senior class.

A significant change in the freshmen class was the percentage of students put on academic probation—14.2%, which represents about 20 students. Of the sophomore class, 31 students were placed on academic probation, which represents approximately 11.5% of the class. 10.8% of juniors, representing 28 students, were also placed on probation.

Moncriel attributes the fact that more freshmen are on probation to the class' smaller overall size.

school GPA of 3.2 with a SAT score between 1050-1220. The average SAT score for the freshmen last year was 1150.

PC professors have different reactions to students' performances in the classroom. "Some students have no problems in college, but others do, and they have to accept responsibility for their learning," said Dr. Charles McKelvey, associate professor of philosophy. "There are no reasons why students aren't competing at their own level."

"It was hard but I think overworked this past semester," said freshman Katie Altzer.

"Freshmen in my biology class are on the same caliber level as other freshmen that I have taught the past few years. There has been no decrease in my biology class this past first semester," said Dr. Ron Zimmerman, assistant professor of biology.

Freshman found PC academically challenging during their first semester.

"I expected my first semester to be hard and I got involved with other activities and it overwhelmed me and the grades. I got first semester showed it," said freshman John Bollman.

Freshman Heather Pflug agrees. "High school did not prepare me for college," Pflug said.

"The beginning of the semester, I put more emphasis on my studies," said freshman Paul Potat. "As the semester went on, I started to slack off and this hurt me in the long run."

"One reason for the decline in applications last year was because the fall applications went out late," said McKnight. "This incoming freshmen class is very sharp and has a good selection of well-rounded students."

Blue Hose men beat Wingate: Team leads South Atlantic Conference

by Windham Bridgen
Staff Writer

The Presbyterian Blue Hose men's basketball team had everything in its favor entering the January 15 game against SAC rival Wingate University.

First of all, coach Gregg Nibert is PC's all time winningest coach with 132 victories. Second, the Hose were leading the SAC with an overall record of 10-4 and a conference record of 3-0. Third, Nibert's squad was in the middle of a three game winning streak. Finally, and perhaps most importantly, it was spirit night for Alpha Delta Pi sorority and Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity. The Hose had no excuses.

The Wingate Bulldogs came to Clinton with a 6-6 overall record and a conference record of 1-2, but the Hose need not look past this upset-minded team.

Unfortunately, the first half of play was typical of PC. There was little flare on offense and just plain in-your-face defense. The Hose did not play like a first place team would play. Shooting only 39.1% in the half, the Hose needed someone or something to get the 1,147 PC faithful on their feet.

Enter Byron Graham. With 4:43 left in the opening half, junior point guard Patrick Johnson lofted a perfect alley-oop to sophomore swingman Byron Graham. The crowd was chaotic as the rim shook from the two handed, tomahawk slam. It was quite "Jordan-esque," and the dunk brought PC within two, 18-20. Then, with just over three minutes remaining in the half, senior co-captain Ronnie Cannon sank two free throws to tie the game.

The Bulldogs jumped back in front, however, with a steal and layup from Brandon Harris making the score 24-22 at the half. From a glance at the first half stats, it would seem that the Hose were getting stomped on the court; they shot poorly from the floor and failed to make a single three-pointer on eight attempts.

What coach Nibert actually told his team at halftime is not known, but the results could not be overlooked.

The Hose scored the first eight points of the second half and finally looked like the best team in the SAC. PC was lead in the second half by senior co-captain Kent Stallard, who provided the offensive spark that propelled the Hose to victory.

In just eleven minutes of action, Stallard scored 12 points, grabbed two rebounds (both offensive), and blocked one shot. He also scored two of the team's four three-point baskets in the game.

The Hose secured their biggest lead of the game as sophomore Erik Rothwell hit two free throws and made the score 48-32. The left-hander finished the game with four points and two rebounds.

With just under three minutes remaining in regulation, Cannon scored a layup that put the game on ice for the Hose.

Overall, the Hose shot an impressive 53.5% (23-43) from the floor and 62.1% (18-29) from the charity stripe. PC advances to 11-4 overall while resting atop the SAC at 4-0 in conference play. The next home game for PC is January 22nd at 7:45 PM against Mars Hill.

There is no doubt that the PC Blue Hose men's basketball team will turn some heads this year in the SAC as well as Division II as a whole.

Blue Hose women edge Elon to end three game slip

Kelley's sixteen points propel Hose to victory over top-ranked foe

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

Almost as quickly as a two-liter soft drink can begin to lose its fizz, an athletic team can watch helplessly as its direction for the season changes drastically. While close games slip through their fingers, fans and players alike wonder if there is a cure. One of the few known remedies for "flatness" is to follow the steps prescribed for soft drink treatment, tighten the cap fully and hope for the best.

Eighth year head women's basketball Coach Beth Couture has undoubtedly been fighting that feeling of frustration which plagues every coach who is trying to recapture the excitement of the first games of a new season. After sprinting to a 7-0 opening mark, the Lady Hose seemed to run aground for a brief period as injuries began to dwindle the size of the squad.

After a particularly disappointing loss to conference rival Wingate University last Wednesday night, Couture decided to try the prescription for "flatness" prevention, she tightened the cap and ordered her team to report to Templeton at 5:30 AM for an early morning workout.

Years of experience have undoubtedly left Couture with a bag of effective tricks. Because, though neither she nor the team particularly enjoyed the early morning workout, the Lady Hose were successful in their next campaign. Last Saturday night, Presbyterian defeated top ranked conference foe Elon College, 62-61.

Teamwork was definitely the key. We came out ready to play and then we played together for the entire 40 minutes," said Couture.

After losing several key members of the squad, a lack of cohesiveness has plagued the Blue Hose. While their play has not been void of moments of brilliance, the Lady Hose will attest to the fact that maintaining intensity and producing a lead have been difficult.

The absence of sophomore point guard Heather Couch, who was lost for the season after sustaining a knee injury, working to return, and then suffering further injury, has complicated the game plan. Couch tallied an average of 5.4 assists per game and chipped in 12 hoops from the cheap seats last season; she underwent reconstructive surgery last Friday and will be listed as a medical redshirt this season.

The temporary loss of junior forward Deneal Barman also complicated matters and forced the Hose to make adjustments. Barman, a two year starter and one of PC's best rebounders is now listed on a day-to-day basis but hopes to return to the lineup within the week.

Freshman point guard Christina McRae is also listed on a day-to-day basis after falling prey to a knee injury, but at this time it seems that she should be able to return to play soon as well.

Although injuries have taken a toll on the Lady Hose this year, the squad remains abounding with talent, much of which is young. Three seniors do headline the present squad.

Ranking among the top performers in Presbyterian College history, senior guard Karen Neeley continues to amaze fans with her consistent play and versatile nature. In Saturday's contest against Elon, Neeley notched 13 points, 8 rebounds, 4 assists and 4 steals.

Center Watonia Williams also appears in a Blue Hose uniform for a final season. Like Neeley, Williams is listed in the Presbyterian rankings for number of blocked shots, rebounds and scoring. Thus far in the 1996-1997 campaign, Williams is averaging 5.4 rebounds per game and has rejected 14 shots.

Joining Neeley and Williams in serving as captains is senior forward/guard Ellison Manley. Though she was originally signed to play volleyball and did so for several years, Manley earned a spot on the basketball team her freshman year and has improved notably since that time. She now often starts for the Hose and is listed as one of the squad's most versatile members.

Junior Tonya Kelley, a post player from Greenwood, has displayed marked improvement this season as well. Now averaging 9.8 points per game and 5.6 rebounds per game, Kelley tallied 16 points in PC's victory over Elon.

Tonya Kelley looks very strong and lead us offensively," said Couture.

Junior guard Alice Ridgill and sophomores Darah Huffman and Anna Jones have also started several contests for the Hose. Ridgill, who is a strong defender, can also contribute from any position on the perimeter as can Huffman who is now averaging 7.6 points per outing. After recovering from reconstructive knee surgery last year, Jones has returned to the lineup and notched a career high 20 points against Erskine College.

Leading the Hose in accuracy from three point range is freshman Jill Neumann, thus far she has nailed 12 of 34 attempts and has contributed valuable minutes at the point guard slot.

Although the Lady Hose have been disappointed by several close games in recent weeks, they certainly have the tools to make a strong showing in the SAC this year, as evidenced by their 7-0 start and their most recent victory over Elon. Perhaps the key to maintaining that level of intensity is indeed a duplication of the flatness prevention method the Lady Hose used merely to tighten the cap and then hope for the best.

Tennis team 12th in east region

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

The PC men's tennis team enjoyed an impressive fall season. Overall, they finished 19-7 and qualified for the NCAA East Regionals.

"We accomplished a lot last year and the players this year understand our goals for the spring season," said head coach Bobby McKee.

PC returned everyone from last year except for David Kemp who was graduated. Juniors on the 1996-1997 squad include Tom Swift and Ronnie Setzer, and sophomores include Chuck Webb, Will Stewart, Travis Rentz, Zach Loftis, Todd Roemmich, and Preston Menning. Completing the squad are freshman Barron Gossett, Jeremy Carl and Amit Shahane.

"We are a young team but conference opponents kind of know what to expect this year since last year we had conference opponents guessing about how we were to play," said Coach McKee.

The Blue Hose participated in two invitational tournaments during the fall, the Rolex Challenge and their own PC Invitational. At the Rolex Challenge, Presbyterian College doubles teams Preston Menning/Zach Loftis and Will Stewart/Chuck Webb advanced to semifinal play.

At the tournament which was held here in Clinton, PC fared well. Tom Swift finished 1st, Preston Menning 2nd, Zach Loftis 3rd, and Chuck Webb 6th.

"With a great fall season we are ready for a tough spring season," said Zach Loftis.

"Competition is going to be tough, but we are going to do well this season," said Preston Menning.

PC is currently ranked twelfth in the East Region. The Blue Hose will face seven ranked teams in the East Region this spring, five of which will be present at the Bloomsburg Invitational in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania. Top-ranked Bloomsburg and fourth-ranked Millersville will headline the list of opponents.

In the individual standings, Tom Swift is ranked twenty-third in the East Region in singles, and the doubles duo of Preston Menning and Zach Loftis has shared the number five ranking in the East and the twenty-fourth spot nationally.

"This is going to be a tough season but the outlook is good because we are still a young team," said team captain Tom Swift.

PC's first home match is February 27th against USC-Spartanburg at 2:00 PM.

The Last Word: Greetings from anonymous Mayes resident

by Ernest Farkweller
Assuredly Interim Writer

Hello, I'm Ernest Farkweller. Now, I know what you're saying. Farkweller... yeah, I know that name. Just can't match the name with the face.

Well, that's okay. I transferred last year from a state institution. I won't tell you which one, but you can imagine it was pretty top notch with a 3:1 doctor-patient... I mean student ratio. I reside over in that homey Mayes cottage. You'd love what they've done with the place this year. Sure, it gets lonely being by myself sometimes, but the dozen or so little monkeys keep me company.

I'm told it's a privilege to play such an integral part in Dr. Orr's "self-study" project going on over there. Just following orders from the boss man. And also following the instructions of my therapist... umm... adviser, I'm told it would be healthy to write some positive thoughts for the month. So here it goes.

If you're anything like me, and we all know just how socially painful that can be, then you'll have to agree that the month of January may well be the most exciting 31 days out of the year. Day in and day out, the calendar swells with fun and excitement. The great month of January even includes a National Hugging Day. And I've always said, if you can make it to the 21st without getting hit with a lawsuit, go ahead and embrace that special someone you've been calling, breathing, and hanging up on at three in the morning.

New Year's Day, or posting bail day as it's called at my house, is always a great way to start off any month. Your day will likely be packed full so it's always a good idea to wake up early, call in the guard and make that one complementary phone call to Snake, or whoever your respective lawyer may be. During your average January, you're looking to get started around 8:00 A.M. This is assuming you were brought in on the run of the mill, indecent exposure or public intoxication.

However, if the words dog, goat or statue appear anywhere on the arrest report, you may be looking at a semester in a smelly, roach infested, cinderblock 8 by 10. (i.e. a Georgia Hall dorm room with bars). On the up side, you're looking at a lot better quality food.

Okay, so you've made your way back home and it's time to spend the afternoon on the phone. That's right, in addition to

New Year's, it's also "apology day." Now, it always helps if you have a bit of foresight and go ahead and write down the names of the people, especially the girls, that you'll be spending New Years Eve with the day before. This will speed up the phone calling process and ensure you say, "Sorry, I was way out of line with the tackle-me-Ernest thing," and "yeah, the macarena on the table was un-called for," to all the right people.

Coming back to PC to see all your good pals makes January so special. I've always said, there's nothing like getting pushed aside, punched in the kidney, or stepped on at Drop-Add by a true friend to welcome you back onto campus. And speaking of intestinal pain, there's nothing quite like a GDH January. Now, usually we take the fine food in Greenville Dining Hall for granted, and why shouldn't we? We're "spoiled" with the week old left over vegetables and meats. (i.e. the hot bar and "fritters"). Whatever dangers the FDA reports about week old food, seven times reheated, is surely exaggerated. But the beginning of January brings a real treat. Remember what you ate the Wednesday before your last exam? Here's a hint, what'dya eat this past Wednesday?

A PC January is also a special time for many seniors and the occasional junior. Now freshman and sophomores, you can skip ahead because you won't understand what we're talking about here. Though to let you in on a little secret, PC has these CEP dummies that you're allegedly supposed to have in order to graduate. But underclassman, don't get all stressed out and run go to three or four of these in your first couple of years. If you pace yourself just right, you should just be getting out of the single digits right around, that's right, January of your senior year.

But I won't kid you. January isn't all the glitz and glamour that it appears to be. A lot of Bryant Gumbel fans will be sadly removing their personally autographed poster from their bathroom door as our hero stepped down earlier this month. First Willard, then Dr. Orr, and now you.

With nothing better to do, we might have to actually start going to class at 8:00 A.M. And sad to say, when the January snow goes away and all those snowmen out on the quad melt, there are still going to be three very heinous looking ones that don't. One by Edmunds, one by the fountain, and one beside Harper. You get the picture. But don't let these little things get you down. Attend a few classes, have a terrific January and just go out and enjoy this ski (eet shooting) resort of a town we call Clinton.

Up or down? Confederate flag sparks on-campus debate

South Carolina voters may ultimately decide issue in 1998 referendum

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

Hated by some, held dear by others, the Confederate battle flag has for years been the center of a philosophical battle between those who desire to preserve it as a symbol of Southern heritage and those who desire to tear it down as a symbol of hatred and oppression.

Perhaps nowhere is the debate over the Confederate flag more heated than here in the South Carolina. Placed atop the South Carolina State House in Columbia for the 100th anniversary of the Civil War, the flag has flown over the Capitol since 1962. Now, Gov. David Beasley (R-Darlington Co.) desires to move the flag from atop the State House to a Confederate Memorial on the State House Grounds.

Many in South Carolina and throughout the Southeast are opposed however to Beasley's desire to move the Confederate flag, and the controversy finds its way to the halls, dorm rooms and lunch tables of PC students and faculty. The flag controversy was even discussed at a January Food For Thought program sponsored by the Chaplain's office.

The S.C. General Assembly recently passed an initiative that will allow for a referendum that will let state residents determine the fate of the flag. If the S.C. Senate agrees with the House, then residents will vote on the fate of the flag on the November 1998 ballot.

Legislative debate in Columbia remains distant to PC, which finds the Redneck Shop among its Laurens County neighbors.

On the PC campus, the Confederate flags fly in dorm rooms, outside dorm windows and at Fraternity Court; flags are also on the bumper stickers of cars and trucks in PC parking lots.

Like their South Carolinian counterparts, the PC community remains divided over the issue.

"If you move the flag to a Confederate Monument, then it will be vandalized; therefore, the meaning of the flag will be lessened," said Brandon Hilton.

"This flag is a symbol of the Civil War and it has nothing to do with racism," said sophomore Collin Lane.

Sophomore Jeffrey Howard agrees.

"I am for the Confederate flag because it symbolizes the pride of the Old South, which stands for honor and loyalty, not bigotry," he said.

"Usually people think the flag is racist because they think the Civil War was fought over slavery. The Civil War was fought over states' rights, so this means it is a part of everybody's history," said Jeff Williams.

"My ancestors fought under this flag and died under this flag," said Lance Buchanan. "It should not be taken down because it was a part of what they believed in."

Other PC students find themselves strongly opposed to the Confederate battle flag.

"This flag is strictly racist and it should come down," said Lee Hannan.

Lisa Brown agrees.

"The flag is a very negative sign because it is a constant reminder of oppression," she said.

"This flag has caused so much hurt and trouble that it needs to be moved," said Sammie Gary, a junior.

"The flag belongs in a museum, not on the State House. We don't need to live in the past," said John Moorman, a sophomore.

PC dining services has changed greatly since the days of the old Judd Dining Hall. Greenville Dining Hall has been in operation since 1965, and although it has made improvements and changes since its opening, there is an on-going search to make even more improvements to the food service.

"Food service has changed considerably over time, and it has changed here at PC," said Vernon Powell, PC's director of food services.

Student Government Association has a committee that is looking at the quality of cafeterias at similar schools in order to find new ways to incorporate quality service at PC. It was originally involved with people who work with the current food, trying to improve that. Now, another committee has already viewed Furman University and Columbia College in an effort to see how other schools are handling their food services and to create a more student-friendly atmosphere in GDH.

The committee is also planning a trip to Davidson College to view their facilities as well. Sophomore Mary Frances Patrick is the head of the committee. Patrick said things have taken off since last year because the committee received more support and encouragement from the administration.

"The beginning of last semester was when the administration made one of their goals to improve food service," said Patrick.

One obstacle is the lack of space in GDH. The 1965 design of the cafeteria makes it difficult to implement 1990's innovations. The infrastructure holds back a number of new things.

"We are really hemmed in," said

Powell. "We need more square feet."

New arrangements for the salad, deli and soup bars are currently being made.

"I've rearranged the salad and soup bars," said Powell. "The deli bar is getting a new set-up."

"We have more things coming—one or two things we may have seen elsewhere," said Powell. "The SGA committee has been helpful with giving us ideas."

In addition, self-service in the lines is also a possibility.

"With students serving themselves, the people behind the lines are instructed to give help where needed," said Powell.

The SGA committee is also looking at the quality of food delivery and how that can be improved. Todd Distributors of Laurens handles what is delivered to GDH, Powell said.

☐ please see GDH, p. 7

POINT

GDH improvements provide the right first steps

While PC awaits more drastic improvements in our food services as a result of the SGA food committee, the minor improvements at Greenville Dining Hall are greatly appreciated. The larger salad bar (with fruit and additional vegetables) and introduction of other foods such as stir-fry show a genuine concern for the repeated student requests of healthier, lighter foods. Students are now able to serve themselves in line, thereby eliminating the "elementary school" feel from the GDH line.

GDH director Vernon Powell and his staff have made the right first steps in repairing the GDH problem. However, minor improvements are no substitute for major problems, which GDH still faces.

We advise the College as well as the SGA food committee to consider seriously an outside food service provider. An independent provider could give students a plethora of options and even more of a self-service style atmosphere. We see the need for an independent food service provider to give students additional options such as a bread and cereal bar, oriental bar, fruit bar, a wider selection of meats and entrees (perhaps with lower cost) and to create a self-preparatory environment, which will give students more freedom in what and how they eat.

Bair, students exemplify PC spirit

You don't have to look very far on any given day to find PC students who are fulfilling their "while we live, we serve" motto, and last Friday was no exception. The bake sale sponsored by special education majors for a PC alumna whose home burned was downright heartwarming.

Both the students and their professor, Dr. Sheryl Bair, assistant professor of education, exemplify the PC spirit of service and self-sacrifice. We commend them for both their creativity and sensitivity in helping another PC family member in need.

Confederate flag stands for heritage, sacrifice

When I was asked to write about the Confederate flag, taking the pro perspective, I was a little skeptical. Not that I was afraid to state my beliefs on this issue, but rather I was afraid of the way people might misunderstand or misconstrue my reasonings. By no means am I claiming to be any type of expert on Southern history or the Civil War, however I have done some fairly extensive research on the subject of the Confederate battle flag.

The Confederate battle flag, or "Old Dixie" as it is sometimes referred, originated not as the first chosen flag of the Confederacy, "but as the practical battle emblem." The flag became the premiere flag of the Southern cause when Confederate general P.G.T. Beauregard and his troops could not decipher between the flag of the Union and their own flag. Therefore when the dust from the battlefield at the first Battle of Bull Run rose the Confederate troops did not know whether they were getting reinforcements or attacked by the enemy. The replacement flag was too much like a flag of surrender. Thus, the Confederate flag as we know it today was created.

So, what are my reasons for supporting the Confederate flag? Well, to me the flag stands for heritage and sacrifice. It is a tribute to those who fought for what they believed in and also for those who sacrificed their lives fighting for individual liberties. The Confederate flag is a symbol. No argument there. However, like all symbols, it can be misused. Thieves and other criminals can plant crosses, gang members can wear the letter "X", and some will misuse the Confederate flag. But, they do not respect the beauty that these things represent and they do not grasp the true meanings of these symbols. Whereas I do believe in what I see the flag to represent. I do not in any way, shape, form, or manner agree with or understand the connotations that embarrassments and societal diseases like the Ku Klux Klan, white supremacists, and the Redneck Shop associate with the flag. You must understand that the Confederacy created and shaped "Old Dixie" and the KKK adopted it, not the other way around. It scares me and saddens me to know that in our country today, young children, of every race, grow up to automatically associate the

Matheson outlines forum results

SGA held an Open Forum on Feb. 18 in Springs Campus Center. Among the discussed items were the visitation policy and GDH food improvements.

The current visitation policy, allows students to be in dormitories of the opposite sex from noon to midnight from Monday through Thursday and from noon until 2:00 a.m. on Friday and Saturday. Students believe it needs to be changed to 24-hour visitation. Reasons for the desired change include students wanting to study together in the early hours of the morning, and the difficulty in and possible expense of finding a place for friends from other colleges to stay.

My Turn

flag with such ignorant and idiotic organizations.

W. Earl Douglas of the Landmark Baptist Church in Archer, FL, wrote, "The Constitution of the Provisional Government of the Confederacy forbade the importation of slaves. I cannot be convinced that Southern independence meant only the perpetuation of slavery, because history of the truthful kind tells me otherwise." Mr. Douglas points out an interesting fact. How then was slavery the motivating force behind the thrust for Southern independence? To say that slavery was not a force at all, and I am definitely not saying that, would be a terrible falsity. Another question arises: Why were there always more free African-Americans in the slave South than in the so-called free North of the abolitionists?

Societies are seldom sinless. They sin, just as people do. I hope that they would be able to find redemption as people would. We must remember that the value of mistakes is the opportunity to learn from them, and it is therefore much easier to find faults when looking back than it is to find the ones that plague us today.

The Confederate flag, in my eyes, stands for individual rights, for volunteerism, and for Constitutional government. It stands for the old paths and the ancient landmarks of our American forebearers. Pastor Wilson of the aforementioned church says, "The Confederate flag stands for morality and decency of men like Jackson, Stuart, Kirby Smith and Davis. Long may these principles survive and long may that flag wave."

Please read my words carefully, noting what I have said and more importantly what I have not said. For I do not disagree with opposing opinions, nor do I say that my point of view is the correct one. I do, however, believe in my heritage as a Southerner and an individual.

Special ed majors raise funds for fire victim

Students peruse the goodies at last week's bake sale in Springs Campus Center.

Special Education majors sell baked goods at Springs Campus Center on Friday, Jan. 31. The proceeds of the bake sale went to Amy Freeman, a 1995 graduate of PC who majored in Special Education. A teacher in Florence, S.C., Freeman lost all of her possessions to a house fire on Jan. 25.

Dr. Sheryl Bair, assistant professor of special education, called the bake sale "absolutely heartwarming" and was overwhelmed by the support given for the project by faculty, students and staff.

"They didn't even know Amy," said Bair.

"Some people in Smith Administration Building were paying $25 for a cookie!" said Bair.

This year's twelve Special Education majors, whom Bair affectionately referred to as her "dirty dozen," collected enough toiletries and clothing to fill the trunk of a car for Freeman.

"But," said Bair, "the students wanted to do more, so they organized a bake sale." A total of $300 was raised from the sale, Bair said.

Symposium to focus on "Media and Popular Culture"

The 11th annual Arnold Symposium, to be held Feb. 17-19, will feature one of America's most respected journalists when Jeff Greenfield comes to Presbyterian College as part of the three-day focus on "The Media and Popular Culture."

The symposium will include presentations by art critic, Donald Kuspit, film producer Anna Thomas, journalist James Wall, and psychologist and television personality Will Miller.

Greenfield, who will discuss "The Film of Popular Culture" at 11 a.m. Wednesday, Feb. 19, in Belk Auditorium, was recently called "one of the most thoughtful correspondents on television" by The New York Times. A regular correspondent for ABC News' "Nightline" with Ted Koppel, he has reported on everything from Iran-Contra hearings to presidential campaigns to South Africa.

The other speakers for this symposium bring equally impressive credentials to the PC campus. Kuspit, who will speak at 4 p.m. on Monday, Feb. 17 in Edmunds Hall, will address current uses of media in art. He is the editor of "Art Criticism" and the winner of the College Art Association's prestigious Frank Jewett Mather Award for Distinction in Art Criticism. Kuspit has won fellowships from the Ford Foundation, the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Guggenheim Foundation. Kuspit is currently professor of art history and philosophy at the State University of New York at Stony Brook and a professor-at-large at Cornell University.

Thomas, who will speak at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, Feb. 17 in Edmunds Hall, is a graduate of UCI A Film School and has been working in the film industry for more than two decades. She produced and co-wrote with film director Gregory Nava "El Norte," the epic story of two young Guatemalans who migrate to the United States. The film was nominated for an Academy Award.

Wall, who will speak at 11 a.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 18 in Belk Auditorium on "Film and Popular Culture," is the often-quoted and often-sought after editor of The Christian Century, an ecumenical weekly publication that deals with religion and society, public policy and ethics, contemporary culture, media, and evaluation of modern church life.

Miller, who will speak at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 18 in Edmunds Hall, on "Television and Popular Culture," holds four graduate degrees and is, among other things, a licensed psychotherapist, an ordained minister and a successful stand-up comedian. For the past three years, he has been the on-air spokesman for Nickelodeon's "Nick at Nite" cable network. In his continuing series of "Why We Watch" spots, "Dr. Will" explains (often with tongue in cheek) the psychological significance of television shows that we love to watch. A favorite of the media, Miller was recently featured in People magazine, and he appears regularly in Entertainment Weekly and TV Guide. PC IN BRIEF

Pac saC receives honors designation

The 1997 edition of the Pac saC, the Presbyterian College yearbook, has been inducted into the Walsworth Publishing Company's Gallery of Excellence. Fewer than eight percent of the yearbooks Walsworth publishes each year are selected for this honor. The Pac saC will be used by Walsworth Publishing as an example of outstanding yearbook production, according to Jay Therrell, Editor-in-Chief.

Judicial Council holds two hearings

On Jan. 30, the Judicial Council met to consider a student charged with six code of conduct violations. One charge was dismissed because the individual making the charge is no longer at Presbyterian College. The defendant plead guilty to four of the five remaining charges. The Council found the defendant guilty on all charges and sentenced the defendant to 34 hours of community service, an eight-hour alcohol risk-reduction class, two weekends of driving the Safe Ride Shuttle, and written apology letters to individuals involved. A formal letter of reprimand by the Judicial Council also will be placed in the permanent file of the student.

On Feb. 5, the Council met to consider a case two defendants accused of a Code of Conduct violation of vandalism. The two plead guilty to the charges. Each defendant was sentenced to 25 hours of community service to be completed by April 25, 1997 and will be required to pay a fee of $250.00 for damages.

1997-98 editors, managers selected

Six PC juniors have been selected by the Russell Subcommittee on Campus Media to lead the College's campus media for the 1997-98 school year, according to Jay Therrell, chairman of the Student Publications Board.

Leighton Andrew Hart of Tampa, FL has been selected to edit the Blue Stocking newspaper.

Elizabeth Webster Beasley of Macon, Ga. has been selected to edit Figs and Thistles magazine.

Clay Elliott Easterly IV of Greenville, Tenn. has been selected to edit the PC Net Page.

Margaret Candler White of Decatur, Ga. has been selected to manage Radio PC.

Lori Suzanne Adams of Gillsville, Ga. and Roseanna Lynn Simon of Marietta, Ga. have been selected to co-edit the Pac saC yearbook.

"We are pleased to welcome these students to the publications leadership," said Therrell. "I'm confident they will continue the quality traditions already established by our excellent media."

PC Net Publication goes online

The Presbyterian College Net Publication goes online today, according to Elliott Easterly, the publication's editor. The PCNP features articles written from a variety of student perspectives and encourages student feedback.

The PCNP may be accessed at <http://web.presby.edu/~pcnp>.

Snow brings flavor, charm to GDH dining

by Emily Benthall
Staff Writer

A familiar face in Greenville Dining Hall, Vera Snow serves up food and smiles for PC students each day. Snow, a Laurens County native, feels right at home in an academic environment.

"We walked to school every day," she students, and she also used the time to explore her own imagination. Snow also found time to play as a Laurens youth.

"I loved to skate down the middle of North Harper Street," said Snow. The cracks in the sidewalk made skating difficult, so Snow decided to move the action into the middle of the street.

"Skating was much smoother on the road. There was a police officer who would sisters and two brothers.

"It wasn't the Waltons, but it was a lot of fun and happiness," she said. Snow's parents were dedicated Christians.

"I thought my father was the greatest, and the only reason he wasn't President of the United States was because they didn't know where we lived," Snow said.

For three of her high school years, Snow took voice lessons. She sang in every Laurens church at least once, and she was selected to lead music at an Episcopal church for a summer.

"She sings in our church choir at First Baptist," said fellow Blue Lady Evelyn Beaty. "She is very good."

Snow likes singing hymns best. Two of her favorites include "Amazing Grace" and "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."

After Snow's children, Shelia and Dennis, moved out of the house, she spent caring for her mother in a nursing home before she became a Blue Lady.

Snow registers no complaints about her job in GDH, although she does wish that more students would come to GDH for breakfast in the mornings.

"I love my job here," Snow said. "Seeing all the young people daily has really uplifted my spirit. We don't always remember names very well, but we do remember faces. Working in GDH brings joy to my day."

Edens finds involvement, friendships key to her PC success

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

A familiar face on campus, Kipper Edens, a Music Education major from Dalzell, S.C., slowly counts down the days to graduation.

"I'm so glad I chose PC," said Edens. "It's a different world set aside from everything, but the things I've been involved in have been a link to the rest of the world. I'm sad about leaving so I try to treasure each day."

Her involvement on and around the campus is diverse. She plays the harp and has sung for the choir and with the Madrigals for the past four years.

This year, Edens serves as president of the choir and works closely with Dr. Charles Gaines, the director of the PC Choir and her Music Education advisor.

"I see a lot of Dr. Gaines for choir, and we work side by side," said Edens. "He's been an inspiration and he really takes care of me."

Gaines, a professor of music, finds that "multi-talented describes Kipper. She is actually a triple threat. She is a performer—singer, pianist, and harpist; a developing music teacher/director, and a leader. I have been amazed at how Kipper can keep track of the many activities and performances she has and still stay on top of her responsibilities as a student, an RA, and PC choir president."

"She is a very natural, open, and friendly person—qualities that are certainly Edens has also been involved in Zeta Tau Alpha sorority during her four years on campus.

"I've enjoyed being in ZTA because I have a variety of friends," said Edens. "I'm never alone when I go anywhere. How

"What can you say about Kipper?" Sharp asks. "She's just talented, she's involved, and she owns a St. Bernard."

Currently, Edens is preparing for her senior recital as part of her major requirements. She is also student teaching at Laurens Junior High and Laurens High School this semester.

"Student teaching is scary and intimidating, but I'm prepared and the department is still working with me," said Edens. "The only bad part is that we are taken away from PC and miss out on lunch with friends and that kind of thing. But, I enjoy getting to know the kids and becoming a part of their lives."

Future plans for Edens include interguarding at Montreat this summer and attending Winthrop in the fall for her masters in music education. She hopes to teach junior high or high school in upstate South Carolina.

Friends find themselves admiring Edens' many qualities.

To say all the accolades that Kipper deserves would take a novel, but my most favorite quality that Kipper has and the one I envy the most is her big heart," said senior Susan Olmert.

"I'm honored to be able to tell people I go to PC," said Edens. "I've sometimes overdone myself and said yes to a lot of organizations, but I know almost every face on campus and they know mine. I like that."

"And besides that, she is fun to be with because of her sense of humor and because she enjoys life and people," he said. "Of course, anyone who owns and takes care of a 150 pound St. Bernard named Abby should probably have her head examined. But then, Abby is pretty special too."

Lady Hose tied for first in the conference

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

Presbyterian's women's basketball team is currently 16-6 overall, 7-3 in the South Atlantic Conference and are in the midst of a three-way tie for first place in the conference. The Lady Hose have won seven out of their last eight games including six consecutive conference games.

"We started the conference with three straight losses but now we are winning. We are improving everyday and we aren't thinking of ourselves as a championship team just yet," said Beth Couture, PC head coach.

The Hose faced Carson-Newman in Clinton on January 25th. PC shot just under 50% for the first half but was down by ten going into halftime 45-35. The Blue Hose stormed back in the second half shooting 54% and won 82-79. Senior Karen Neely led PC with a 30 point performance and 8 rebounds. Jill Neumann clipped in 11 points and led the Blue Hose with 8 assists. Watoma Williams added 9 points and three rebounds.

"The team has picked up its level of play and is very confident with its remaining conference games," said senior Jill Neumann.

PC traveled to Spartanburg to battle the Lady Rifles of USC-Spartanburg. The Hose jumped out to an early lead and then scored 44 points in the second half en route to a 78-63 victory. Karen Neely scored 25 points in that contest and Tonya Kelly added 12 points.

"The first half of the conference season we lost some close games and we know we need to get going because we are a championship team," said senior Karen Neely.

PC stepped out of the conference to take on Big South powerhouse Furman on January 29th. The Hose shot a dismal 32% from the floor and ultimately fell 67-54. Laura Jones came off the bench to score 16 points and Jill Neumann tipped in 15 points and three rebounds.

"We are playing really well in the midst of this six game conference winning streak," said Couture.

Despite shooting only 37% from the field, PC defeated Catawba 82-72 on February 1st at the Templeton Center. The victory was important for PC because Catawba held first place in the SAC prior to the contest.

Jill Neumann led the team with 21 points. Denzel Barman came off the bench to add 14 points. Starter Tonya Kelley added 15 points and 5 rebounds.

The Lady Hose defeated Gardner-Webb on February 8th by fourteen points, 86-72, despite the fact that the Hose were out rebounded. Karen Neely, who is leading the Blue Hose in scoring with 14.5 points per game and in rebounds with 5.1 per game, scored 23 points and Tonya Kelley tallied 16 points.

Saturday, Feb. 15 is the last home game of the season for the Lady Blue Hose. Festivities to honor the seniors start at 2:00PM.

Blue Hose men remain undefeated in SAC

by Wyndham Pridden
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose men's basketball team is awesome. That's right, awesome. Currently, they rest atop the South Atlantic Conference with an undefeated conference record.

Presbyterian has a defense that ranks among the nation's best. The Hose outscored their opponents by a margin of 9.5, placing second in the country. Additionally, the Hose allow their opponents just 62.4 points per game, ranking them seventh in the country. Fans remember this defense wins ball games.

Offensively the Hose have not been as successful as they have on defense but that is not to say they are struggling under the hoop. Sophomore sensation Eric Burrow contributes 11.3 ppg, while consistent performer Ronnie Cannon is good for 11.8 ppg.

On February 5th, the Hose entered the Ross E. Templeton Physical Education building riding the coattails of a ten game winning streak. Knocking off such conference foes as Mars Hill (76-60), Carson-Newman (89-65), and Lenoir-Rhyne (67-51), the Hose seemed to be unstoppable.

The unlucky opponent that night was the mighty Catawba Indians who were 13-5 overall and an even 4-4 in conference action and were trying to avenge their loss to PC back on January 8th.

The Hose had all the keys for victory but were missing a couple of crucial factors. First, the Hose came out slow in the first half. Burrow believes that the first half is a time for the Hose "to get a feel for what they are like."

Secondly, the Hose were dealt a referee who, judging from a few of the calls he made, was one eye shy of being a cyclops.

"We tried not to let the officiating affect our game," said Gregg Nibert, PC's winningest head coach. "We tried to focus on aspects of the game that we could control."

Catawba came out strong against the Hose, maintaining a solid lead throughout most of the first half. Once again the Hose were late getting their game going. As the shutless Theta Chi's got the 1,340th faithful pumped up and loud, sophomore forward Byron "the Spark" Graham did the rest.

With 9:52 left in the first half senior co-captain Stallard threw up an alley-oop to Graham that shook the building nearly off its foundation leaving the score 15-11 in favor of the tribe. Then with 5:22 left in the half and the score even at twenty-one a piece, Kent Stallard did what he does best, explode offensively. He hit a three-pointer that put the Hose out in front for the rest of the half and ultimately for the game.

Burrow led the Hose at the half with 10 points while Cannon had pulled down five boards. The Hose shot 43.5% in the half, while holding Catawba (the conference's leading field goal percentage team) to a mere 29.6%.

The second half opened with a deep three-pointer from Graham and the Hose were off and running. Burrow decided to add his kind of flare to the game as the 6-10 Georgian was on the receiving end of Patrick Johnson's alley-oop. Just 58 later Burrow again brought the Hose home crowd to their feet with a breakaway, two-handed tomahawk jam.

The Hose rolled to victory, again. Graham led all scorers with 19 points and Cannon pulled down seven boards. The Hose's success comes not only from high scorers and rebounders, but also from the quiet heroes who dish out the passes and set the picks. The team does not rely on just one or two players every single game to score all the points. They spread the wealth with "extremely unselfish" basketball.

"Everybody is sacrificing for the team," said Nibert. "Everybody worries about the team being successful."

The next home game for the men and women, the last of the season for the two teams, is February 15th as both teams take on the Elon Fighting Christians. Come to the game and support the Hose basketball teams, you will be glad you did.

Spangler, Kirk, Speir, Nichols to join football lineup

Dickey appoints coaching staff for inaugural season

by Charles Smith
Staff Writer

As Coach Dickey prowls the sidelines next season he will be able to depend upon a very experienced core of assistant coaches. The new coaching staff, recently set into place by Dickey, has over thirty years of coaching experience collectively, two national championships, and several conference championships.

Former University of Georgia defensive standout Tommy Spangler was named as defensive coordinator for the Blue Hose. Spangler comes to PC from Georgia-Southern University where in 1990 he helped coach the Eagles to a 12-3 overall record and the Division I-AA National Championship.

Before coaching at Georgia-Southern, Spangler was a two year starter at defensive back for the Georgia Bulldogs. Spangler helped to lead the Bulldogs to the Division I National Championship in 1980. "We are pleased that Coach Spangler has joined our staff. It's a big accomplishment for us to bring in someone of Tommy's experience and knowledge," Dickey said. "He has a tremendous background as defensive coordinator and recruiter."

Coaching the offensive line next fall will be former Tennessee center Todd Kirk. Kirk was a three year starter for the Volunteers, and he was a teammate of Coach Dickey when Tennessee won the 1986 Sugar Bowl. As a graduate assistant for the Volunteers, Kirk helped coach them to an 11-1 record and a Cotton Bowl victory in 1989.

"We are extremely excited and fortunate to attract a person like Todd Kirk to Presbyterian," Dickey said. "Todd brings a great deal of experience to us both on and off the field."

The Blue Hose defensive front will be coached by Mark Speir, a 1990 graduate of Clemson University. Speir began his coaching career as a student assistant with the Tigers from 1986-89. After leaving Clemson, Speir moved on to become the defensive line coach, recruiting coordinator, and running backs coach at Western Carolina University from 1991-1996. While at Western Carolina, Speir coached one of the Catamount's only 1,000 yard rushers.

"We are glad to announce that Coach Speir has accepted the defensive front coaching position here at Presbyterian," said Dickey. "Mark will be an outstanding member of our staff and Presbyterian College."

Former Blue Hose quarterback Harold Nichols has been named as recruiting coordinator. As quarterback Nichols set the single season passing record with 1,898 yards in 1989. After graduating from PC in 1989, Nichols served as an assistant coach for PC for two years. Prior to being named as a member of Coach Dickey's staff Nichols served as recruiting coordinator and running backs coach for Georgia-Southern University.

At Georgia-Southern Nichols coached three All-Americans, and helped lead the Eagles to the 1993 Southern Conference Championship.

"We are extremely excited that Harold Nichols is able to return to his alma mater, and our staff here at Presbyterian College," Dickey said. "Having worked with Harold for two years, he has certainly been impressive off the field as well as on the field. Coach Nichols is a tremendous ambassador for Presbyterian College."

The Lutz-Yelton Convention Center on the Gardner-Webb campus will host the 1997 SAC basketball tournament. The school plans an "electric atmosphere" inside the 5,000 seat Paul Porter Arena.

Gardner-Webb makes plans for SAC tournament

Although many alumni, fans and supporters of South Atlantic Conference basketball are eagerly awaiting the results of the conference schedule, a committee at Gardner-Webb University is planning for the post-season conference tournament to be one of the most memorable events in recent history.

Citing thin crowds in recent years at the annual Food Lion South Atlantic Conference Tournament is motivation, the Gardner-Webb committee is putting its most creative foot forward in an effort to bring life back to the SAC men's and women's basketball tournament. Celebrity appearances, high-tech features in and around the court, crowd-pleasing performers, rallies, and special activities to recognize athletes of all ages are among the ideas being pursued by the group. The tournament is scheduled for February 26-March 1.

Beginning this year, Gardner Webb is the first SAC school to host the tournament on a new rotating basis, which will allow for each conference school to feature the tournament on its campus in years to come. GWU organizers feel that they will be a tough act to follow for several reasons. First and foremost, the Lutz-Yelton Convention Center on campus, which contains the 5,000 seat Paul Porter Arena, is the largest and most modern in the conference, thus allowing for space to put together "special touches" that will complement the on-court action.

Committee members also have valuable experience to draw upon. They all served as organizers for this past summer's Olympic Trials cycling event that was held at Gardner-Webb, which drew a crowd of 8,000, more than three times the size of Boiling Springs itself to witness the nationally televised event.

The tournament is being designed to attract a large and diverse group of visitors. For example, alumni directors at the respective schools are being offered by GWU and the opportunity and accommodations to have "hospitality suites" to allow area grads from conference schools a chance to catch a game and catch up with each other. As well, nationally recognized personalities are being contacted about making appearances at the tournament, which may be connected with rallies, clinic or other activity that may coincide with the games.

The atmosphere of the Porter Arena will be electric. A proposal has been made to feature big screen equipment at one end of the Arena that will be connected to closed-circuit television cameras, which will capture action on the court and in the stands for all to witness as fans in ACC-type coliseums do. Factor in crowd participation activities and participation activities and performances during halftimes and timeouts and you see why GWU is eagerly anticipating season's end.

"I'm not sure, at least from my perspective, that the quality of food purchased is in question," said Skip Zubrod, vice president of finance. "The quality of cooking is questioned, but, as always, rumors persist."

Patrick agrees that rumors are a part of the trouble with PC's food service.

Misinformation is really the problem with GDH," said Patrick.

The solution is really a combination of things: a new wing for more space, renovation of lines, and specialty areas," said Zubrod.

For Powell, the three rules are clean, good, and attractive, necessarily in that order.

After the committee reviews all the other schools on their agenda, they will come together and make a report. That will help to give food service faculty recommendations as to what can be improved and how it may be done. Patrick has some ideas on what she would like to see happen in GDH.

"I would personally love to have everything done by my senior year — two years from now," she said. "I would love a whole new system. I don't know if it could be from a national system or stay in-house."

Powell enjoys working with the SGA committee and learning what ideas they have for improvements.

The people on SGA are just great to work with," said Powell.

Powell also likes to hear from individual students about what they would like to see in GDH.

"People are talking with me more and more," said Powell. "We like it when people tell us what they want. We are finding out more and more about what people want. We've tried to keep things varied, but we've found that some people eat the same thing all the time. The student body as a whole has been very pleasant to work with."

There are several avenues that may be explored in the future to accommodate more people's tastes and preferences.

We are doing a lot now to try to enhance the vegetarian side of our menu," said Powell.

Patrick has seen where changes have recently been made and believes that Powell truly is trying to make positive efforts in response to student requests.

"I see that [Powell] really has been making changes," said Patrick. "The changes we are making now will be slow. It won't be major until we overhaul the whole system."

The food service workers want to know how they can help students to enjoy their dining experience more. They are willing to hear any suggestions and constructive criticisms.

"I think [students] do not understand that the people in the dining hall do listen and are trying to help," said Zubrod. "One of the problems is probably our diverse population."

Powell agrees and wants to hear from students.

"We here at food service are glad to help out whenever we can," he said.

The dining hall receives a set budget each year, but that budget is based on their needs and requests.

"The dining hall reports to me," said Zubrod. "In terms of funding, we develop the budgets with all the departments, but there's not really an allocation," said Zubrod.

Much of the budget requests rest on outside events that GDH handles. Each year, the PC dining hall hosts many outside services and summer conferences. The yield from these functions is approximately $300,000 per year. The cost to run the facility for those banquets is close to $250,000. In 1994, the net profit coming from private catering at GDH was $46,606. Figures from more recent years are not available.

Powell finds that space availability is a hindrance to the amount of work the dining hall can do for the community.

"We've tried our best to accommodate the community," said Powell. "We've had to turn down so many functions because we just do not have the facilities."

As GDH makes changes, its leader remains committed, although he may see retirement on the not-so-distant horizon. Powell was originally here from 1947-60 and returned in 1977 to manage PC's food services.

"I've already moved into retirement on the calendar," he said, "but I really like the work I do and the people with whom and for whom I work."

"I think the flag should be placed in a memorial, because the Confederacy was a separate nation," said Kerry Cottingham, a freshman.

"I am really disappointed about the reputation of the flag now," said Mary Frances Patrick.

Many PC faculty and staff find themselves agreeing with those students who are opposed to the flag.

Dr. Booker T. Ingram, associate professor of political science, asks where the good people were when the flag was being misused and misrepresented by hate groups such as the KKK and the White Citizens Council.

"The flag is a very negative symbol towards African-Americans because of the racial hate groups," said Dr. Ingram. "The good people are just standing on the sidelines, letting these hate groups use their flag in the wrong way."

According to Sheila Hill, director of multicultural affairs and coordinator of Student Volunteer Services, flying the flag creates the wrong image. The government and the state need to put more emphasis on education and criminal problems, she said.

"African-Americans have contributed a great deal to this state," said Roger Smith, assistant professor of history. "They need some kind of monument, not a flag that symbolized rebellion. This flag does not represent sovereignty, it should be placed in a memorial."

"This flag has been flying above a public for 30 years," said Dr. David Needham, professor of history. "It's been 130 years since the Civil War, so its time for the flag to come down."

While South Carolina voters may ultimately decide the fate of the flag next November in a general referendum, the subject still remains open and active on the PC campus.

Dan Hart and Gray Lesesne contributed to this report.

The Last Word: PC presidential search finalists unveiled

by Brandon Lane and Mitchell Moore

As promised, young Ernest Farkweller was terminated as fast as GDH's supply of chicken strips lasts on Chicken Strips Night. The Blue Stocking cordially welcomes young campus jesters Mitchell Moore and Brandon Lane to the Last Word for your comedic pleasure.

As you all know (or maybe some don't), our school presently is searching for a new president. This week, The Last Word features the possible top contenders for PC's Oval Office. The Last Word has obtained a secret presidential search finalist list, and today we present the candidates for your perusal.

Okay. Let's give credit where credit is due. Richard Simmons is the most plausible choice. Simmons is a natural born leader with more than a dollop of compassion. We can't let his fabulous flawless videos distract us from the fact that under those short shorts, there lies a man capable of leading not only sheep out of a pasture but also our learning institution for the twenty-first century. While some say he's getting old and that his catman physique is not what it used to be, say, that of a Slim Goodbody, we personally know that Richard is a competent leader prepared who will bulk to fill Uncle Ken's britches.

What can one expect from a Simmons administration? 1) GDH will switch to the "Deal-a-Meal" program. Rumor has it that students will get only one helping a week of Oriental Mix. Sorry, guys. 2) Advancement Office will offer "Steppin' to the Oldies" video with any $30 or higher donation to the college. 3) Traditional graduation caps and gowns will be replaced with tight tank tops emblazoned with a golden "P." 4) Sororities will be required to ban any sort of perm relaxer. 5) Tuesday convocations will never be the same. Simmons will don the head of the giant Scotsman balloon that's supposed to be our mascot and will prance around the aisles until the entire student body roars with excitement. Okay, maybe not.

Dennis Rodman. The man, the myth, the way of life. We know that Dennis has scarred his reputation a bit by kicking that camera man in the genitalia, but let's look past that. He is a natural superstar. Besides, if he'll kick a camera man in the groin, imagine what he'd do at Board of Trustees meetings! And wouldn't that feather boa look superb in the graduation march? We've always wanted a president who isn't afraid to dress in drag!

Rodman plans serious reforms if elected to the PC post. The president's mansion would be repainted in mango and urban yellow. The Russell program would be cancelled; CEPs would consist of performances by Boy George and Culture Club. "As Nasty as I Wanna Be" would become mandatory reading for English 110. Blue Ladies would be required to dye their hair blue.

Moving right along. Carrie Fisher.

Babe. Any chick that can wear donuts on the side on her head while fighting a black, leather clad gnasta whose objective is to destroy Endore is our kinda gal. She's big, she's bossy, and she's not afraid to get down with Chewbacca. Her relentless willingness to lead the rebel force against the evil powers of the universe inspired us to include her on this list. We asked Ms. Fisher to dinner and offered her the presidency, but she turned it down when we demanded that she wear that cute outfit from the "Jabba" scene. Then we realized we wouldn't feel too comfortable with her standing in front of the student body. Schwing!

However, the most obvious candidate for the post is one who has been with us all along. Her endearing presence on campus is loved by some, loathed by others and unknown to many. We think you know who we're talking about: Chen-Lu. For those of you who may not remember, Chen-Lu lost a hard fought write-in campaign the last two years for SGA, only to have her electoral hopes further squashed by SGA president Blythe Matheson last October in what became the nastiest Homecoming contest in PC's history.

Chen-Lu promises big changes if chosen to fill Uncle Ken's shoes. First, she'll run the campus from her secret Clinton hideaway. Ever since Matheson clawed Chen-Lu's virgin face in that Homecoming brouhaha, she's hidden herself from campus. Chen-Lu will declare herself permanent SGA president and Eternal Homecoming Queen. A woman of style, leadership, and firmness. What we like

PC looks to expand opportunities for female athletes

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

PC is synonymous with tradition in many ways, and thus it is not surprising that arrival day for freshmen in the 1990s is similar in some ways to arrival days in the 1880s; there is one notable difference, however, and that is the advent of full-time female students. Since its inception in 1880, Presbyterian has welcomed women, but it was not until the early 1960s that female students were elevated from the status as day students to full-time students.

Over the years, the ratio of male to female students has been approaching 1:1 and currently stands at 49.7 percent male and 50.3 percent female. As a result, the athletics department has expanded and continues to expand in an attempt to include the interests of the female segment of the student body. Most recent developments include the addition of a softball team, which will compete on the club level this season and be elevated to varsity status next year, and an addition to the Templeton athletic center, which will provide five new locker rooms for women and four for men.

At issue is Presbyterian's compliance with a segment of NCAA regulation which addresses gender-equity known as Title IX. Established by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Education Amendments of 1972, Title IX states that "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Athletic scholarship funding at PC

Graphic by Margaret Ellen Pender/Blue Stocking

During 1995, the Blue Hose outfitted 132 men participating in athletics and only 44 women participating in athletics. On that basis, scholarship money could be allocated on an overall 75 percent to 25 percent ratio. Therefore, a school has the autonomy "to allocate as many scholarships to a team as it wants, ranging from zero dollars to the maximum permitted by the NCAA for the sport." Complications arise, however, when defining participants, establishing equivalencies and realizing that revenue-generating power is not a permissible cause for deviation from equitable funding. In response to growing concerns regarding provisions for female athletes, the NCAA conducted a gender-equity study in 1992 and concluded that "despite the relatively even distribution of membership undergraduate enrollment by gender, males constituted nearly 70 percent of intercollegiate athletics participation and received nearly 77 percent of the operating budgets, 70 percent of the scholarship funds and 83 percent of the recruiting dollars."

The NCAA went further to define its parameters of gender-equity by specifying that "An athletics program can be considered gender equitable when the participants in both the men's and women's sports programs would accept as fair and equitable the overall program of the other gender."

"Gender-equity, in my opinion, is simply a matter of being fair," said

Presbyterian's director of athletics Allen Morris.

"When I arrived at PC, I did feel that we were falling short in some areas...so we have made some changes and will continue to make changes," said Morris. "The thing to remember is that it cannot all be done overnight, but I think that we are making good progress."

Fielding a softball team will improve the college's compliance numbers. Prior to offering softball for women and cross country for both sexes, PC funded six sports for men and four for women. In 1997, seven male squads and six female squads will adorn Blue Hose uniforms.

Obviously, providing for an more equivalent number of teams will evidence Presbyterian's desire to comply with Title IX of the NCAA Guidelines, but all colleges must be careful to read the fine print of the Title IX stipulations.

Title IX requires that "institutions offer athletics programs to accommodate effectively the interests and abilities of students to the extent necessary to provide equal opportunity." An example of a common violation of that article is a typical institution which boasts a student body ratio of 44 percent female enrollment versus 56 percent male enrollment yet provides only 24 percent of its athletic opportunities to women and 76 percent to men.

Other key elements addressed by Title IX include equipment and supply provisions, travel allowances, assignment and compensation of coaches, medical and training facilities and publicity. Based upon unofficial numbers and information from Morris, it seems that Presbyterian does have a desire to demonstrate fairness and thus is taking steps to ensure that women are provided with comparable budgets. Budgeting is often seen as a zero-sum game, however, and that notion is the one that must be overcome.

As the above graphic reveals, funding for athletic scholarships is the one area which could be called into question at Presbyterian, but according to Title IX guidelines the Blue Hose are in compliance. To evaluate its status, an institution must perform a simple calculation: "total scholarship dollars are to be divided in proportion to the participation of men and women in the intercollegiate athletics program."

Based upon gender proportionality in athletics alone, Presbyterian is within the financial guidelines for scholarship funding established by Title IX, but boosting the number of female participants to a figure more aligned with the overall student body proportions is a goal that is prominent in PC athletics. As a result, Morris and other college officials plan to conduct another interest and abilities survey in the future in order to determine if new athletic interests have arisen among the female segment of the student body.

"There is no question that gender-equity is here," said Morris.

Presbyterian has indeed made great strides since the 1960s to foment the development of female athletic programs but further changes are on the drawing board.

POINT

Symposium attendance embarrassing

The low attendance numbers at this year's Arnold Symposium are a poor reflection upon this College community, especially this College's students. The Symposium brings media giants to an otherwise isolated and media-ignorant campus, and it is an outrage for students who wish to acquire an education in the liberal arts to ignore such a program.

While speakers such as Jeff Greenfield (correspondant for ABC News) are lecturing to empty seats PC students are busy participating in such mind-broadening activities as playing pingpong, watching Days of Our Lives or Melrose Place (which is ironic when one notes the topic of this year's Symposium) or brainstorming for t-shirt designs.

College administrators and faculty members labor to bring these speakers to campus, and they pay a hefty premium of Russell Program money to ensure top-quality names for each year's program. Low attendance numbers will eventually seal the fate of quality CEP programs as faculty members and administrators throw up their hands in frustration at student indifference. Wake up, PC. Intelligent, informed citizens of the world take advantage of opportunities like those which PC's Cultural Enrichment Program provides.

Alumni giving must increase athletic funds

A walk through the halls of Templeton Center reveals that PC has quite an illustrious history in athletics, but inevitable change has landed PC in a new chapter in its history. While many Blue Hose teams continue to attain impressive recognition, Presbyterian has not exactly dominated the SAC.

PC certainly continues to attract talented athletes, but increasing scholarship appropriations to a level equal with those of our SAC rivals would enable Blue Hose coaches to bring more top-notch scholar athletes to PC. While the deficit is more dramatic in women's athletics, neither men's nor women's programs at Presbyterian are receiving the maximum allowable dollars under SAC guidelines.

For example, the SAC allows each institution to award 8.5 equivalencies to its women's basketball program, yet PC's limit currently stands at 6.5, the lowest in the conference. The SAC similarly allows for the funding of 5.0 equivalencies to each baseball squad but PC only may award 2.5.

The college already pours a large sum of money into funding athletics. Where can additional money be found? Alumni giving is the most likely source of funds; Scotsman funding must increase among alumni for PC athletics to succeed.

Confederate flag articles nauseating and depressing

It is hard to say which is more nauseating and depressing: seeing over and over the championing of a relic of an ignoble period in our country's history, or reading illogical, blind and intellectually dishonest accounts in the Blue Stocking of why one would so passionately hang on to that relic, the Confederate battle flag, when so many others can't help but see it as a symbol of a period when their ancestors were considered and treated as less than human.

The comments in the Blue Stocking article that especially disturbed me were these:

• "If you move the flag to a Confederate monument, then it will be vandalized; therefore, the meaning of the flag will be lessened."

• "This flag is a symbol of the Civil War and it has nothing to do with racism."

• "I am for the Confederate flag because it symbolizes the pride of the Old South, which stands for honor and loyalty, not bigotry."

• "Usually people think the flag is racist because they think the Civil War was fought over states' rights, so this means it is part of everybody's history."

Those statements appear to ignore or disregard that the flag itself was carried by one race of people who thought owning another race of people was just "I didn't live in the Old South and do not know what people then felt when terms like 'pride,' 'honor' and 'loyalty' were used. Honor, though, to me would be to renounce or at least keep to one's self a symbol that clearly gives pain to other people—an entire race of people in this case.

That there was no bigotry in the Old South is such a fantasy that I know the speaker wishes that it were true. I ask you, however, could slavery have existed without deep-seated bigotry? And if bigotry wasn't behind the reality of slavery, just what was? Truly, could those people of the African Diaspora be classified by the U.S. Census as 3/5ths of a human being if bigotry were not present?

States' rights during the Civil War era obviously means that the southern states wanted to maintain the right to enslave other human beings. These states might have wanted to retain other rights, but to deny the reality that they wanted to maintain the status as slave states—which meant using other human beings to maintain the plantation system which gave so many Southerners a privileged life—is naive, demeaning and intellectually dishonest. The states' rights argument was used by many of these same Southern states in the 1950s and 1960s to deny civil rights legislation.

Sixty years after the Plessy v. Ferguson case that instituted the "separate but equal" doctrine (which guaranteed only that the former would exist) the U.S. Supreme Court, in its 1954 Brown v. Board of Education decision, struck down "separate but equal" and instituted desegregation in all public arenas. It took another decade for Southern school districts, who stalled and equivocated, to be forced into compliance by U.S. district courts. Were those white citizens who were forced by the courts to accept equality between the races stalling because of the states' rights argument? Did racism and bigotry, mixed with fear and contempt, motivate them at all?

None of the advocates of flying the flag on the South Carolina capitol dome mentioned that the flag was placed there only in 1962. Was that a message of defiance in the face of the fight over civil rights, or just a one hundred year oversight, a belated gesture of honoring the dead and a way of life?

Sincere people whose ancestors were abused by the system and the reality of the Old South want the flag taken down from the state capitol so that it doesn't symbolize, as it does now, what an entire state believes and represents—a past that however much one wants to sanitize it included slavery and could not have existed in the form that it did without slavery.

We all, including me, tend to see too much of the world from our own perspective only. As a child growing up outside of Birmingham, Ala., I owned a Confederate battle flag; it was tacked on my bedroom wall. I never imagined then what our maid—an African American woman who washed our clothes, changed our linens, cooked our meals and scrubbed our toilets, all for $12.00 a week—thought when she saw that flag every day. And my family was composed of moderate Democrats who voted for JFK and LBJ. How often must our maid have winced, bitten her tongue and felt her heart break when she heard the little children whom she raised and loved (for I have to believe that she loved us) use the word "nigger."

Fed whatever you want to feel: fly the flag on your own property, if you desire, and go stare at it at the memorial where it belongs. But how dare anyone look at those whose grand and great-grandparents were enslaved in 1762 and 1862, and whose parents were denied equal access to lunchrooms, restrooms and schoolrooms in cities throughout the American South in 1962, and tell them that the issue is solely one of states' rights? Own up to your ethnic legacy. Our bodies are no longer enslaved, when will our hearts and minds follow?

Changes to visitation policy proposed

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

Proposed changes in PC's overnight visitation policy may allow students to decide the matter for themselves. Recent campus debate has prompted officials in the College's Residence Hall Association and Student Government Association to examine the issue more closely, and RHA sophomore Michelle Harper will chair a RHA committee to begin working on a proposal.

Two recent forums have sparked interest in examining the College's visitation policies. SGA held an Open Forum in Springs Campus Center on Feb. 18 to obtain student input, and visitation was the topic of a Feb. 27 "Food for Thought," a lunch-time open forum in GDH.

Approximately twelve students attended the lunch with residence life staff, student affairs staff, and Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain. While no students opposed a change in the policy, the degree of change was questioned by some present.

Some PC students want 24-hour visitation rights so study groups will have a place to meet after midnight and so students may avoid the cost of finding out-of-town guests places to stay.

Other students are concerned about the safety, privacy, and respect that may be forgotten with the implementation of a new overnight policy. Students at the lunch expressed concerns about the need for a change. Many questions were raised at "Food for Thought," including:

• Should a new policy be applied campus wide, by dorm, by hall, or by individual room with roommate consent?

• Should a new policy offer 24-hour visitation on the weekends with extended weekday hours?

• Should a 24-hour policy be available to freshmen?

• Would a 24-hour policy effect the reputation of the college?

• What do prospective students and their parents look for in visitation policies?

• Should students be expected to escort their guests after a certain hour?

• Should dorm cards still only activate dorms during certain hours?

"I feel that there should be a 24-hour policy on the weekends with consent of dorm, hall, and room," said sophomore Jeff Williams. "We are mature enough to handle the responsibility. I think it's unfair that older students who will be living on campus in the townhouses will have more freedom than those of us in dorms. If they have no policy, then that should also be open to the rest of us."

Other students believe the policy should not be completely relaxed.

"I would agree to a 24-hour weekend policy because I know many students have friends, both male and female, that don't have a place to stay when they visit," said freshman Thomas Maye. "But, I also think there should be a mutual consent between roommates."

"The policy should be changed, but quiet hours and safety should still be enforced," said sophomore Brett Lamb. "I'm mostly concerned about safety."

"I moved off campus not only to save money, but to have more freedom," said Brandon Lane, a junior who lives off campus. "If the college wants to keep people living on campus, not only should the dorms be upgraded, but the visitation policy should be changed."

College administrators await further study of visitation proposals.

"I would be willing to consider the idea of 24-hour visitation if it was done by room and available only to upperclassmen," said Joseph Nixon, dean of student affairs.

The process of changing the current visitation policy begins with a proposal to SGA and the Student Affairs Council, who would then review the proposal, comment, and pass it on to the faculty and Board of Trustees.

PC IN BRIEF

72-hour ecumenical prayer vigil held on campus

Students, faculty and staff members and members of the surrounding community gathered together in Edmunds Hall on Feb. 26 to close a 72-hour prayer vigil at PC.

Known as SPARC, an acronym for Students Praying For Real Concerns, the prayer vigil focused on concerns of the campus, the nation and the world.

"Barriers were broken down in prayer," said senior Cathy Clasen, who helped organize the prayer vigil. "I think it's unfair that older students who will be living on campus in the townhouses will have more freedom than those of us in dorms. If they have no policy, then that should also be open to the rest of us."

"The prayer vigil was an answer to prayer for me because I've always wanted to see Christians united on campus," said senior Alyssa Kapustay. "With so many different denominations and Christian groups and religious beliefs on campus, it's sometimes hard to achieve unity. When you have something like prayer, it's something that everyone can agree on."

SPARC began at 3:00 pm on Feb. 23 with an opening ceremony in Edmunds Hall. After a time of singing and prayer, Dr. Jermain Disasa, director of special programs, spoke about his experiences with prayer in his native land of Ethiopia, where he and other church leaders were imprisoned by the then Marxist government.

During the 72-hour prayer vigil, students and members of the faculty and staff took turns praying in half-hour segments in Wyatt Chapel. Those who prayed were asked to pray for individuals on campus as well as the needs of the campus, the nation, the world in general and 24 specific countries.

"SPARC was a very helpful and positive step for PC, with all the changes going on," said Clasen.

The prayer vigil ended with a communion service and concert of prayer at Edmunds Hall. Rev. Todd B. Jones, Senior Minister of First Presbyterian Church (USA) in Spartanburg, spoke after a short time of singing and, with Dr. Peter Hobbie, Associate Professor of Religion, led those present in partaking of communion.

A similar 24-hour prayer vigil is scheduled to take place later this month. The prayer vigil will begin with chapel service on Tuesday, March 25 and will end with a concert of prayer at 7:00 pm on Wednesday, March 26.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

In response to the Confederate flag article and editorial in the February 14 issue of the Blue Stocking, I would like to assert my deep feelings of regret that we have allowed this debate to become an embodiment of the South. I feel regret and sadness that we allow ourselves to be defined by the controversy over the Confederate flag—it seems that a person is either for the flag or against the flag, and we have allowed ourselves to be divided by this debate in ways that reach beyond simple academic exercise.

While the fact is debatable whether the Confederate flag represents hate or whether the flag has been misused by hate groups and has, therefore, acquired a pejorative connotation, the undeniable truth is that the emotional context in which the flag debate now exists has charged hateful sentiments. The Confederate flag debate has gotten out of hand. The debate, it seems, is no longer a matter of correct representation of the public sector, but has escalated to the status of a tool with which we measure a person's true love of the South.

Gillespie experiences adventurous semester in Estonia

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

For many students and professors at PC, the spring 1997 semester is perhaps typical of all other semesters. But for Dr. David Gillespie, professor of political science, this is a semester of adventure. Since Jan. 26, Gillespie has been working in Estonia as part of the Fulbright Scholars program.

"[It is] cold, by comparison with the South; the high last weekend was 14 degrees Fahrenheit," said Gillespie. "I haven't seen ground since I flew out of Atlanta. A deep snow this morning, although Estonians are already claiming signs of spring, and students were wearing miniskirts under heavy overcoats this week."

Gillespie was made at home immediately upon his arrival in Estonia. He got to know his colleagues during a weekend ski retreat.

"Estonians have a reputation for being rather cool, aloof, reserved, but my greeting or welcome has been warm indeed," he said. "The first weekend I was in Tartu, the faculty of my department took me to an ancient peasant cottage for cross-country skiing, and I ended up learning what authentic, traditional Estonian sauna is all about. It was wonderful. We played guitar and sang folk songs (some Estonian, many American), in the evenings. I have been taken on guided tours, treated to restaurant and pub life. Estonians are very nice indeed."

Besides adapting to temperature changes, Gillespie has also encountered problems, such as lack of hot water, difficult communication with the Estonians, security checks and a heavy workload. Gillespie lives in a 1960 Kruschev-era apartment that is identical to every other

Faculty Profile

Dr. David Gillespie, professor of political science, is teaching and conducting research at Tartu University in Estonia as part of the Fulbright Scholars program. Gillespie plans to return to the United States in early July.

apartment built by the Russians during that time.

"There are remaining legacies of Estonia having been a part of the second world, associated with the Soviet Union," he said. "When I enter a building, I absolutely must check my coat and receive a ticket. I can't enter my classroom without checking out a key kept in the reception room of the classroom building. I live in an apartment dating from the Kruschev era 1960's. It is comfortable, but to get hot water, I have to light the heater with a match, which can be a bit scary, and which sometimes doesn't work at all."

Gillespie also finds difficulty communicating with school officials and other native Estonians because some attitudes and customs are still fixed in the Soviet tradition.

"Some American students here told me that the university bureaucrats give students a hard time and ultimately are very unhelpful," said Gillespie. "Tartu is further off the beaten track than Tallinn, and fewer people working in stores speak English than just about any place I have seen in the world."

Much of Estonia is becoming more modern.

"Estonia is fast becoming a first world country," said Gillespie. "There are BMW's, cellular phones, McDonald's, and food and department stores where goods are plentiful, of high quality, and generally less expensive than in the U.S."

The farther from the capital of Tallinn Gillespie gets, the more difficult it is for him to find people that can communicate with him. The language barrier has been a frustration for him.

"Estonian is a beautiful language to listen to," Gillespie said. "Some have said it is prettier than French. But even Estonians say that it is very, very difficult to learn, harder than Russian. Surprising, because the look of it would make you think the opposite. Estonians use, I think 33 letters, 26 of which they share with us. But, believe me, it is tough to learn. I am making some halting effort to learn what I can."

Gillespie gave a two-day lecture upon his arrival at the Estonian Foreign Ministry's School of Diplomacy in Tallinn. The speech concerned U.S. foreign policy, and Dr. Tom Weaver and Dr. Booker Ingram, professors of political science, assisted with the assignment. Gillespie is now teaching American Politics, U.S. Constitution and Soviet and Post-Soviet Russian Politics courses at Tartu University.

"Actually, Tartu University is considered the best university in any of the three Baltic nations (Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania)," said Gillespie. "It is hard for Estonians to get in, and almost all of them who do come are free of tuition. There are about 8,000 students at University of Tartu."

Gillespie teaches his courses in English, and most of the 65 students in his classes are fluent.

"All university students know Estonian and Russian, many know German, and the most popular foreign language to take by far now is English," he said. "Some of my students are fluent in English, but others, I suspect, are taking my courses in order to hear English spoken in a lecture environment."

Gillespie is also involved in some research while he is in Estonia.

"Actually, I am doing a research project while here with an Estonian political scientist named Raivo Vetik," he said. "Our paper will be titled 'Estonian and Estonian-Russian Students - Perception of the New World Order.' I also will give a paper at an American Studies Conference here at Tartu in April."

Gillespie will also do some traveling on the weekends when the weather improves. He plans to visit the Baltics, Russia, Poland, and Scandinavia. His wife, Judi Gillespie, director of financial aid, will join him in June and they will travel and return to the United States in early July.

"Hopefully by that time [when I arrive], he will be generally through with the university work," said Judi. "So we will be touring Scandinavian countries."

Peake recalls friendship, leadership opportunities at PC

by Emily Benthall
Staff Writer

With only a few months left until graduation, senior Beth Peake, a native of Bristol, Tenn., looks to commencement with bittersweet feelings.

"The past four years have been the best of my life," said Peake. "I came to PC because I wanted to be a name, not just a social security number. I'm not ready to leave."

Peake represents the student body on the Presidential Search Committee. The Presidential Search Committee is composed of the Board of Trustees, the Staff, two faculty members and a student.

"I feel honored to have been selected as the students' voice. The Committee assured me that I have as much say as any other member, which is comforting knowing that the students' ideas and concerns will be heard," said Peake. "We have only met once, but the process looks promising. Right now we are just going through resumes."

Peake's experience in student representation began her sophomore year when she got involved with SGA.

"It's exciting to see the administration listen to the students concerns and actually make changes," said Peake.

Senior Profile

Beth Peake

Hometown: Bristol, Tenn.

Major: Theater Arts

"The past four years have been the best of my life ... the sense of community here at PC is something I will never forget."

In addition to her SGA duties, Peake has also been involved in Zeta Tau Alpha fraternity as membership coordinator in fall 1995 and is currently coordinating the statewide Zeta day that the PC Kappa Beta chapter will host in March.

Peake's sorority experiences have provided her with an extended family.

"As an only child, I always wanted sisters, now I have over one-hundred who will be there for me at the drop of a hat," Peake said. "Greek life has more than just a social aspect. Zeta has taught me more about leadership through service projects. Sisterhood has brought me together with a diverse group whom I'm really going to miss."

"Beth has given her years here at PC to the college," freshman Laura Nisbet, a member of Zeta Tau Alpha. "She is the most involved student I know. You can tell that she cares deeply for all of the students here and the college as a whole."

While studying at American University in Washington, D.C., last spring, Peake was an intern at the Washington News Network. Running around Washington, D.C., with a press pass was exciting. The convenience of grabbing a bite to eat late at night or on Sundays is something I miss. Yet the sense of community here at PC is something I will never forget," said Peake.

Future plans for Peake include pursuing a career in broadcast journalism. Her theater major has not only taught her public speaking skills, but has also given her the skills necessary to be an anchorwoman.

"Theater has helped me because, in a sense, as an anchorwoman you are acting; you are selling yourself to a crowd," said Peake.

Peake found the American University experience quite different from her normal collegiate life in Clinton.

"An open-door policy where students may meet with their professors at any time and invitations to the President's home are unheard of on larger college campuses, such as American University," said Peake. "Students at PC take learning seriously compared to the apathy of students at big universities."

"PC has unique traditions that won't change, though the administration will," said Peake. "The adjustments the new President will have to face in order to meet the PC standard will take some time. She hopes that PC will remain welcoming and generous."

PC students participate in ministry to truckers

by Dan Hart
Assistant Editor

The guitars begin to play and the congregation of about a dozen people rises to its feet and joyfully sings out praise and worship choruses. Although the number of worshippers tonight is modest, the sounds of singing voices and clapping hands fill the small hotel conference room.

Chapel on the Way, located at the Days Inn off Exit 52 on I-26, is led and sponsored by PC students and members of Bethany and Lydia Presbyterian Churches (USA). Offering an informal, contemporary worship service on Tuesdays from 7-8 p.m., Chapel on the Way is targeted especially to truckers, hotel guests, and anyone in the surrounding community who is not already involved in a church.

A number of PC students are assisting the ministry at Chapel on the Way for credit in International Mission, a course offered by the Department of Religion. In addition, PC students not enrolled in International Missions have expressed an interest in Chapel on the Way. Students assist with music, preaching, hospitality and publicity, and about half a dozen small, Presbyterian churches in the region will assume the responsibilities of the ministry when students are home during break.

Chapel on the Way is "an effort to bring the Church to the highways and byways," said Rev. Herb Cottingham, pastor of Bethany Presbyterian Church (USA) and instructor in International Missions.

While the Chapel is not targeted exclusively to truckers, those involved in the ministry hope that truckers will take advantage of the worship services offered.

According to Cottingham, truckers are one of the least evangelized segments of American society. Because most traditional worship services meet at times that many truckers are on the road, many truckers have no opportunity to attend church. In addition, Cottingham said that many truckers do not feel comfortable at formal church services, and few churches have attempted to create an environment in which truckers are made to feel welcome.

"Most churches would not be pleased to have an 18 wheeler pull up and take up twenty of their parking lot spaces," said Cottingham. "Some churches even have signs that say, 'Trucks not permitted.'"

It's exciting to be a part of reaching out to people who don't have the same opportunities that we have to hear the good news of Jesus Christ on a regular basis," said sophomore John King.

I think Chapel on the Way is a good way to meet those in the surrounding community, also," added freshman Shelley Horsley, who has helped lead singing at the chapel. "I think I've gotten to know members of Bethany a lot better."

Cottingham has contacted Transport For Christ, International, a highway ministry based in Denver, Penn. which operates a chapel for truckers in Columbia. On March 4, Chaplain Ted Keller of this organization spoke at the chapel, which has been invited to become an affiliate with Transport For Christ, International. The organization will list Chapel on the Way with other similar chapels around the world in Highway, the monthly publication of Transport For Christ.

The first service at Chapel on the Way was held on Feb. 11, when the ministry was dedicated with a time of prayer. Worshipers have gathered at the Chapel every Tuesday evening since then.

According to Mr. Mark Kimball, a member of Bethany Presbyterian Church (USA), members of Bethany first desired to start a ministry to truckers over two years ago, but felt that, until recently, the Golf team starts spring season

by Charles Smith
Staff Writer

One word to describe the PC men's golf team is strength. Last year's team saw the Blue Hose earn a ranking of seventeenth in the nation and Head Golf Coach Tommy Addison feels that the men's team has a chance to reach even greater heights this season. The golf team is not ranked in the latest NCAA Division II Poll, but is ranked fourth in District Three North Region.

With all five starters returning from last year, the prospects for the spring season look very bright indeed. The starters include two seniors: Player of the year and NCAA-All American Chris Wilkins, and Chuck King; juniors Chris Eassy and Cliff Hicks, and freshman of the year Eric Williamson. Other senior team members include: Gabe Southards, Chris Owens, and Clinton Shuler; sophomore Seth Parker, and freshmen: Chris Dwyer, Cliff McKinney, and Russ Padgett.

"I feel that we have a really strong team this year, and I believe that we are going to do well in all of our tournaments," said King. "We are ready to play."

"We have already had four top five finishes in our fall tournaments, and we hope to continue that success in the spring," said Addison. "I feel like we are playing pretty good golf team right now."

The Blue Hose travelled to West Florida on Oct. 13 to play in the West Florida Intercollegiate Golf Tournament, the Blue Hose's first fall tournament. PC tied for sixth place. Wilkins won the individual tournament by shooting a 70 the last day of the tournament, giving him a one stroke victory.

PC was not able to defend their golf championship at the 1996 Richard Rendleman Golf Tournament on Oct. 22. PC lost by five strokes to region foe Elon College. The Blue Hose shot a team score of 595. Wilkins finished tied for third with a two day total of 145. Essay finished tied for tenth with 149.

The Blue Hose finished fourth at First National Intercollegiate Golf Tournament on Nov. 16. Wilkins finished in eighth place with two rounds of 149.

"At the Uwharrie Point/Pleiffer University 1996 Invitational Golf Tournament, PC finished tenth. The golf team shot a team total of 610.

The Nations-Bank Tournament on Feb. 23-25, was the first tournament of the spring season. The team finished tied for third with a team score of 612. Wilkins finished third individually with a round of 147. Williamson finished seventeenth shooting 154.

"We are a little rusty right now," said King. "However, we expect to improve and we will be ready for the next tournament."

"We are really strong this semester," said Wilkins, ranked 26th individually in the nation. "We need to beat some regional teams so we can advance to the NCAA Regionals."

The team's next tournament will be hosted by Elon College in Burlington this weekend. Elon is ranked number three in the region. PC can move up in the rankings if they knock off favored Elon College.

The golf team will have four more tournaments this spring. Addison feels the golf team has a chance to do well in all of the remaining tournaments.

Blue Hose take early exit in SAC tourney: team gets bid to NCAA's

by Windham Pridgen
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose men's basketball team did something only one other team in the history of the South Atlantic Conference has done, that is to finish the regular season with only one conference blemish on their record. In the last regular season game against the Carson-Newman Eagles, senior co-captain Andre Newman scored a team high 15 points to lead the Hose to a 68-57 victory.

The Hose entered the 1997 Food Lion SAC basketball tournament as the number one seed. Here it comes, the Hose lost to the last seed, the Wingate Bulldogs. Not to take anything away from the Bulldogs, who incidentally handed the garnet and blue their only conference loss on February 12, but the Hose should have stomped them. When looking at the box score, the Hose shot a very impressive 55.6% from the floor in the opening half of play. The Hose took the game's opening tip and flowed into their patented "hi-low" offense. Junior guard Patrick Johnson buried a three pointer and PC looked to be heading towards another victory. PC's biggest lead came with 12:40 to play in the first half as a running jumper by senior co-captain Kent Stallard made the score 13-7. Stallard went into the locker room with seven points and Eric Burrow had four rebounds. The first half came to a close with the Hose clinging to a one point lead, 30-29.

The Bulldogs came out in the second half on fire, as they outscored the Hose 11-2 in the first 6:21 of action. After an incredible shooting display in the first half, the Hose could only connect on 16.7% in the second half. To get even more grim, the Hose only made three baskets in the second half (not including free-throws). However, the facts do not tell you that the Hose fought back from being nine points down with 7:12 left to play. With 6:36 left, senior Brian Franklin hit a key three pointer to bring the Hose within six. Then, the Charlotte, N.C. native nailed another three-pointer that put the Hose right back in the ballgame with 5:55 remaining. At the 4:36 mark, sophomore giant, Eric Burrow, sank a layup that put the Hose within two points. But that would be as close as the Hose would come. Burrow lead the Hose with 14 points and seven boards.

"Mentally we weren't ready," said senior co-captain Ronnie Cannon, the 1996-1997 SAC Player of the Year, in a post-game interview. "We weren't playing defense."

"They did a good job passing in their motion game," said Coach Gregg Nibert, the 1996-97 SAC Coach of the Year in a post-game press conference. "They played hard and we didn't play hard enough. They deserve it."

Those who see the glass as half full see this as a loss that PC got out of their system because now the second season begins. Despite their early exit from the conference tournament, PC did receive a bid from the NCAA Division II tournament. They received a first round bye and a number two seeding. The Hose travel to Durham, N.C. to take on the winner of the game between Elizabeth City State and rival, the Elon Fighting Christians. PC will play tomorrow (March 7th) at North Carolina Central University. This tournament is somewhat similar to the Division I tournament, except the Hose are part of a 48 team field rather the 64 team field in division one. There are eight regions with six teams in each region.

Senior women complete season

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

Emotions were running high on Feb. 15, Women's Basketball Senior Day, as seniors Elson Manley, Watoma Williams, and Karen Neely stepped on the hardwood floor of Templeton gym for the very last time. These seniors played in front of family, friends, PC students and faculty honoring these seniors for what they have accomplished over the past four years.

PC smacked Elon by using a stingy press that caused 29 turnovers en route to a convincing 65-57 win. PC had three starters in double figures. Freshman Jill Neumann led the team with 19 points while Neely scored 14 points and Kelley 12 points. Freshman Laura Jones came off the bench and sparked the Blue Hose in the second half with seven points and seven rebounds.

"I was very emotional because I had a great time here at PC," said Manley. "It was fun to go out on a winning note."

"Being the last game was very emotional because it really did not hit me until the game was over with," said Williams. "I am truly going to miss playing with my teammates, coaches and the athletics here at PC."

PC traveled to Mars Hill on Feb. 19. PC scored 56 points in the second half, but it was not enough to hold off Mars Hill 101-94. Neely scored a season high 38 points and broke the school record for points. Neumann chipped in 15 points and junior Alcee Ridgill came off the bench to score 14 points.

On Feb. 2 PC took traveled to Jefferson City, Tenn. for an encounter with region foe Carson Newman. PC only scored seven field goals in the first half. Carson Newman took advantage of PC's low scoring and won the game 61-54. This loss tied PC with Carson Newman for a third place finish in the SAC. Neely led the team with 14 points. Kelley grabbed a team high nine rebounds.

"I am happy to be with our overall finish," said Beth Couture, Women's Head Basketball Coach. "All we need is three wins and we will be in the NCAA Division II Basketball Tournament," said Couture.

"I was happy with this season but I think we could do even better," said Neumann. "Next year we have a good recruiting class coming in so we will be better," said Neumann.

PC finishes with the regular season with an overall record of 13-9 and 8-6 in the SAC.

In the SAC Conference Tournament PC fell in the first round to Catawba 72-60. The Blue Hose shot 31 percent from the floor. Leading scorer was Kelley with 20 points. Ridgill came off the bench to score 12 points in 17 minutes.

Couture was named coach of the year. Neumann was named freshman of the year. Neely was placed on the all-conference team and Kelley was named to the second all-conference team.

Presbyterian to kick off inaugural club softball team

by Margaret Ellen Pender
Associate Editor

Anyone who spends much time examining a college will soon realize that the vast majority of the activities on the campus of an institute of higher learning are governed in part by laws which are taught in the business department. Yes, anyone who might have hoped to escape the curriculum of Jacobs Hall must realize that PC is no exception to this rule. Supply and demand do indeed set much of the agenda on this beautiful 212-acre campus.

For several years, Presbyterian has tossed around the idea of funding a women's softball program but for various reasons, including budget constraints and prospects for a coach, the idea had been not been places at the top of the priority list. The consideration became more serious, however, as the admissions department began to notice an increase in inquiries about a program.

We are admissions driven," explained director of athletics Allen Morris. "In fact, it was through the admissions department that the baseball program was begun again after it had been dropped years ago."

In an effort to expand the opportunities for women in athletics at Presbyterian, the directors of the college had been looking to add another sport for females. Since softball is already a SAC conference sport, it seemed quite logical that it would be considered as a possibility, given that there would be no difficulty in finding opponents, and given the growing national interest in the sport.

Blue Hose ready for action against top-ranked teams

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

With 13 games under their belts, the Blue Hose baseball squad faces many challenges and opportunities in the remainder of the season, including matchups with top regional and conference teams. PC's current record is 5-9-1. The Blue Hose has played many top teams in the NCAA Division II Poll. The squad has defeated three ranked opponents, three-time ranked Lincoln Memorial University 6-1 on Feb. 9 and twenty-sixth ranked Coker College 9-7 on Feb. 14. PC had its biggest win in non-conference play, third-ranked Virginia Highlands Community College 10-9 on Feb. 22.

Head Coach Bruce Kovash enters his fourth season of coaching. His four-year record at PC is 72-77.

"We have always played with the top 500 PC teams, but we have not been able to '96 these big games," said Kovash. "Now we are finally winning against these teams."

Last year's squad finished 27-24 over

The efforts of junior Larriane Collins highlighted the interest that existed already on the campus and ultimately played a part in the decision to develop a softball program. Soon after Morris was open to her idea, he was not in a position to act immediately. Not ready to abandon her dream, Collins met with Morris on several other occasions to reinforce the notion that interest in a program was indeed growing here on campus, just as it was throughout the Southeast.

With continued encouragement from the admissions department and the information from Collins, Morris decided to conduct an interest and abilities survey in hopes of deriving a concrete measure of the interest which Collins represented. The results of the survey did indicate that there was a demand for softball and thus the task of developing the supply began.

In the spring of 1996, Deborah Holcombe, a former All-American pitcher and then head coach at Southern Wesleyan (once known as Central Wesleyan) was named to lead the development of a softball program at PC as well as to assume the coaching duties in volleyball as well. Holcombe brought two essential weapons with her to PC, first in the arsenal was an impressive resume and an insatiable desire to win, both of which molded on the diamond. Secondly, Holcombe brought to PC her first official Blue Hose recruit.

Junior Shannon Seigler, who was recruited by Holcombe to play at Southern Wesleyan and was named as an All-American pitcher for her performance there last season, was converted to a Lady Hose and filled a key position in which a squad could be built. As any coach will tell you, the Atlanta Braves will show you, good pitching is the first ingredient in the recipe for success.

"Defense will definitely be the key to winning for us, and defense begins with a good pitcher," said Holcombe. "With Shannon on the mound, we will have a good foundation to build on."

The inaugural group of Lady Hose, who met officially for the first time in the fall of 1996, began a pre-season training program of running and lifting weights last semester. Though not much equipment had been ordered at that time, Holcombe held two practices before Christmas to determine the skill level of those who were hoping to be the first women to wear Blue Hose letters on the diamond.

While softball is classified as a club sport this season, Holcombe is building the program with knowledge that this squad will set the tone for years to come. Practices are held daily and the time is used to refresh those women who may be a bit rusty and to acclimate those women who have never played fast-pitch softball prior to this semester. Holcombe is truly a teacher and focuses quite intently upon mastering individual skills before "putting it all together."

The only characteristics that will distinguish this team from next year's varsity squad are that the Lady Hose will not be competing during the spring break of 1997 and that the team set most of their own training rules this year; next season, when some players will be receiving scholarship money, Holcombe will assume more a commanding role in setting team policy.

"Some people think that club teams just show up and play around and have a good time, but I am planning to win," said Holcombe. "Oh, we'll have a lot of fun too but we are going to surprise some people!"

The inaugural squad is composed of eleven players, four of whom are juniors, four of whom are sophomores and two of whom are freshmen. Outfielder Cassie Jackson is the lone senior on the squad, which is now the proud owner of a new pitching machine. The juniors on the team include Siegler who will be on the mound, Collins who will line up at shortstop, Sarah Nichols who will handle the duties at secondbase and Mary Kruse who will be covering right field.

Lauren Axon who will start at catcher, Michelle Tano who will float in center field and serve as a potential left fielder represent the sophomore class while freshmen Angie Mullins (1st base) and Katie Dobbins (left field) complete the roster as the "newest of the new."

Sophomore Heather Couch hopes to wear a Blue Hose softball uniform next season as well; unfortunately she had to undergo reconstructive knee surgery due to a basketball injury and will be forced to play a cheerleader/coach/encourager's role this season. Presbyterian alumna Brooke Fleming will serve as Holcombe's official assistant.

"Everyone is extremely excited about the approaching season and we are all very supportive of each other. We are still learning a lot but I think that we will have a good year," said Collins. "Coach definitely has a winning attitude and does not expect us to lose."

The theme for this first-ever Lady Blue Hose softball squad is "Building Tradition..." and the season ahead promises to be one of great excitement and once-in-a-lifetime memories. Holcombe is actively encouraging Blue Hose fans to join her and the PC women as they embark on a new chapter in Presbyterian College history.

Third PC administrator announces resignation

by Gray Lesesne
Editor-in-Chief

Ending weeks of speculation, a third PC administrator in four months has announced he will depart Smith Administration Building at the end of the academic year. Dr. J. William Moncrief, senior vice president of academic affairs and dean of the faculty, will accept a position as provost and dean of the faculty at Lyon College in Batesville, Ark. on July 1.

Students and faculty alike expressed surprise and disappointment in Moncrief's announcement, which will leave PC's administration on a shaky autopilot until an interim dean, likely to arise from the faculty for a temporary stint in Moncrief's office, can be named by current PC president Dr. Kenneth B. Orr in consultation with senior faculty members.

"This is a loss to PC, especially since so many other people are leaving," said senior Melissa Boyett, a Quattlebaum scholar who has developed a close relationship with Moncrief since her arrival in 1993. "It's now one less tie I have to PC, and future students will not have the same opportunity I have had to get to know him and to benefit from his wisdom."

Moncrief, who joined the PC faculty in 1986 insists that his departure is not connected to the retirement of Orr or the January departure of Margaret Williamson, former vice president for enrollment and

Moncrief

"I have not always agreed with his decisions. But I respect him, as I know my colleagues do, for his courage to say no when he deemed that to be the appropriate response."

"All of us at PC are going to feel for a while a little more tattered and raggedy because of the departure of this classy man."

—Dr. Dave Gillespie
Professor of Political Science

dean of admissions.

"I was dealing with Lyon College before Dr. Orr announced his retirement," said Moncrief, who began a search for a new college last spring. "This has absolutely nothing to do with his retirement."

Although many students and faculty expected Moncrief might succeed Orr in the PC presidency, Moncrief expressed no interest in moving across the Smith atrium to the president's office.

"I was nominated to apply for the president's position, but I did not follow up," he said.

Moncrief said he was under no pressure to resign his post from either PC's current administration or the College's Board of Trustees.

"I've seen my life in roughly 10-year lumps, and this is my eleventh here," said Moncrief. "For a person as well as the institution, there are some advantages to having new situations and new challenges. I think it's time to look at something else. I have one more 10-year chunk, and this is the time to do it."

His move to Lyon College marks Moncrief's desire both to change his academic setting and to continue his preferred administrative tasks.

"I couldn't see myself staying here until I retire," he said. "I see myself as a troubleshooter. I work with problems. The more you have success, the more you have to take on a role that maintains. There is a burnout level in facing the same problems for 11 years; administration is not a relaxing job."

Moncrief also admits that he's troubled by PC's "drift toward a larger institution."

"There's a special kind of education at a small school," he said. "Lyon has redefined itself to become an intentionally small liberal arts institution."

The 600-student Arkansas college, which is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church (USA), has slightly higher admissions standards than PC; 96 percent of Lyon's faculty possess terminal degrees in their respective fields, according to Moncrief. As provost, Moncrief hopes to bring more "definition and clarification" to Lyon's academic programs, he said.

And definition and clarification are precisely what Moncrief has brought to PC's academic program, faculty members said.

"Always reminding that academics is PC's heart, its soul, Bill Moncrief has built the size and, more importantly, the quality of its faculty," said Dr. David Gillespie, professor of political science. "Perhaps most remarkably, average SAT scores advanced massively while enrollment was increasing."

Gillespie had nothing but praise for Moncrief.

"Bill's tact, diplomacy and humor have taken the faculty through some stormy

ATLANTA—The presidential search committee moved one step closer to selecting a new leader for Presbyterian College with the interviews of five candidates on Mar. 24-25. While members of the committee cannot reveal the names of the four men and one woman interviewed, Joseph Nixon, dean of students, said that he is "extremely pleased with the calibre of the persons that have applied for the position."

The search committee is chaired by Dr. Fred Davison, a member of the Board of Trustees and former chancellor of the University of Georgia. The committee includes Nixon, five members of the Board of Trustees, SGA Vice President Beth Peake, Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion; and Dr. David Needham, professor of history. Dr. Frank Harrington, chairman of PC's Board of Trustees, sits on as ex-officio member.

The presidential search process began over four months ago with a planning session in Atlanta on Nov. 25. Since that time, information about the position has been circulated in academic circles and an advertisement was placed in the "Chronicle of Higher Education."

The College has also hired the consulting firm of John McRae and Associates, executive search counsel for educational and other non-profit organizations, to assist in the presidential search.

Although membership in the Presbyterian Church was not established as a criterion for the position of president, a number of members of the search committee have indicated that they desire a president who will uphold the traditions of the College and maintain the positive relationship between faculty and students.

"I would like the next president of PC to be someone truly dedicated to service, which is what our school stands on," said Peake.

Many students have expressed concern that a new president will seek to expand the size of the College, thereby damaging the community atmosphere on campus. But, according to Peake, Harrington has assured students that there are no plans to greatly increase enrollment.

Harrington did not return calls to the Blue Stocking.

Despite difficulties with scheduling that led to the postponement of some committee meetings, Davison and other committee members said that the search process is progressing normally and on track, and that they are pleased with the progress that the committee is making.

While Peake stated that she hopes the name of the new president can be announced at the commencement exercises on May 10, she insists that the committee will not rush the search process.

"This is not a decision to be made overnight," said Peake.

The search committee plans to meet again during the second or third week of April and hopes to narrow the pool of candidates at that time.

POINT

Moncrief departure creates awkward administrative situation

Will the last person leaving Smith Administration Building please turn out the lights? Dean Bill Moncrief's announcement of his July resignation confirms a growing sense of concern among students, parents and faculty at the mad dash for Smith's front door since College president Dr. Ken Orr announced his retirement last November.

While Moncrief insists that the college's academics and faculty will carry on as usual, we cannot help noticing the significant leadership vacuum that has been created by the departure of Margaret Williamson, former dean of admissions, and the impending departure of Orr and Moncrief.

The retirement of a strong-willed, hands-on president has created a domino effect upon a sterling group of administrators who have become dependent upon a pattern of collaborative effort for their success. We are convinced that this dependence was at least a factor in Moncrief and Williamson's respective departures.

There is no doubt that Orr's team has worked well together. But when all of the players decide to exit the game at once, times suddenly don't look as promising anymore.

We implore Dr. Orr to appoint an interim dean (or perhaps even a permanent dean) that is both familiar with and committed to PC, transition or not. Attractive candidates include former alumni dean Tom Stallworth, Dr. Peter Hobbie (who has administrative experience under his belt), Dr. Suzie Smith, Professor Ann Moorefield and Dr. Dave Gillespie.

College says difficult goodbye to hard-working Dean

It's a shame that PC is losing Bill Moncrief. His academic reforms have made this school more attractive to high-quality students and teachers over the past ten years. While other schools have allowed their curricula to run amuck with political correctness and unfocused academic pursuits, Moncrief has been relentless in keeping PC's liberal arts curriculum tightly on-course.

And he has a wonderfully human side, as well. A walk past his office typically reveals the Dean in his rocking chair in informal conversation with one of his students. He and his wife have welcomed students like family into their home.

We will miss the Moncriefs and their many contributions to PC.

America must re-humanize our death row inmates

Presbyterian College recently hosted a two-day workshop on the death penalty sponsored by the Office of the Chaplain, Minority Student Union and Celtic Cross. Rev. Dr. Ed Loring, a graduate of PC, and Rev. Murphy Davis, both of the Open Door community in Atlanta, Ga., led the workshop.

The central theme of the workshop was the humanity of death row inmates. Expanding on this theme, we discussed the ways society has dehumanized the 3,082 people who sit on death row in America today. We specifically talked about the vast difference between the way we perceive the people on death row and the reality of their humanity and morality.

As we discussed the disparity between our perception of people on death row and the reality of their lives, Loring and Davis challenged the participants of the workshop to perceive death row inmates as human beings with feelings and thoughts not unlike our own.

Loring and Davis said that this dehumanization of death row inmates is the main reason why approximately 80 percent of American citizens, according to one of Amnesty International's most recent investigations, agree that the death penalty is a just punishment for an unjust crime. People believe that criminals on death row are incorrigible and unfeeling savages who deserve to die for their crimes. In other words, people on death row are on death row because they are no longer human beings—they're animals. Proponents of this argument have dehumanized people on death row.

During the workshop, Davis said that the most odious injury we can inflict on human beings is to dehumanize them, stripping them of the capacity to feel and to grow as rational human beings. As I listened to her words, I thought about how my own experience with a man on death row has helped me to agree with what Davis was saying.

About three years ago, the same Murphy Davis introduced me to Jesse Lee, a man waiting to die on Georgia's death row.

Matheson hands over SGA duties

It's hard to believe there are only three weeks left of classes before exams and graduation! It has been a very busy year for me as it has been for all of you, I'm sure. However, it is winding down, and the 1996-97 SGA will soon be out of office and will hand responsibilities over to the newly elected executive council and soon to be elected class officers.

Elections for the Executive Council were held on Mar. 25. The new officers are: Summer Hendley, president; Mary Frances Patrick, vice president; Lindsay Fay, secretary; Michelle Ashby, treasurer; Tommy Rether, judicial council chairperson; and Tiffany Worrell, SGA president. Congratulations to all of you and I'm sure that you are in for an exciting and productive year.

My Turn

Dave Miller

I spent several weekends with Jesse Lee, and he and I became good friends. It was an unusual and unlikely relationship. He was a poor, black, uneducated man who had been condemned by society, and I was a white, well-educated young man from a fairly well-to-do family. Despite our differences, we shared our most sacred and most guarded dreams, fears and hopes. We laughed together. We ate together. We cried together. Most importantly, we waited together—for death and for some convincing justification for it. When the state of Georgia finally killed Jesse Lee, part of me died with him. He was my friend, and I loved him.

The workshop helped me to grasp Jesse Lee's humanity. Regardless of how we perceive the institution of the death penalty, we must recognize that those who are on death row are human beings and should not be treated as anything less than human beings. As Loring said during the workshop, "In the humanization of the murderer, I can find some humanization and healing for myself."

While it is true that the people on death row are convicted criminals, they are still human beings with the same rights and feelings as the rest of us. It is a great paradox that while Americans value the sanctity of human life, we have little difficulty reducing particular human beings to inhuman brutes who have no right to live. The truth is that we are members of a society that condones and even encourages state-sanctioned violence and murder as a remedy for violence. Knowing well that we cannot annihilate violence through violent means, do we not have a responsibility as feeling and thinking human beings to say no to violence and state-sanctioned killings?

Applications are on the SGA door for those who are interested in running for a class officer or RHA president. They are due Apr. 4 by 5:00 p.m. in Box 1060.

There will be a brief meeting with all candidates in the SGA office at that time to go over election and campaigning procedures. Hope that many of you wish to run for president or representative of

President's Column

Blythe Matheson

Finally, I thank you all for allowing me to serve as your SGA president during the past year. I feel that much was accomplished, and I want to commend the 1996-97 council for all the time and hard work that they put into making this a successful year at PC. Good luck to everyone as you finish up the semester, and especially to the Class of 1997!

Student use of Calhoun's minimal

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

A Friday night on the PC campus may lead many students to fraternity court, to Greenville for a movie, or off on another road trip, but not to Calhoun's, a social facility designed to be an alternative to PC's other social options.

While Calhoun's is in its second year on the PC campus, the facility has not yet reached the status many expected upon its creation.

When SGA first explored the idea of such a place, they envisioned a hang-out with a very mellow, laid-back atmosphere where students could gather and socialize.

"Calhoun's was built in response to student interest in a place where they could go and hang out that had a different atmosphere than Inklings or the fraternity houses," said Bryan Riddle, a Calhoun's student worker.

According to SGA president Blythe Matheson, Calhoun's does not fit the bill.

"It turned out to be something different than it was planned to be," said Blythe Matheson, SGA president.

"I think the whole problem is if people go to fraternity court, they know there will be people there," said Micah McCracken, Calhoun's student manager. "If they go to Calhoun's, they are taking a risk because there is no guarantee that people will be there."

Many students are disappointed because Calhoun's is not what they have desired, as many students and SGA members were hoping for an on-campus location that could serve food and even beer. Students wanted to have the convenience of such things without having to travel off campus.

Since Calhoun's is in a residential area, an alcohol license is unattainable and a cooking license would also be very difficult to acquire. Students aged 21 or over may bring their own alcoholic beverages into Calhoun's. One of the following may be checked at the door: a six-pack of beer, a four-pack of wine coolers, or one bottle of wine.

In an attempt to attract more students, the staff of Calhoun's has planned different activities and theme nights, including "Friends" nights, pool and darts tournaments, bands, DJ's, movie nights and comedians. However, Calhoun's does not have a programming budget. Little funding means that it is impossible to continue such efforts to bring students to Calhoun's.

"If we have a band come, there is usually a good turnout," said McCracken. "We just can't afford that every week."

Beth Huggins, freshman, went to Calhoun's to see Gary De Lena, a comedian. She enjoyed it, but was surprised at the small turnout for the event.

"Bands and other costly functions were not a part of the plan for Calhoun's," said Randy Randall, Springs Campus Center director.

Basically, it was built as a place to hang out, not be heavily programmed," said Randall. "It was for pool, TV, darts...occasional programming only."

Attendance on planned theme nights or TV nights without heavy advertising is minimal, said McCracken.

"Unless there is something advertised very well, no one even shows up for special events," said Matheson.

The attendance rate fluctuates during different seasons and depending on other on-campus activities that draw large numbers of students.

"It comes and goes," said McCracken. "Right now, it is gone."

Some organizations utilize the facility for meetings. There has also been an effort to initiate freshmen with Calhoun's in order to attract more student involvement.

"If one class would adopt it as their place, it would grow fine," said Bryan Madden, assistant Springs director.

McCracken agreed that if a group of students would establish Calhoun's as their hang-out, the facility would become much more popular.

"If this freshman class had taken to it, it would have been their place," said McCracken. "They would have integrated it into their four years and beyond."

Matheson sees potential for an improved facility.

"Everybody wants a frozen yogurt place," she said. "If they put that or a cappuccino machine in Calhoun's, maybe more people would come."

She also said that Calhoun's will doubtfully broaden its appeal without such improvements.

"I don't know how long it will stay in use as it is," said Matheson. Randall and Madden invite students to comment on the facility.

"It really hasn't been taken advantage of very well," said Randall. "I think everyone would appreciate some ideas."

"We'll take any suggestions students will give us," said Madden, "but we haven't gotten a lot."

Students say that there is potential, but are not sure of specific ways to make Calhoun's more desirable.

"There is just not anything that draws interest," said Huggins. "It has potential, but I don't know what could make it any better."

McCracken hopes students will come, and that Calhoun's will grow on its own without hosting bands or other such functions.

"If students would just come, they would provide their own service," McCracken said.

PC IN BRIEF

Books or bust: Seniors toss out bronzed likeness of Orr, adopt book fund

It's official: the senior class burst the bust. PC's Class of 1997 crowded into a full Springs meeting room Mar. 26 and voted down a proposal that would have established a $15,000 bronze bust of retiring College president Dr. Kenneth B. Orr as the official class gift, opting instead for the establishment of a library book fund in Orr's name.

College officials and senior class officers established the bust as the official senior class gift after prompting from members of the College's Board of Trustees, said Matt Bishop, senior class president. But Bishop's senior constituents objected to the bust Thursday night, and senior class officials opened the floor to debate on the bronzed likeness of Orr.

"Can't you spend money that will make PC a better educational institution?" asked Sonja Owens, a senior history major.

"Did we take a vote on this?" queried Jennifer Morris, a senior biology major.

"That's a lot of money," said Kingsley Moore, a senior psychology major. "Why couldn't we make a scholarship fund in his [Orr's] name?"

Other students supported a bust of Orr.

"I'd like to see something material with our class's name on it," said Brian Daniels, a senior business major.

"For Dr. Orr, a bust will be given anyway," said senior class representative Laura Cain.

Bishop opened the floor for alternative ideas to the Orr bust. Attendees suggested various projects, including beautification of the flagpole area on the west plaza, construction of a sign for the College's back entrance on Ring Rd., academic scholarships, maintenance of aging buildings such as Georgia Hall and the book fund.

After several rounds of voting, seniors chose the book fund named in honor of Orr as their official class gift.

Seniors will donate $20 per year for five years, according to Dr. Ted Brown, senior vice president for advancement.

"We're not asking for a tremendous gift," said Brown.

"I hope you'll help your classmates put $20 in perspective. It's not a lot of money. We're not talking about sacrificial giving."

In return for a $100 donation for the book fund, seniors will receive a copy of "The Things That Last," PC's coffee table book, in addition to a commitment from PC agreeing not to contact them for any further gifts within the next five years.

Board of Trustees grants tenure, faculty promotions

Numerous PC professors were promoted and granted tenure at PC's Board of Trustees on Feb. 26. Those receiving tenure were Dr. Kent Phillips, associate professor of education and Ms. Kathleen Vandekieft, assistant professor of music.

Granted promotion and tenure were Dr. Jody Lipford, associate professor of economics, Dr. Craig Powell, associate professor of chemistry, Professor Lesley Preston, associate professor of theatre arts, Dr. Jim Wetzel, associate professor of biology and Dr. Ron Zimmerman, associate professor of biology.

Dr. Sheryl Bair was promoted to associate professor of special education and Dr. Leslie Baylis was promoted to associate professor of psychology.

Dr. Charles McKelvey was promoted to professor of sociology.

The Board also approved the designation of emeritus status for retiring teachers Dr. Ron Burnside, professor of history, Dr. Lennart Pearson, professor of library science and religion and Professor Bob Strock, associate professor of physical education.

Spain holds potential for Lamkin and McCracken

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

With many seniors making plans for jobs and graduate schools, two seniors are busy packing their suitcases and applying for passports in preparation for a move to Spain. With four years almost complete, seniors Josh Lamkin and Jonas McCracken look forward to spending time immersing themselves in Spanish life.

Lamkin, a double major in English and Spanish, is from Columbia, S.C. and plans to attend the University of Granada. Following a two to three week orientation, he will be living with a host family and taking classes from Sept. 7 to Feb. 8. Through PC and the Central College (Iowa) program, Lamkin is seeking a B.A. in Spanish. He wants eventually to pursue a writing career.

Ever since Lamkin took Spanish in summer school, his interest in the language has increased.

"I want to learn as much as I can about the Spanish language and culture," said Lamkin. "It will be a big challenge to be an independent person in another country, but PC has prepared me."

While at PC, Lamkin has been involved in a variety of ways including participation in Leadership PC, Omicron Delta Kappa (the leadership fraternity), American Institute of Biological Sciences and Student Union Board concert committee. He also plays guitar at Inkings during open mic nights.

Lamkin has enjoyed his years at PC and made the most of his opportunities.

"PC has been a good experience," said Lamkin. "The challenging academic environment makes up for different aspects of social life because community exists in the classroom. PC has been a place for me to find out what I should be doing with my life and what I'm good at. But I'd be lying if I said that every day has been sunshine and I've loved every minute. But after being here four years, I've learned a lot and have been able to take the good with the bad. I've stayed focused on academics and friendships that have lasted."

McCracken, from Rabun Gap, Ga., with a major in Spanish and a minor in English, plans to live and work in Spain. In August or September he will go to Granada, find an apartment and interview for jobs. He would like to teach English to small children or to people who have finished school and wish to learn another language.

"I like the idea of learning something new by doing something different," said McCracken. "I don't want to graduate and go to work right away. I want to take advantage of my youth, and these are the kinds of experiences that build character."

Having been to Spain twice, once the summer before beginning PC and then one semester of study abroad at the University of Granada, McCracken has connections. The director of the Central College program at the University is trying to arrange job interviews for him.

"I'd like to stay in Spain longer than a year but no more than five years," said McCracken. "I hope to stay long enough to become immersed in the culture and traditions."

After his years in Spain, McCracken would like to find a job in the business world involving Spanish. He thinks a job in international communications or government translation would be rewarding. His dream job is a position in an embassy.

At PC, McCracken has pursued involvement in his own hobbies by working in theater production, doing photography, writing poetry, and assisting various volunteer projects. Some of his artwork will be on display in the Harper Center gallery later this spring.

"PC is not like a typical college, but you get the college experience," said McCracken. "You get to know professors and students more than at a bigger college. You learn about life outside the classroom and form a great many deep friendships in PC's small community. There are opportunities to broaden your horizons, search for identity, and experience things you'd never get to do otherwise. I recommend studying abroad to everyone. Some people say they learn more in their six months abroad than they do in all four years."

Lamkin's final words of wisdom are similar to McCracken's views.

"Make the most of it all at PC because it really prepares you for the world. Then take what you learn and go out into the world and do something you never thought you'd do. Challenge yourself. Life is about who you've met and where you've been."

Both Lamkin and McCracken look forward to all that awaits them in Spain. They would eventually like to get an apartment together when Lamkin finishes classes.

Students tune in to service...

Students listen to the music of the band Dean Dollar to close the Day of Caring held at PC on March 21.

Organized by SWS, SGA and SUB, the Day of Caring gave PC students an opportunity to work for approximately two and a half hours at one of four service programs in the surrounding community.

37 students volunteered their services at Laurens Memorial Home for the Aged, Senior Options, Laurens Literacy Council and Laurens Safe Home.

Sheila Hill, coordinator of student volunteer services, said that the program was very successful.

"The four service agencies were very appreciative of the help given them by PC students," said Hill.

Hill expects the program to continue in the future and said that two days of service—one in the fall and one in the spring—will be planned for the 1997-98 academic year.

Campus reflects on the 'departure of a classy man'

times, some thorny issues," said Gillespie. "I have not always agreed with his decisions. But I respect him, as I know my colleagues do, for his courage to say no when he deemed that to be the appropriate response."

All of us at PC are going to feel for a while a little more tattered and raggedly because of the departure of this classy man," said Gillespie.

Dr. Michael Rischbieter, associate professor of biology, is pleased with Moncrief's willingness to place more faculty members in overworked departments like biology.

The Dean is very generous in allowing his new faculty to make our program stronger," said Rischbieter, who joined PC's program under Moncrief's watch. "We're grateful for that."

And Moncrief finds a certain ease in his interactions with PC's 78 faculty members, 42 of whom he brought on board and promoted.

"The overall tone of the faculty is remarkable," he said. "There's a certain gracefulness here in working with each other that you don't find elsewhere."

Moncrief does not believe that his departure will have a significant effect on the faculty of PC's academics.

"I know them well enough to know that they're strong faculty and that they'll carry on well," he said.

A strong faculty and a strengthened academic program are hallmarks of Moncrief's tenure at PC, during which the College's enrollment and endowment have skyrocketed.

The dean finds the establishment of both PC's Honors Scholars and Honors Research programs among his best successes. He also is pleased with an increase in the number of students who study abroad.

"When I came here, we had three students studying abroad," he said. "This year, we'll have 97 or 98."

"Certainly, he has put a strong emphasis on international education as evidenced by the Oxford program and other study abroad programs," said Dr. Jody Lipford, associate professor of economics.

Moncrief cites the addition of an interdisciplinary studies program, complete with minors in African-American studies and women's studies, as an academic laurel that "we've achieved."

"And I'd note that it's we," Moncrief said. "I might have been a catalyst, but it's we who achieved."

Moncrief is also pleased with the addition of applied ethics programs on the PC campus, which he finds is partly responsible for the "tone of ethical concerns" on campus that he finds pleasing.

Along with many successes, the chemist turned administrator has encountered frustrations during his tenure as dean.

"There are things here that are troublesome," he said. "You'll find that everywhere you go. If things were perfect, there would be no need for administrators."

"The position could have been more satisfying if some people were more supportive of the program and what the faculty were doing to make this a better institution," Moncrief said, although he would not name specific individuals.

Yet Moncrief finds no major failures in his administration.

"I'm sure there are situations that have occurred that I wished would not have occurred," said Moncrief. "I can't regard them as failures; there was not much I could have done differently."

"Often, a dean must make a decision between two goods or two bads," he said. "Somebody has to make decisions. There's nothing I'm ashamed of or that I would do differently."

Moncrief's final walks down PC's West Plaza toward her academic buildings and faculty meetings in the library basement will likely bring a flood of faces and memories to an academician who has spent his tenure here building relationships.

"I'll miss being able to work with specific individuals on a regular basis, including students," he said. "When students leave, we're able to maintain relationships in a natural progression, and I'm used to e-mailing my former students. But with faculty, it's a different kind of ball game. We see each other every day."

But the dean already sees similarities between PC and Lyon College.

"People make an institution," he said. "And in talking with the faculty there, I can already identify some of the personalities we have on this campus."

And Moncrief won't be too far away, especially in the awkward and quirky months following his departure, thanks to e-mail and the telephone.

"I'll be available as a free consultant," he joked.

Greeks participate in campus, community service

Overall, Omega, Inter-Fraternity Council and Phi Kappa Phi.

Omega, the largest of the three, has been keeping the Greeks busy with service projects. Some of the most important projects are the Inter-Fraternity and sorority is its philanthropy and service projects. Both of these groups help to make brotherhood and sisterhood stronger and also add much to the community at PC and in Clinton. The Greek system continues to sell to the positive ideas of philanthropy, leadership, development of social awareness, scholarship and bonding.

The Phi Kappa Phi Fraternity recently cleaned a major stretch of highway in Clinton. The brothers also currently volunteer their time in Laurens Outreach, Thornwell Big Brothers, Ball's Buddies and Eastside Outreach.

The Sigma Nu Fraternity participates in the adopt a highway program. In addition to the program, the brothers also visit the Martha Denny school for an outreach program with special education students. Sigma Nu also raises money for the Laurens County United Way.

The Beta Phi Chapter of Kappa Alpha Order raised over $7000 for the Muscular Dystrophy Association through car washes, lock ups, and toll roads.

The Alpha Sigma Phi Fraternity sponsors a trip to order to support Canine Companions for the Disabled. C.C.D. is an organization which provides trained dogs for people who need help with everyday tasks. Most recently the brothers of Alpha Sigma Phi raised $150 for C.C.D. by holding a car wash in Clinton.

The Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity supports the Bob Waters Foundation, an organization that helps to find a cure for Lou Gehrig's Disease. Through toll roads, car washes and the famous "Game Ball Run," the Pi Kappa Alpha brothers raised over $2000 for the Bob Waters Foundation. Along with this service, the brothers also volunteer to coach youth YMCA basketball, help children at the Clinton Open Door and spend time with students at the local elementary school.

Service is also very important to Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity, the only national fraternity that created, organizes, and operates its own philanthropy. PUSH, an acronym for People Understanding the Severely Handicapped, is the name of this organization. Through many toll roads and the "Journey of Hope," Pi Kappa Phi raises money for PUSH. Beta Chapter brothers are also involved with service at Frampton Hall, Whitten Center and the Special Olympics.

Alpha Delta Phi Sorority has adopted two new service projects for the spring semester. Members meet weekly with fifth grade boys through the "Clinton Cougars" child outreach program and with the elderly through the Frampton Young at Heart program. Alpha Delta Phi's national philanthropy is the Ronald McDonald House, which hosts families of children who have lengthy hospital stays. To raise money for the Ronald McDonald House, the sisters of Alpha Delta Phi host their annual "Teeter Totter" at McDonald's.

Sigma Sigma Sorority has taken their various volunteer trips. These include a trip to Frampton Hall to play bingo with the residents and a trip to the Presbyterian Home to help the ladies there with their manicures.

Team solidifies itself through intense doubles play

Women's tennis team ranked ninth in nation

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

The PC women's tennis team has shown why it has solidified itself as the ninth best team in the nation with a 9-4 overall record and a 4-0 conference record: The strength of the team is the doubles play.

Kimberly Hampton and Chrissie Bolt have a 9-4 record. Dawn Dachelet and Martha Correll are 9-4 and Dana Davis/Kelli Kirkland are 12-1.

"The team has done really well this year, but the strength of the team is the doubles," said sophomore Correll.

On Feb. 20, PC traveled to Lander for their first match of the season. PC won four out of the six singles matches and all three doubles matches for a 7-2 victory.

The Blue Hose had no trouble against Erskine on Feb. 20. PC won a shutout 9-0. Singles winners were Hampton, Dachelet, Davis, Correll, Bolt and Kirkland. Doubles winners were Hampton/Bolt, Dachelet/Correll and Davis/Kirkland.

"Overall, I am very pleased with the way the girls are improving everyday," said women's tennis coach Donna Arnold.

PC had its second shutout in a row with a victory over Lenoir Rhyne on Feb. 25. This victory spoiled LR's first home match of the season.

On Feb. 28, the tennis team could only muster one match win against Augusta State University. PC lost 8-1. Davis and Kirkland won their doubles match 8-5.

The Blue Hose got back on the winning track with a convincing shutout of West Georgia 9-0 on March 1. Two singles matches went three sets: Dachelet (6-0, 6-7-2) and Kirkland (6-0, 2-6, 7-6).

PC shutout conference foes Gardner-Webb Mar. 4 and Mars Hill Mar. 5, 9-0 respectively. Single winners were Hampton, Dachelet, Davis, Correll, Bolt and Kirkland. Doubles winners were Hampton/Bolt, Dachelet/Correll and Davis/Kirkland.

On Mar. 8, the Blue Hose defeated Charleston Southern 7-2 but Charleston Southern did not go away that easily. PC had to tough it out with down the line winners and cross court winners.

"The team has been playing well," said freshman Alle Burriss. "The doubles has kept this team on a roll."

Women's tennis had a three match losing streak against tough opponents Stetson, Rollins College and Valdosta State. The Blue Hose lost five of the six singles matches to Stetson. PC lost 6-3. The tennis team was shutout by Rollins College 9-0.

"I scheduled these tough road matches to give the team experience and better prepare the team," said Arnold.

The Blue Hose came so close to a victory against Valdosta State, but lost 5-4. PC won the last three singles matches, but only could pullout one victory in doubles play.

"This was a heartbreaker and the team knows we gave this match away," said Arnold. "We gave it our all, but came up short."

PC got back on the winning streak with a shutout of UNC-Asheville 9-0.

The women's tennis team has two home matches left: April 9 against USC-Spartanburg and April 11 against Francis Marion.

"I would like to see a lot of fan support these last two home matches," said Arnold. "It will be very emotionally for our seniors."

Blue Hose show strength in wins on the tennis court

Men's tennis plays top teams in tournament

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

The men's tennis team is heading into a showdown with seven ranked teams April 11-13. PC will be competing at the Bloomsburg Invitational in Bloomsburg, Pa. For the Blue Hose, this elite tournament will pose the team against seven nationally ranked teams, including top-ranked Bloomsburg, Pa and fourth-ranked Millersville, Ca.

"We will play many top ranked teams in this tournament," said Bobby McKee, men's tennis coach. "This tournament will definitely help our region rankings come tournament time."

The Blue Hose have been consistent all year long in singles play with winning three set matches. A three set match can make a difference between a win or a loss if the match score is 4-4. Junior Tom Swift is pacing the team in the top spot this year with an 8-3 overall record.

The complete singles lineup from top to bottom are sophomores Preston Menning, Zach Loftis, Will Stewart, Chuck Webb and Todd Roemmich.

"All singles players have been playing consistent throughout the year," said McKee.

PC defeated archrival Newberry 9-0 on Feb. 25. Singles winners were Swift, Menning, Loftis, Webb, Ronnie Setzer and Barron Gossett. Doubles winners were Loftis/Menning, Setzer/Swift, and Jeremy Carl/Gossett.

The Blue Hose defeated North Greenville 6-3 on Mar. 6. This was their first home match of the season. Menning, Webb, Roemmich won their singles matches while PC swept the three doubles matches.

PC took on Lees McRae on Mar. 8 and won 5-4. Lees McRae is currently ranked ninth in the south region. Four of the top six singles matches went to three sets. PC won three of the four three set matches: Swift (6-3, 3-6, 7-6); Loftis (2-6, 6-3, 6-1); Webb (6-4, 6-4) and Roemmich (4-6, 6-0, 7-6). Stewart and Webb won the only doubles point 8-6.

"The team has done really well this year and everybody is playing well," said Gossett.

PC had its toughest test of the season against Elon last year's SAC champs on Mar. 10. Elon was last year's SAC champ. PC lost the match 7-1. Winning for PC was the doubles duo of Swift and Setzer.

The Blue Hose lost a heartbreaker to Carson-Newman 5-4 on Mar. 15. After taking a 2-1 lead heading into singles play, PC could not win another singles match to get the win. Swift and Loftis won their singles matches while Stewart/Webb and Swift/Setzer won the doubles matches.

"We are playing well, but this match was a tough loss for the team," said Loftis.

"We beat Lees McRae and then lost a tough match to Carson Newman," said McKee.

On Mar. 20, PC shutout Limestone 9-0. Swift, Menning, Loftis, Stewart, Gossett and Roemmich won singles matches. The three points from doubles came from Stewart/Webb, Menning/Loftis, and Setzer/Swift.

"We played a lot better against Limestone this year," said McKee. "Last year we struggled with them."

PC won the match with UNC-Asheville 8-1 on Mar. 21. PC swept all the singles matches.

"We are playing at the same pace that we did last year at this time," said Webb.

The tennis team has an 8-3 overall record. The new rankings will be out April 9. With victories at the Bloomsburg Invitational over nationally ranked teams Bloomsburg and Millersville, PC will better position itself for post season play.

The next home match will be Apr 7 against Gardner-Webb.

Baseball battles for SAC first place

by Windham Pridgen
Staff Writer

The 1997 Blue Hose baseball squad returns 20 lettersmen from its 20-31 1996 team a year ago. After 29 games this season the Hose are posting a 13-14-2 record (10) operations of their seventh 20 win season in ten years of ambiguous Blue Hose baseball.

The Hose returned from a successful three game sweep of SAC rival Mars Hill College. The Garnet and Blue whipped the Lions 9-5, 5-3, and 14-2 in the tripleheader. The Hose start a six game home stand on the Mar. 25.

PC's head coach Doug Kovash is in his fourth year at the helm of the Hose. He holds a record of 85-91-2 through the 29 games of the season. Kovash brings four seniors to the team this year.

Adam Cantrell, a 6-4 230lb. Stone Mountain, Ga. native, takes over the first base position after Eric Andress was graduated and took an assistant coaching position with the team. Cantrell is batting .222 with 10 RBIs and 10 hits. The offensive leader of the ballclub is Bucky O'Hara, a Fountain Inn, SC freshman. O'Hara is batting a whopping .391 on 87 at bats. He has also smacked 15 RBIs and 34 total hits.

"We have won nine out of ten games," said Mio Patrick. "We have scored a lot of runs and had good starting pitching."

Well, what about the homers? Roger Foltynowicz, a sophomore from Martinez, Ga. leads the Hose with 3 dingers and 21 RBIs. Foltynowicz returns to the Hose this season after being drafted by the Houston Astros in the 76th round.

As far as the PC hurlers go, two-spot sensation Jeremy Joyner leads the team with a 3-2 record after the first 29 games. Joyner, the Georgia single A high school baseball player of the year, also hits the grid iron during football season as the Hose's starting punter. Sophomore Keith Wilson leads the Hose with 50.3 innings pitched. The strikeout kings thus far in the season are Jeff DeCoteau (freshman, Brookfield, Mass.) and Wilson (Snellville, Ga.), both with 25 each. Junior Clay Hall from Hartsville, S.C. tied the single-season record for shutouts (former PC great Jason Bradley also holds the record) with two. Hall holds the single-season record for strikeouts with Bradley with 70 in the 1996 season. At the plate, Hall batted .287 with 10 doubles and 26 RBIs last year.

In the infield, junior second baseman Damian Patrick returns as arguably the finest defensive players on the Hose team this season. Last season Patrick record a .959 fielding percentage in 210 total chances last season.

PC will play Elon this weekend in a tripleheader. Elon is sitting in first place in the SAC with a 9-2 record. PC is third with a 7-5 record.

Upstate golf classic recruits volunteers

GRIENVILLE — For the past five years, Upstate golf enthusiasts and non-golfers alike have cheered behind the ropes and volunteered behind the scenes for the NIKE Upstate Golf Classic (formerly the Greater Greenville Classic) held at the Verdae Greens Golf Club, adjacent to the Embassy Suites Resort Hotel, Golf, and Conference Center in Greenville.

The 1997 NIKE Upstate Classic, presented by Buick, is recruiting volunteers once again to serve in various capacities during the NIKE TOUR tournament and its preceding events. The Pepsi/May/June Junior Golf Clinic, with truck shot artist Dennis Walters, and the Bell Atlantic/NYNEX Mobile Pro-Am tournament. From Tues. May 27 to Sun. June 1, the tournament needs volunteers to serve on the following committees: (concession), greenside hospitality, flagboards, marshal medical, on-course player services, scoring central, scoring (runner, stand and bearer, transportation and walking score).

More than 600 Upstaters are needed to help make the NIKE Upstate Golf Classic a success for the charities it sponsors. This year, all proceeds from the tournament will go to the Ronald McDonald House and The Salvation Boys' and Girls' Club.

Supporting area charities is only one of the benefits of being a volunteer. Other benefits include a volunteer badge (good for admission all week), free lunches and beverages for days worked, two "good any day" tickets for a friend, a volunteer appreciation party hosted by Outback Steakhouse with over $1,000 in door prizes, and one free round of golf at the tournament course, Verdae Greens Golf Club.

To volunteer, please call 864-675-0556.

The Last Word: Former editor rescues PC's back page

by Leighton Hart
Washington Correspondent

I promised myself I wouldn't do this. I promised myself I could go a whole semester without contributing to the pit of insanity and despair that we affectionately call "the back page." But like the junkie that I am, I have come running for one just one little dose. I'm also hoping that the powers-that-be will pick this article to run instead of something by that Farkweller guy, whoever that was.

And the timing couldn't be better.

Word reached me recently that administrators are dropping like flies in the wake of Dr. Orr's resignation. It's a national phenomenon. After the school missed the signing deadline for Dr. Orr, everyone else began to see the kind of cash that can be fetched in the magical world of free agency. Latest word is that Moncrief will be getting $2.5 mill a year as back-up goalie for the Red Wings.

All of this is not to say that PC doesn't have something to gain out of the whole affair. These times of transition can be beneficial for small Southern colleges like PC.

Last year, after Wofford's kitchen staff left to join the cast of "Friends," they stocked the kitchen with former stars of American Gladiators. Zippy and the Amazing Scooter have never been happier.

nior class is pondering the donation of a bust of Uncle Ken as their gift to the school. I'm all for it. But let's talk about the form that this thing might take. Being a somewhat traditional school, I would expect this little bad boy to be made out of bronze or something fancy like that. That's always a possibility and is respectable in its own regard. However, I was thinking that the Cadbury company could help out with this thing. What could present a finer tribute to a truly outstanding president than a giant chocolate cranium accented with a delicious creamy center? That would never work, of course.

The fellas in Public Safety would tear through that thing faster than a redneck can get to the video poker machine after work. If the school opts not to go with the gargantuan chocolate Ken, here's a serious alternative. I think we all know an Italian sculptor who's probably not getting much work anymore. We could always give him a call.

It's my understanding that progress on the Senior Village is being made in grand strides, at least on the part of the construction company. I've heard occupancy rates to date are in the 30 percent category. As a future tenant of the Senior Village (a.k.a. Happy Town), I can only express my most sincere concern over this. But I think I have a few things in mind that might remedy the situation. From the plans I have seen, these wicked little townhouses have more than enough space for 4 people to live comfortably, complete with kitchen and adequate closet space. As a service to the PC community, and since Admin will be deserted next year, I will volunteer to sacrifice my closet space to make room for the computer that will be running the entire school for the next several years.

Another up side to the vacancies in the Senior World (a.k.a. Wally World) is that the school will now have additional square footage on which they can start up many of the programs that have been on the back burner for a while. It's thumbs up for the acupuncture clinic. Green light for the psychic hotline phone center. Full speed ahead for the halfway house for violent offenders. Show time for the "gentlemen's club." You see the possibilities.

I have had the pleasure of spending this semester in the lovely town of Washington, D.C. as part of American University's Washington Semester program. And a treat it has been. So far, the program has certainly lived up to its name.

It's a semester, and boy is it Washington. It's much the same life that I had a PC, except there's only three days of classes a week, there's 366 million people in this town, and PC doesn't have a clean and efficient mass transit system. Otherwise the two are identical. If you like semesters, and you like Washington, chances are the Washington Semester is right up your alley.

That's it for now. I can now say with pride that I am part of the elite club that has been published on the back page this semester. Ernest, Mitchell, Brandon, Mr. Survey — it's a pleasure to join you.

Candidates visit campus

by Dan Hart
Associate Editor

With the 1996-97 academic year steadily winding down and the recent campus visit of two presidential candidates, faculty, staff and students anxiously await news of who will be chosen to lead Presbyterian College into the year 2000 and beyond.

Two candidates for the presidential office, Dr. Paul B. Marion of Mechanicsburg, Penn. and Dr. John V. Griffith of Batesville, Ark., were invited to visit the campus after being interviewed by the presidential search committee between March 24 and 25.

Marion is currently president of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities, an agency that works with 116 public and private institutions of higher education in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Marion and his wife, an elementary school teacher in a district outside Harrisburg, Penn., visited campus on April 13 and 14 and met with and fielded questions from faculty, staff, students and officers of the college.

With experience as a professor, an administrator and a public official, Marion has had experience working with both students and legislators and said that the various roles he has held qualify him to be president of Presbyterian College.

"I am experienced enough to come in as a seasoned leader but young enough to have energy and enthusiasm," said Marion during a meeting with students. "I am interested in getting back on campus where I can work closely with students and faculty."

While Marion said that he is "not absolutely opposed to modest increases in enrollment," he said that faculty to student ratios and the ability of present facilities to accommodate more students should be carefully considered if PC decides to increase its size.

"There are so many advantages to a small school that I would hate to see PC grow much more," said Marion.

Marion said that he believes it is important to increase cultural diversity on campus, to increase opportunities for female students and to appoint more women and minorities to administrative positions.

Griffith, who is currently the president of Lyon College in Batesville, Ark., visited PC on April 15 and 16 and, like Marion and his spouse, met with faculty, staff, students and college officers.

At press time, Griffith had not yet conducted a forum with students.

The presidential search committee interviewed two additional candidates on Wednesday, April 9. The committee plans to meet again in Atlanta on April 28. During these meetings, the committee will decide whether or not to invite more candidates to visit the campus and whether or not to interview more candidates.

Commencement plans announced

by Kay Owen
Staff Writer

PC seniors are not the only persons making preparations for May 10. The baccalaureate and commencement speakers are also preparing the day.

Four speakers will address the class of 1997 in various graduation services. The Baccalaureate preacher will be Rev. John M. Buchanan, Presbyterian Church (USA) moderator. Commencement ceremony speakers will be Dr. Kenneth B. Orr, Presbyterian College president; Dr. Ann B. Stidham, professor of psychology, 1997 Outstanding Professor of the Year and Cathy Clasen, 1997 Outstanding Senior.

Buchanan and Orr, the principle graduation speakers, will have approximately 15-20 minutes speaking time, and Stidham and Clasen will speak approximately five minutes, according to Beth Stanton, administrative assistant to the president.

Buchanan is currently the pastor of Fourth Presbyterian Church in Chicago, Ill. Presbyterian College will present Buchanan with an honorary degree during the commencement ceremony.

The Board of Trustees also suggested that Orr be the commencement speaker for the 1997 ceremony.

"He normally presides with Dr. Harrington, but this will be his first commencement speech," said Stanton.

Stidham's first commencement speech will be special to her because of the opportunity to speak before some students with whom she has special relationships.

"There are some people within my significant relationships in this year's senior class that epitomize my ideals for being here," said Stidham. "So, of course, I am very excited to be able to speak in this commencement."

The college chose Clasen to speak as a means of recognition. The Outstanding Senior is chosen based on conduct, character, physical fitness and mental ability.

The baccalaureate service will last approximately one and one-half hours, and the commencement exercises will be one hour.

The tradition of having faculty and student speakers for the commencement exercises began approximately four or five years ago. Prior to that, only principle speakers led graduation ceremonies, said Stanton.

Dr. Ann Stidham named 1997 outstanding professor by Gray Lesene

Editor-in-Chief

Famous for her eclectic personality, interactive classroom dialogue and warm interaction with students, Dr. Ann Stidham, professor of psychology, was named PC's Professor of the Year earlier this month. Stidham, who is now in her thirtieth year of teaching at PC, teaches courses in human personality and human services in addition to serving as a licensed psychologist in the College's counseling department. The award comes as a total surprise to Stidham.

"I don't like to focus on myself," she said. "I prefer to focus on others, and I get the greatest joy from serving others."

And Stidham's joy of service emerges in her academic work. Her courses, which range from counselling to human sexuality, find students engaging in interactive exercises, questioning panels of experts and lay persons alike and responding with examples of human behavior they have watched as "participant-observers" on campus.

"I endorse B.F. Skinner's definition of teaching," said Stidham. "Teaching is arranging the conditions to learn, surrounding students with the invitation to learn. People respond by being asked questions and finding their own answers."

Stidham began counselling PC students in the 1980s after being in private practice in Greenville. "Together, counselling and teaching complement one another," she said. "Where some people take their strength from research, I take mine from being a practitioner. Outside applications fortify my classroom ability."

Stidham has witnessed the growth of the PC psychology department into a five person operation with additional courses such as her human sexuality course, a class that she worked to establish over several years.

"There's a lack of understanding and appreciation of human sexuality as a global kind of concept," she said. "Part of my mission is to give people the fortitude to know what they believe and stand up for their own values."

Stidham's eclectic nature extends beyond the classroom or a casual visit to her office. She enjoys entertaining and finds herself happiest when "students are over and they're happy." Stidham also enjoys cooking, particularly pastry desserts. (She notes that she can make a "mean, mean pie.")

"Every meal you serve is a gift, a work of art, a work of spirit," she said. "I love to put people and food together."

While Stidham's food may keep many talking (she once cooked and hosted a dinner party for 60), her notion of fashion has turned a few heads on campus, as well.

"My outfits are who I am," she said. "Unrestrained...free flowing."

Stidham most appreciates the friendships PC has provided her.

"I most treasure the relationships with this college and its students," she said. "I see students as life-providers reaching out to me in a very benevolent way. And there's a sense of reciprocity, a sense of giving and receiving that I feel is distinctive to my place and my time here."

As a professor and community member, Stidham hopes that her community will be more open.

"If I could change anything, I would break the rigidity and lack of diversity here," said Stidham. "I'd like for us to widen the window toward each other for more diversity and forgiveness. I'd like to be part of that effort."

POINT

Salary freeze uncomfortable but appropriate

The administration's announcement of a salary freeze (translation: no raise) for the 1997-98 fiscal year is not what anyone wants to hear. We'd love to see our faculty, staff and administrators be among the highest paid in the nation. However, we must face the fact that we have limited funds and a large number of spending obligations.

Although PC faculty and staff probably won't see a raise in the fall, they do enjoy substantially more benefits than their colleagues in the business world. Staff eat daily for free. Many faculty enjoy June and July off to plan for the following academic year. Employees' children are eligible for tuition remission (both here and at other schools). Although a raise is desirable, College employees are compensated in different ways at considerable expense to PC.

Until the College is sure of admissions numbers and financial obligations for next year, we encourage the administration to continue its cautious financial planning in hopes of a surplus that might be used to increase employee salaries later in fiscal year 1997-98.

Retirees deserve fond farewell

PC must say some difficult farewells this month. First and foremost, Ken Orr. Orr, more than anyone else in the history of PC (possibly excepting William Plumer Jacobs), has transformed this institution into the success it is today. In an era where college presidents come and go, Orr's commitment to this institution and its purpose is remarkable. Dr. Orr, we will miss you.

Dr. Ron Burnside's grandfatherly retelling of history each morning in Neville Hall will sadly come to a close next Friday. Burnside is part of a dying breed of educators who come early and leave late, never missing a committee meeting or an appointment with a student. Burnside jokes about giving PC students their money's worth. With Ron Burnside, PC students got their every last dime.

Dr. Lennart Pearson's able leadership of the PC library (in addition to his many hours in the classroom) will be missed. Pearson, who also serves as an Episcopal priest, brought PC's library into the Information Age. We will miss his calm demeanor and his willingness to put student service first in the library.

Coach Bob Stock's physical education classes are among the most memorable of any here at PC. Stock's kindness, willingness to listen, friendliness and humor make him a rare breed; we commend him for his many hours in the classroom, on the field and behind the desk.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

I'd like to thank the PC community for its kind comments about the 1997 Pac saC. Two errors have occurred in the yearbook that I think warrant explanation. The pages of the senior section of the yearbook are out of order due to a mistake made at the yearbook plant. These pages were correct at proof time, but were mistakenly taken out of order by the plant. Although no one on the Pac saC staff is at fault, I apologize for the inconvenience.

In a second mistake made by the yearbook plant, several of the subheadlines within the Greek section were not published in the correct font that would have displayed Greek letters. Again, these pages were correct at proof time, but a mistake was made by the plant when the book went to press. While this error was also not the fault of anyone on our staff, I apologize to the Greek organizations that were affected. I thank you in advance for the understanding this college has always put forth.

Sincerely,
Jay Therrell
Editor in Chief, 1997 Pac saC

Some remarks from the Editor-in-Chief

I hope you'll allow me to offer a few insights and reflections about being on this side of a student newspaper for 11 years.

Student journalism is difficult. More than a regular newspaper, we're reporting about things that happen in our small community. Covering a community and living in it are difficult tasks, often, there's no distinction between editor, neighbor, student and friend.

Serving as an editor has been a challenging yet fun job. We've had fun ruffling a few feathers, but we've also had fun bringing stories of PC to you once every three weeks. Being journalists on this campus has allowed us to meet many people and do many things that we otherwise would have been unable to do.

I believe there has been a significant improvement in the quality of each Blue Stocking since our editorial team has come aboard. We are almost fully in compliance with journalistic style. We have attempted to cover more news stories and to increase our number of investigative pieces. We have invested time and money in our staff and equipment. We have worked to establish positive relationships with administrators that will prove themselves when dead line time looms. I believe our newspaper is something of which PC can be proud.

I wish to thank many of the folks who make this possible, including Alison Barnard, Leighton Hart, Margaret Ellen Pender, Dan Hart, Jeff Walker, Cathy Magee, our staff writers, Jay Therrell, Dr. Richard Baker, Ms. Gina Prosch, Dr. George Ramsey, Dr. Jim Skinner and Mr. Grant Vosburgh. I appreciate your allowing me to serve as your editor for one and a half years.

Hendley announces new SGA officers

I would first like to tell everyone thank you for electing me as the 1997-98 SGA president. I am looking forward to a successful year with SGA, and I have a wonderful council to work with. The class elections were held April 8. The new officers are: Warren McSweeney, senior class president, Rich Lassiter and Mitchell Moore, senior class representatives, Lindsey Wade, junior class president, Brad Blake and Shanna McAlister, junior class representatives, Christina Train, sophomore class president, Laura Nisbett and Bryan Riddle, sophomore class representatives, John Kimball is the HFC representative and Stephanie Jones is the Panhellenic Representative. Chris Thorpe is the representative for Multicultural Student Union, and Quinton McKissick is the new RHA president. Congratulations to all of you!

This new council is already busy planning for FOB. We want to make it a fun and successful time, so if you have any suggestions, please talk to us before everyone leaves for the summer. FOB leaders have been chosen, and big plans will be made at the SGA Retreat we are having after exams.

I would like to thank Blythe Matheson and the 1996-97 council for all of the hard work they did this past year. I would also like to wish the seniors luck as they finish up their time at PC. To everyone: good luck on exams, and have a fun and safe summer!

The buck stops here: college freezes salaries

by Alison Barnard
Managing Editor

PC faculty and staff members may see new administrative figures in Smith Administration Building in the next year, but they likely will not see any new figures on their paychecks.

College officials have announced a college-wide salary freeze for the 1997-98 fiscal year as a cautionary measure should PC not attract enough new students to fulfill current budgetary requirements.

"Realistically, we do not know where our budget stands and we want to see the condition of the budget before we give any salary increases," said Skip Zubrod, PC's vice president for finance.

Faculty members have expressed unhappiness at Zubrod's announcement, which includes no inflationary or cost-of-living adjustments for PC employees.

"I think the bottom line on the salary freeze is that it demoralizes the faculty and jeopardizes the quality of education at PC," said Dr. Michael Rischbieter, associate professor of biology. "I think that while the administration parades out our high ratings in whatever publication, the associate and assistant professors still find their salaries below the wanted 60th percentile (of our supposed comparative institutions, which we always compare ourselves favorably on every other area except for salaries)."

In addition to continuing to recruit and retain outstanding students, PC must maintain its commitment to recruiting and retaining outstanding faculty," said Dr. Brian Beasley, assistant professor of mathematics. "A major factor then becomes the allocation of a fair share of the budget to faculty salaries, and I remain optimistic that PC will honor such a commitment."

In addition to salary freezes, all departmental budgets have been frozen. College officials expect increases in necessary expenditures such as health insurance, utilities, financial aid for students and other necessities, Zubrod said.

The salary freeze is being implemented to decrease spending of interest from PC's $52 million endowment.

"Last year, our endowment spending increased from 5.12% to 8.9%," said Zubrod. "In the short-term, increases in endowment spending are not a problem, but in the long-term, it is not good policy. Since we are a tuition-driven college, we must wait and see. Last year we had a slight deficit, and we want to operate with care and caution."

Zubrod expressed optimism about admissions for the 1997-98 academic year.

He noted that officials are eager to see how the College's new early decision admissions policy will affect class size.

"We don't quite know how early admissions will affect our numbers," he said.

"Everyone wants an increase, no one likes a salary freeze, but we just need to wait and see," said Zubrod.

Completion of the new budget is expected by the end of August, according to Zubrod.

No booze for Sigma Nu fraternity

by Dan Hart
Associate Editor

Driving through fraternity court on any Friday or Saturday night, one will undoubtedly see a number of students drinking and talking in small groups on the front porch of each fraternity house. One without a Sigma Nu will stand out as the only fraternity at Presbyterian College with a no-alcohol ban on its premises.

The leadership of two international fraternities, Sigma Nu and Phi Delta Theta, recently adopted a policy that will prohibit consumption of alcoholic beverages in their fraternity houses. This letter addressed to Dr. Kenneth B. Orr, president of Presbyterian College, I. C. White, president of Sigma Nu International Fraternity, and Dr. Robert B. Felt, president of Phi Delta Theta International Fraternity, states that every chapter of Sigma Nu and Phi Delta Theta must have alcohol-free facilities by the year 2000 in order to continue to exist as a chartered group.

We are distressed with the excessive alcohol consumption on college campuses," wrote White and Felt.

"Recent research tells us that the abuse of alcohol in the form of binge drinking, especially, is at an all time high. While all of us can point to college fraternity chapters that do just fine, there are far too many that do not. Substance abuse is a large part of the problem; at least it is at the center of most of the problems of fraternity chapters that do not meet expectations."

According to Jonathan Hammond, commander of the Zeta Theta Chapter of Sigma Nu, international leadership of the fraternities has suggested a three-year plan to enact the no-alcohol policy. During the first year, chapters are encouraged to supply one event without alcohol for every event in which alcohol is provided. During the second year, chapters are encouraged to ban alcohol at every social function. And in the third year, chapters are asked to ban alcohol at both social and non-social functions.

"I personally have never felt that alcohol was the main factor in Sigma Nu," said Hammond. "I did not join the fraternity to drink, and I know that I speak for most of my fraternity brothers."

Hammond said that the policy will most likely be voted upon at the fraternity's national meeting in 1998.

PC IN BRIEF

Clasen named Outstanding Senior

Catherine Lynn Clasen, a senior from Kingsport, Tenn., was named Presbyterian College's Outstanding Senior Tuesday during the College's Honors Day convocation. Clasen, an English and Religion-Philosophy major, will address the PC community during its May 11 commencement services.

Gillespie named interim Dean

Dr. David Gillespie, professor of political science, has been named to serve as Interim Dean of the Faculty for the 1997-98 academic year. Gillespie, who is currently using a sabbatical fellowship to teach in Estonia, will replace Dr. J. William Moncrief, senior vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty, who will move to Lyon College in Batesville, Ark. in July.

Hartley, Decker win awards

Cadet Kurt E. Hartley, Battalion Commander of PC's Scottish Highlander Battalion, has won the Strom Thurmond South Carolina Cadet of the Year award.

This marks the second year that PC ROTC unit has taken the honor, with 2Lt. James Chastain winning the award last year. Approximately 20 programs submit a candidate for the award, and one winner is chosen.

"I am honored to receive this award, and it certainly speaks volumes about the excellence of our program to have won the award two years in a row," Hartley said.

Cadet John Decker, a senior from Pensacola, Fla., has been named the recipient of the Daughters of the American Revolution Award for the Laurens chapter. Given annually, the DAR award is based on academic performance, extracurricular activities and ROTC participation.

Judicial Council sentences student

The Judicial Council met on Mar. 18, 1997 at 3:30 p.m. to hear charges of a Code of Conduct violation. The defendant pled guilty to improper conduct. The Council deliberated the penalty and voted 8-1 to implement the following:

- 100 hours of community service work to be completed by Jan. 1, 1998.

- Required random drug testing (at the defendant's expense) designated by the Dean of Student Affairs at least two times per academic year for the remainder of the defendant's tenure at Presbyterian College. Any positive test would result in the defendant's immediate suspension by the Dean of Student Affairs.

- Disciplinary probation for the remainder of the academic year. Any Code of Conduct or Honor Code violation would result in the immediate suspension by the Dean of Student Affairs.

- Mandatory drug counseling and rehabilitation (at the defendant's expense) in a program approved by the Dean of Student Affairs; withdrawal from the program without the consent of the counselor would result in immediate suspension by the Dean of Student Affairs.

- A letter of reprimand to be placed in the defendant's record to be used in any further judicial proceedings.

The Dean of Student Affairs appealed the decision to the Presbyterian College Board of Appeals, which denied the Dean's appeal.

Strock retires from PC athletics, classroom

by Alison Barnard
Managing Editor

"Drink a few too many beers and you get a little loosey-goosey and, you might do a little more than just rub belly-buttons out there on the dance floor." "John, you still exercising? Keep it up alright!" "Alice, you still eatn' those greens? Good to see you again."

After 28 years, these memorable lines and many others will not be heard in the halls of Templeton Athletic Center. Coach Bob Strock, associate professor and chair of the physical education department, will retire at the end of this academic year marking the end to a coaching and teaching career.

Strock earned a B.A. from Erskine College and a Master of Education degree from Western Carolina University. Strock has been the head of the physical education department for 23 years and a Blue Hose football coach for 18 of those 23 years.

"I felt that with the transition of a new president and the departure of Dean Moncrief, it would be a good time to step down," Strock said.

Strock has many plans after retirement.

Coach Bob Strock will leave Templeton Center after 28 years of service to PC. Strock will be most remembered for his interactive lessons and other dynamic teaching methods. He and his wife will travel and play more tennis during their retirement.

"I have lots of things that I would like to do; I love to play tennis, and I am looking forward to doing some more reading," Strock said.

"My wife and I want to travel while we are still in good health; she has also started several 'honey-do' lists for me." Strock and his wife plan to travel to Nova Scotia, Canada and to the New England states.

"I have been involved through the NCAA Division II All-Star Game with a semi-pro team in Vienna, Austria. I would like to help with that team if the opportunity presents itself again."

"Coach Strock is a very motivating person who always carries a positive attitude towards life," said senior Ulysses Eaton who has learned from Strock during his four years. "He is a type of old school person who tells it like it is."

College officials are conducting a nationwide search for a new chairperson of the physical education department.

"I am pleased with the number of very qualified people that have applied for the position," Strock said.

The search committee consists of Dr. Rischbieter and Dr. Phillips. Strock, Dr. Moncrief and Dr. Orr.

"Because of our large number of coaching minors we would like to hire someone with physical education, coaching and administrative experience," Strock said.

The committee hopes to name a replacement by the end of April.

"I am going to miss my colleagues and the students," said Strock. "You know, it's the students who've kept me young at heart all these years. It has been an enjoyable experience. I have no regrets about spending 28 years here in Clinton, and I hope I have made a contribution."

Morris looks to a future in medical service

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

While seniors frantically tie up the loose ends of their four years at PC and anxiously await May 10, Jennifer Morris, of Aiken, S.C., calmly makes her plans for the future.

Upon completion of her biology major and history minor, Morris plans to attend Lander University for a nursing degree. She would eventually like to go to medical school and become an emergency physician or work with pacemaker technology.

"I've heard good things about PC graduates' acceptances to medical schools and graduate schools," she said. "That says a lot for a small school."

"I can definitely see Jennifer going into emergency medicine," said Dr. Bob Hudson, professor of biology. "She would work well with people because she's energetic, has a good personality and has the love for the field."

Morris currently serves as Emergency Medical Technician. As an internediate and a dispatcher for American Medical Response in Anderson, S.C., on the weekends. She is also a CPR first aid instructor both on and off campus. When she is at home, Morris volunteers for the Emergency Medical Service. Morris's seven year involvement with EMS accounts for her strong interest in emergency work.

While at PC, Morris has involved herself in areas outside of medicine. She has been an Residence Assistant, an FOB leader, and an admissions stirling. In addition, she has worked on the PacsaC, played the clarinet in the PC Wind Ensemble, played the saxophone in the PC Pep Band and has been the co-coordinator of the SVS American Red Cross program. She attends Westminster Fellowship and Broad St. United Methodist Church.

"I'm from a small town and a small high school, so I like PC's small town atmosphere," said Morris. "There are diverse activities and many opportunities to be involved even though it's small. I am able to be opinionated and be respected."

"A liberal arts education is important," Morris said. "You need to be broadly based in order to be flexible and work in today's world. I'm prepared because I've been exposed to so much like religion, art, and humanities and remained focused in my major. My biology senior seminar has shaped me the most. It was a different kind of approach to science that really brings it all together."

Morris thinks highly of the faculty at

PC.

"They are available," she said. "They take time out of their busy schedules and that is impressive. I remember meeting Dr. Hudson and Dr. James on my first visit. They really seemed interested in me."

Apart from school work, EMT work, and staying involved, Morris is a valuable friend to many.

"Jennifer is a bubbly person and she always puts me in a really good mood," said senior Kathryn Meehan. "Whenever I have a problem she's easy to talk to."

Morris anxiously awaits the future and looks forward to living in her new apartment in Greenwood, S.C.

Library director ends 29 year career

Dr. Leonnart Pearson, professor of religion and Director of Thomason Library for 29 years, will retire at the end of August, and will be designated Emeritus Professor of Library Science and Religion. Pearson will, however, continue to teach in the religion department for at least another year.

Pearson came to Clinton in 1968 from the library at Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, Va., where he completed most of his graduate work and also served as assistant librarian.

Pearson has seen major changes in library services at Presbyterian College.

"When I first came, the library was situated in the Smith Administration Building, where we shared the available space with the administrative offices of the college," said Pearson.

Pearson came to PC at a time when the college had decided to build a new library, and he and other library staff members were much involved in its planning.

"A library is much more than a warehouse for books," said Pearson. "We have all kinds of rooms and spaces in the building, and they have served the college well. Probably the most challenging year was the one before Harrington-Peachtree opened, when classroom space on campus was in short supply. Then, in addition to our regular library program, we accommodated as many as 25 courses each semester that met in the building, which made things pretty hectic at times."

The library houses about 155,000 volumes, subscribes to 838 periodicals, 25 domestic and foreign newspapers and offers an extensive collection of videocassettes and CD recordings.

"The most significant development in recent years by far was the conversion of the old card catalog to machine-readable form," said Pearson. "The THOMCAT project, directed by Diane Yarborough, technical services librarian, took years and an enormous amount of hard work on the part of our technical services staff. And it is just great."

With so many changes taking place in the way information is delivered, Pearson believes a new director will need to give close attention to developing new skills on the part of the library user.

"Many information resources are now 'long distance' resources, the World Wide Web being one example," said Pearson. "Students have to become informationally literate, so that their strategies for finding what they need will be effective and efficient, and so they can evaluate what they find. Bibliographic instruction, which we have done for many years, is being raised to a new level of sophistication. This summer, the main floor reading room of the library will be converted to a demonstration classroom for the teaching of such skills."

"I cannot speak warmly enough of our staff both past and present, including the hundreds of students who have worked in the library over the years, some of whom have themselves gone on to become librarians and media specialists," he said. "We are greatly indebted to those who make the library what it is, and the decision of the present senior class to designate its senior gift for library materials has been very well received both by the library staff and by the faculty."

Dr. Pearson is also Father Pearson, an Episcopal priest who for the last six years has served on weekends at the Church of the Nativity in Union, S.C.

Pearson and his wife, Carol, take pleasure in their children and grandchildren. Andrew, is director of the library at Florida Southern College. Ian is professor of music history and trumpet at Winthrop University in Rock Hill, S.C. Lanna, their daughter, lives in Columbus, Ohio, where she is mother to three children. The family usually tries to get together once a year at the beach.

What does a retired Library Director do with his time? "I'm not entirely sure, since I've never been retired before, but I have some projects I want to work on, and I have a stack of books thirty years high that I hope I'll now, finally, have a chance to read," Pearson said.

A search committee has been appointed to find a new library director, chaired by Dr. James L. Skinner, professor of English.

Emily Benthall contributed to this report.

History professor Ron Burnside will deliver his last entertaining lecture next Friday.

Burnside to become PC history

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

After years of serenading his students with the arduous, telling tales from near and far and keeping PC on its toes with dances such as the fox trot and the swing, Dr. Ronald Burnside, professor of history and chair of the history department, will retire at the end of the school year, marking an end to a 37-year career on campus.

"I have some mixed feelings about leaving, but it is time to close the door and let somebody else move in," said Burnside.

Burnside came to PC in the summer of 1965. A graduate of Wabash University in Indiana, Burnside earned a master's degree and doctorate from Indiana University.

During his years at PC, Burnside has witnessed the transformation of PC from a small wooded campus to a larger campus with a developed East Plaza.

"When I came to PC in 1963, PC had 500 students on campus," said Burnside. "Only 13 of these students were women staying on campus."

"He is one of the most respected faculty members on this campus," said Dr. Ronald Zimmerman, associate professor of biology. "He is a leader on this campus in all aspects of academics, church leadership and service to the college and the community."

Burnside was named Professor of the Year in 1981 and 1994. He received the PC Distinguished Service Award in 1987 and 1994. And for good reason, Burnside has a tough reputation in the classroom.

"He is the hardest but the best," said sophomore Charles Hannah.

Throughout his 34 years of teaching at PC, Burnside has traveled throughout the world to such exotic places as Austria, Russia, England, Greece, Italy, Turkey, South Korea, India and China, and he encourages students to study abroad.

Most recently, Burnside has been instrumental in cultivating student interest in a study abroad program in Beijing, China.

Burnside looks forward to additional time to travel during his retirement.

"As soon as I retire, my wife and I will go to France and see the sights and sounds over there," said Burnside.

Burnside will be leaving many memories behind, but he is going to stay in Clinton and become active in the community.

"I will miss students and my colleagues here at PC," said Burnside.

"We are going miss his smile and his whistle," said Dr. David Needham, who will take over as chair of the history department next year. "This Happy Hoosier left a legacy on international education and trying to prepare students for the real world."

"He has been a first class teacher and has set a good example of an accomplished, gifted teacher in the academic community," said assistant professor of history Roger Smith.

"He has built this department and has been very democratic about it," said history professor Dr. Charles Coker.

Students and faculty will miss Burnside's presence on campus and in the community.

"I have great admiration for this caring, kind, wonderful person," said Dr. Bob Hudson, professor of biology. "He always invited new faculty over to his house for dinner and that was very kind of him."

"Dr. Burnside is a fantastic teacher with an amazing amount of knowledge of history who is always prepared to talk with students about anything," said junior Warren McSweeney.

"Ron Burnside is one of those modest heroes," said Dr. Thomas Weaver, professor of political science. "He has done more for PC with as little fanfare as anyone I have known here."

Tennis teams capture regional and national titles

by Windham Pridgen
Staff Writer

The men's and women's teams hold an overall record of 11-4 and 14-4, respectively. For both squads the SAC Tournament begins April 24th and each team is looking towards victory before the NCAA Regionals fire up the week after.

Under the helm of skipper Bobby McKee, the men's team is looking extremely strong in the matches heading up to the conference tournament.

"We're unstoppable right now," says sophomore Preston Menning. Menning, along with fellow sophomore Zach Loftis, plays in the number two doubles slot and had a 20-13 doubles record entering the season. Loftis entered the 1997 campaign with a mark of 17-12. The combo beat the No. 2 doubles for the Bulldogs 8-6.

"It's not about the fuzzy, yellow ball," said Menning. "It's about cooperation and teamwork on the court. I know Zach's style of play and he knows mine, we're playing really well right now."

Team captain Tom Swift is excited about the rest of the season for the Hose.

"We are looking real good right now," said Swift. "If we keep up this intensity we could bring home the conference trophy," said the Columbus, Ga. native. Swift plays No. 1 and Menning and Loftis take the Nos. 2 and 3 respectively as far as the singles go.

formers and eight academic All-Americans.

McKee and his troops traveled to Pennsylvania to battle in the Bloomsburg Invitational on April 10 returned with a third place finish.

PC women's tennis team is looking just as strong as the men's, if not stronger

Led by junior Kimberly Hampton and senior Dawn Dachelet, the ladies have already clinched this year's regular season championship with a 7-0 regular season record. Coach Donna Arnold's club is ranked thirteenth nationally, first in the region, and first in the SAC. April 9th, the team blanked the University of South Carolina-Spartanburg 9-0 as Bolt was sidelined with lower back problem. Sophomore Kelly Kirkland filled in at the No. 5 singles spot as Alle Burriss took her spot at No. 6 singles.

"A couple of teams in the conference are a lot stronger this year than they were last year so it is a little surprising that we have done so well," said Arnold.

"We have a good chance," said Bolt. "Carson-Newman was missing a good player so it will be a totally different match, but I still feel we have a good chance."

"We are looking real good going into the tournament," said Hampton. Bolt's doubles partner and number one on the singles ladder. "I feel confident."

Rounding out the team are: Dawn Dachelet and Martha Correll, ranked sixth in the region, at the No. 2 doubles position and Kelly Kirkland and Dana Davis rock the No. 3 doubles spot with a 7-0 conference record.

Hampton is currently ranked number one in the region in singles and thirtieth nationally. Dachelet is ranked eighth in the region and sixty-eighth nationally.

"Both teams are playing great tennis," said sophomore Will Stewart, who is number one on the men's doubles ladder with Chuck Webb. "It looks like there could be two PC tennis teams coming home with trophies on April 26th."

Blue Hose set for SAC tourney

by Jeff Walker
Assistant Editor

After winning 12 out of 13 baseball games, the Blue Hose baseball team lost five out of the last six baseball matchups.

The Blue Hose were in the hunt for first place when third place PC (7-5) went to number one Elon (9-2). Elon swept the three game series and took sole possession of first place in the SAC.

In game one on Apr. 5, Elon stunned the Blue Hose by jumping out to a 7-0 lead. PC rallied, but came up short with a 7-4 loss. Elon pitchers allowed only four hits throughout the game. Pitcher Brett Fyviszor gave up six runs on eight hits in three innings of pitching.

On Apr. 6, PC played a doubleheader against Elon. In game one, the Blue Hose came close but could not come up with the tying run in the bottom of the ninth. PC lost 7-6. PC out hit Elon 11 to eight. Damian Patrick and Brad Bolonnen each got two hits. Jeremy Joyner was the losing pitcher.

After two rain delays in the second game, the game was finally called in the bottom of the sixth inning. PC lost 8-2. Only down 3-2, Elon exploded for five runs until the rain came. Clay Hall and Ross Mundy contributed to the PC offense with two hits each.

"We are trying to rebound from a tough week against Elon," said Coach Doug Kovash. "We are improving our play in every game that we play."

PC went out of conference and played Georgia College on Apr. 10. PC got behind 6-0, before cutting the deficit to 6-4. The Blue Hose produced a lot of hits but it was not enough with a 9-4 loss. Hall, Brach Teal and Roger Polynowicz all got two hits while Ly Bouknight got three hits.

"We lost a huge three game series with Elon, but we can still win the SAC Tournament in April," said sophomore Greg Bolt, a transfer student from Kennesaw State University.

The Blue Hose hosted a three game series with Carson Newman on Apr. 12-13. In the first game of a doubleheader, Carson Newman exploded for a 3-0 lead. PC fought back, but their rally fell short 4-2. In the second game of the afternoon, the Blue Hose lost 6-1. Jell DeCoteau (2-4) gave up six runs in five innings of pitching. PC was held to three hits.

PC played a near-perfect game in the third game of the series with a 6-0 win. Keith Wilson pitched seven innings of shutout ball while striking out five. Bouknight and Teal gave PC the offense needed with each hitting the ball twice.

"Our strengths right now are the pitching and stealing of bases," said Kovash. "Our hitting has left us at times this year."

The Blue Hose have a 23-22 overall record and a 8-10 SAC record. The SAC Tournament starts Apr. 24 in Salisbury, N.C. The next home game will be Apr. 18 against rival Newberry College.

Success and new directions for Blue Hose
by Margaret Ellen Pender, Associate Editor

Volleyball: Under the reign of new head coach Debbie Holcombe, the Lady Hose posted a 31-7 overall record (10-4 SAC) and captured the South Atlantic Conference Tournament Championship. Senior Watoma Williams was named Player of the Year and first team all-conference for the SAC; additionally she was chosen as a member of the all-region squad. Junior Beth Mann was also selected first team all-conference and junior Erin Olson was named to the second team. Elected to the SAC All-Tournament team were seniors Williams and Jenny Frieling and juniors Mann and Olson.

Women's Soccer: With five players designated as first team All SAC (Elizabeth Roe, Diane Hancock, Brooke Wright, Emily Campbell, Rebecca Erdman) and 15 All-Conference (6-0-1 SAC), the Lady Hose achieved a ranking of fourth in the nation. Coach Brian Purcell, the SAC Coach of the Year, led the Hose to the co-championship of the South Atlantic Conference and the tournament championship. Heather Jones and Lisa Becker were selected for second team All SAC honors and Roe, Wright, Becker, Campbell, Susan Cook, and Diane Hancock were chosen for the All Tournament squad. Roe was named tournament MVP and was granted a place on the CoSIDA All-Region first team and CoSIDA All-American second team. Joining Roe on the All-Region first team and All-American second team was Wright while Becker received All-Region second team accolades.

Football: After shocking conference rival Catawba College to claim a 19-15 homecoming victory, the Hose were tied for the top ranking in the SAC. Various injuries contributed to the slide which followed, but the Hose complete the season with a respectable 5-6 overall record (4-3 SAC). Senior lineman Butch Estes was honored as a first team All-Conference selection while sophomore Troy Gamble and freshman Chuckie Smith received invitations to second team All SAC status. In addition to his SAC recognition, Estes was designated CoSIDA All-Region and was selected for the prestigious 1997 Snow Bowl. Other breaking news for the Hose included the hiring of a new coach, Darl Dickie, to lead the program into the 1997-1998 season.

Men's Basketball: During mid-February, the Blue Hose men ranked second in the country among Division II schools in rebounding margin and seventh in the country in points allowed per game. PC finished the season with a 20-6 record, clinched the regular season championship and held the number fifteen slot in the final national rankings. Senior Rountie Cannon and sophomore Eric Burrow were selected for first team All SAC honors, and Cannon was named conference Player of the Year and honorable mention All-American by the Division II Bulletin. Burrow was also designated second team All District while head coach Greg Nibert reaped Coach of the Year accolades.

Women's Basketball: After sharing the top ranking in the conference for a few weeks early in the season, the Lady Hose faltered a bit during the middle of the season. Ultimately, however, PC posted a 17-10 overall record and were tied for third place in the SAC. Senior Karen Noddy was chosen as first team All-Conference and junior Tonya Kelly was named to the second team. For her efforts with a relatively young squad, head coach Beth Couture was given the title of Coach of the Year. Additionally, Jill Neumann was selected as Freshman of the Year for the South Atlantic Conference.

Men's Soccer: At one point in the season, the Blue Hose men's soccer team was ranked sixth in the nation. They were the co-champions of the SAC for the regular season and claimed the South Atlantic Conference tournament championship. The Blue Hose final record was 15-4-3 and landed them a final national ranking was nineteenth. Senior Jimmy May was selected as Player of the Year for the SAC and was joined on the first team all-conference squad by juniors Bryan Ridgley and Jeremy Ransom. Seniors Dick Hiller (tournament MVP) and Clint Galloway were named second team All-SAC and were placed on the SAC All-Tournament team along with May, Ransom and Todd Anderson.

Golf: Currently, Presbyterian's golf team is ranked twenty-second in the country and has notched nine first place finishes, one second place finish and three third place finishes. With the five starters returning from last season leading the way, the Hose have been impressive. Senior Chris Wilkins, the 1996-1997 Player of the Year and an NCAA All-American, has the best average in the region and holds the number six spot in the district.

Cross Country: Though the Hose competed at the club level this year, Presbyterian cross country will gain full varsity status next season and will again be led by head coach Laura Timmons, who is a 1994 graduate of PC. Running in four meets last fall, the Blue Hose men's and women's squads placed several times and both segments walked away in the top three from the Wingate meet. This mini-season solidified the belief that there is sufficient interest in the sport here on campus.

Softball ready for varsity status

by Charles Smith
Staff Writer

The dream of a women's varsity softball team at PC is fast becoming a reality. For Coach Debbie Holcombe, next season cannot arrive fast enough. When the women of PC's softball team take the field next season, they will vie for a championship.

Currently, the PC women's softball team is a club program with no scholarships and no chance to compete in post season play. Yet Holcombe and the rest to compete for post-season play.

The team's most recent opponents include Newberry, Mars Hill, Southern Methodist and Lenoir Rhyne. The Blue Hose lost a double header to Newberry, won two games against Mars Hill, split a double header with Spartanburg Methodist and split another double header against Lenoir Rhyne.

In the Lenoir Rhyne game, the team played a very good defensive game, but the offensive effort was disappointing, said Holcombe.

"Our goal is to have a good defensive game," said Holcombe. "Defense is the key, because, if the team is not hitting the ball well that is one thing, but to be competitive our defense must be solid."

Blue Hose pitcher Shannon Seigler pitched a one-hitter in the Mars Hill game. Other team standouts include centerfielder Michelle Tano, catcher Lauren Axson, third baseman Heather Phillips, right fielder Mary Kruse and second baseman Sarah Nichols at second base. The captains of the team are shortstop Larraine Collins, Seigler and Axson.

The team will begin practicing for next season in the fall, and the season will begin next February.

"The girls are really excited about being a part of this new team," Holcombe said. "Right now our goal is to have a winning season."

Freshmen and transfers welcomed to campus, SGA and FOB shine

By Kay Owen
Campus Life Editor

Freshmen arrived on campus August 29 and were greeted by Freshman Orientation Board leaders anxious to transport luggage to their empty rooms.

"The help with moving in was good," said Tricia Alexander, a freshman from Columbia, S.C. "It would have taken my family ten trips."

After the freshmen met roommates, built lofts, unpacked clothes and said good-bye to parents, siblings and friends, orientation began. The weekend started with meetings with their groups and instruction from Student Government Association leaders. A scavenger hunt followed, with freshmen racing across campus and through Clinton with leaders in tow.

The theme for the weekend was a disco tribute, "I Will Survive." After meals and placement tests on Saturday, the main entertainment event was a disco dance in the Springs gym. Freshmen, SGA, and FOB leaders donned their flashiest retro fashions and experienced a little "Saturday Night Fever."

SGA member Mitchell Moore thought the disco was well-attended.

"People showed up," he said. "Not everyone had fun, some people left early, but it was more fun than it we had Blizzard of Bucks again. What we wanted to achieve with the disco was achieved."

"Students, especially the freshmen, came and were excited being dressed up in their 70's costumes," said FOB leader William Reese. "I thought a lot of spirit was shown. We had a good DJ."

Freshmen attended orientation seminars with Multicultural Student Union, Student Volunteer Services, the ROTC program, residence life, student affairs and the Judicial Council. Freshmen also experienced worship services in Belk Auditorium and field day on the East Plaza. Field day entailed several relay races, music and group competition. It culminated in a massive shaving cream attack by the FOB and SGA on the freshmen, who were strategically grouped in front of Clinton Dorm for a picture.

"I don't like getting hit with shaving cream, but a lot of people probably don't mind it," said Alexander.

The annual signing of the Honor Code in the Harper Center followed a formal buffet dinner in Greenville Dining Hall, where freshmen learned the responsibility and obligation PC's Honor Code entails. Alexander said she felt like the ceremony was serious and made the point, but it was not necessarily intimidating to her. After the signing ceremony, freshmen experienced the traditional receiving line with interim president Dr. Thomas Reeves, interim vice president for academic affairs Dr. David Gillespie, and other members of the administration. The reception was catered by the GDH staff.

Orientation ended with the usual "Fame" awards and video ceremony where freshmen and their group leaders relived the past four days and laughed through the events of another PC FOB weekend.

Opinions among the freshmen differed in relation to the success of the weekend.

"It's a good way to begin meeting different people that aren't those you knew from high school," said Alexander. "Also if you have any question you can ask a leader. It keeps you busy so you have something to do in the afternoons."

Reese agreed that the FOB weekend helps freshmen get involved in PC life.

The walls are bare in the office that Dr. Kenneth B. Orr occupied for 19 years. A tidy collection of papers adorns the large wooden desk. But don't be deceived by the stark appearance. There is still plenty of work being done in the President's office.

In his role as interim president of Presbyterian College, Dr. Thomas Reeves will have his hands full for the next several months.

But Reeves, a 1957 PC graduate, is no stranger to college administration. Indeed, he has made it his occupation. Most recently president of Hastings College in Hastings, Neb., Reeves feels he is up to the challenge of leading his alma mater.

"I would think the biggest task would be monitoring important areas such as admissions, financial aid, and various budget issues during the fall semester," he said.

This unique assignment holds responsibilities that extend beyond the walls of Smith Administration Building.

In addition to his job supervising the daily operation of the college, Reeves believes he has an obligation to PC to create an appropriate climate for the arrival of Dr. John Griffith, PC's new president. According to Reeves, during periods of transition between presidents, colleges can take one of two very distinct routes. First, resistance to change can foster feelings of suspicion on campus and can undermine the efforts of the new leader. The second, the route down which Reeves would like to lead PC, is one where a feeling of excitement pervades the campus.

If all goes according to Reeves's plans, "I will help to create a feeling of enthusiasm for this very historic event," he said.

If Reeves can impart just half of his confidence in Dr. Griffith upon the PC community, he will have accomplished his objective. Reeves has no shortage of praise for the man who will be PC's next president.

"I don't think I have ever met anyone that has impressed me like John Griffith," he said.

In the meantime, to pave the way for Griffith's arrival, Reeves will call upon the leadership skills he has refined in his more than 30 years in higher education. He believes the similarities between Hastings College and PC will make his job that much easier.

"Hastings is the identical twin of Presbyterian College," he said. "It has roughly the same enrollment, and the same quality of academics... it's really a clone."

In addition to his duties at PC, Reeves continues to serve the Williston Presbyterian Church as pastor for their Sunday services.

College scores a thumbs-up for construction of townhouse village

Just under two years after the introduction of PC's Harrington-Peachtree Academic Center, three new buildings tastefully decorate the campus.

Construction of the new townhouse village is near completion on the easternmost reaches of campus. The buildings, which can house up to 24 students apiece, reflect quality inside and out. It is evident that Presbyterian College is just as committed to ensuring the comfort of its students as it is to providing top-quality academic facilities and faculty.

The project has faced a few imperfections. Unfortunately, those students living in Building C have not been able to take residence there. This has been a serious inconvenience to many students, but construction delays should not be allowed to overshadow the positive aspects of this endeavor.

Congratulations and thanks to all who made this project possible.

New look, leadership for Blue Stocking

The team of editors that will form the core of the 1997-1998 Blue Stocking has been assembled. While this new staff brings a wealth of talent to the table, it does not bring a tremendous amount of experience. We couldn't be more pleased with that arrangement.

The relative inexperience of this group will prove to be an asset as we pursue these three objectives: 1) to provide quality coverage of news and sports events, and provide feature stories of interest to the Presbyterian College community; 2) to train interested students in the elements of newspaper production, and; 3) to develop and foster open lines of communication between all members of the college community.

The Blue Stocking you will receive every three weeks has received an external facelift. These improvements have been made to give the paper a more modern appearance.

We are satisfied with the outward appearance of the newspaper, and we hope that it will reflect well the internal improvements we have made. These internal improvements mark a true contrast between the ninety-third volume of the Blue Stocking and those of years past.

MY TURN
DAN HART

In recent years, much of American Protestantism (and to some extent Catholicism) has engaged in a controversial debate over what is appropriate in worship, consequently, much of the Church has separated into two ideological camps—one that favors "traditional" or liturgical worship and one that favors a more "contemporary" or charismatic worship style. During this past year, I have often thought about the unique exposure that I have had to this debate, for I have been influenced in many ways by both camps.

Often I get together with a small group of friends and sing songs of praise and worship to the accompaniment of the guitar. I love informal times of worship such as these when, bound together by our common faith in Jesus Christ, my friends and I can freely share what God means to us and the ways that God is moving in our lives.

I also love attending the very "traditional" services at my grey stoned church at home. Reciting the Nicene Creed and the Lord's Prayer and singing the great hymns of the faith allows me to bond with believers who, although long departed from this earth, felt the same struggles, temptations, joys and victories that are all part of the Christian life.

So who is right? I suggest that perhaps both camps are right. In a recent issue of Regeneration Quarterly, Scot Sherman, a Presbyterian minister in Greenwich Village, New York City, writes that the tension between the traditional and the contemporary is nothing new to Reformed churches.

Reformed worship has always been a matter of stretching backwards and forwards at the same time. The Reformers, after all, did not just invent their liturgies. The built on what they saw as the best of the past with a view to addressing the issues of the present.

Worship in the reformed tradition, then, should be both traditional and contemporary.

The questions about worship that we struggle with today are remarkably similar to the issues that faced Luther, Calvin and the other Reformers almost five hundred years ago. The youngest generation of Americans, raised on MTV, remote control and the internet, is largely unfamiliar with the Church and uncomfortable with traditional church services. Like the Church of the Sixteenth Century, the Church of the Twenty-First Century must ask how the Gospel can be presented in a manner that is both understandable to the masses and true to the unchanging, age-old message of the Scriptures. The challenge to the body of believers in this nation during the next century is to engage in worship that is understandable and approachable to a new generation of Americans and that, at the same time, allows us to share a common bond with all believers of all ages.

SGA has extensive plans for new year

Hello everyone, and welcome back to PC! I hope everyone had a great summer and is ready to start back up. We certainly have a great year to look forward to.

At the end of last semester SGA had a retreat at Camp Fellowship. We discussed highlights and lowlights of the past year and set goals for the 1997-1998 year. SGA then had the opportunity to meet with the officers and administration before the start of school to share everything that was accomplished at our retreat. It was exciting to work with the interim president, Dr. Reeves, and to discuss the arrival of the new president, Dr. Griffith. We made many plans to work together in a year of transition.

We also planned for Freshman Orientation at our retreat. The FOB theme this year was "I Will Survive!" The excitement of the freshmen and the hard work of the SGA officers and the FOB/TOB leaders made Freshman Orientation very successful!

Freshman class elections will begin next week. Freshman officers include freshman class president and two freshman representatives. I would like to encourage all of the freshmen to run. You can pick up an application from the door of the SGA office beginning Monday, September 8, and there will be a meeting held that afternoon for all applicants. Speeches will be heard in Springs on Monday, September 15, and elections the following Tuesday.

We will also have applications available for junior class president. Lindsay Wade was elected as the 1997-1998 junior class president, but she decided to transfer over the summer because of her major. SGA has many plans in the making for this year. If you need anything from us, please let us know. We invite each of you to join us at our meetings and to participate in all of the events that we sponsor. Once it has been decided, we will be posting the meeting times at events around campus.

Well, I hope everyone has a very good start this year. I would like to say good luck to the class of 2001, and to the seniors - make the best of this last year at PC!

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council finds student not guilty of lying to college official

The Judicial Council met on the afternoon of April 22, 1997 to hear a case involving a Honor Code violation. The charge was lying to a college official about absences. The defendant pled not guilty to the charge and the prosecution was allowed to present its case. The prosecution called no witnesses and recommended the normal punishment. The defense was then allowed to present its arguments. The defendant took the stand and was questioned by the Council. The defense also presented a character witness for the defendant. After closing arguments the Chairman cleared the hearing room and deliberated on a verdict. Due to complications, the defendant called back in to take the stand and answer questions. Again the room was cleared and the Council on the first official vote found the defendant not guilty. Findings of not guilty are not subject to appeal under the current system.

FOB successful once more

"It's a good experience for freshmen to get to know one another, get active in school life and become acquainted with school activities," said Reese. "It's a lot of fun for everybody involved."

Alexander also liked the fact that all the information was presented to the class during a few days.

"I think it's better to get everything in a few days," she said, "because we don't know what there is to do here. We did have some time to visit people and the busy schedule gets it in at one time."

Reese thought the schedule was somewhat rigorous and could be more effective if more seminars were condensed.

"I think if they [campus organization leaders] would have less sessions with more things combined, then we'd have a lot better participation and enthusiasm about FOB activities," said Reese.

SGA members chose the theme for this year's program, set the schedule and trained FOB leaders to make the week-end the most beneficial for everyone involved. Moore believes the 1997 orientation program was a success.

"I think this was a better year [than last year]," he said. "Events were more planned, and we put more effort into it. Freshman participation was better, and more people enjoyed it."

The leaders of the FOB groups were chosen at the end of last year to guide freshmen around campus and orient them with activities on campus. Those who chose to try out completed an application form and an interview process. The group of leaders returned to campus Aug. 27 for meetings and training sessions to learn how to build enthusiasm among the freshmen class, help new students get acquainted and handle any problems that might occur during the process.

The class of 2001 consists of 291 students from Alabama to Illinois to West Virginia. The freshman class participated in a variety of high school activities such as varsity sports, music, student government, journalism, and academic programs. Ten attended boys' state and nine attended girls' state. Several females are models and nine males are Eagle Scouts. The class of 2001 continues in the tradition of each of the other classes at PC.

Judicial leaders revise Honor Code orientation

By Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Following a command by the college's Honor Code committee, campus judicial leaders this year revised the freshman orientation process.

According to committee chair Dr. Richard Baker, changes were necessary because "it had become clear that students were not being educated about the Honor Code when they got here."

Judicial Council Chairman Tommy Rouse echoes the same sentiment.

In the past, there might not have been the degree of awareness there should have been. Freshmen came in and they were basically intimidated by the ritual of signing the Honor Roll and didn't get the message of the judicial system that they should have," said Reiser.

Reiser believes that many students may not know exactly what they are getting themselves into when they arrive at PC, and when they sign the Honor Roll.

"I think new students should be familiar with the system. But, the judicial system at PC is something you have to experience. As you go through your first year, you're going from a high school atmosphere that's totally different to an honor system at PC. More is expected of you. It's more responsibility," he said.

The problem, the committee reasoned, stemmed from inadequate explanation of the Honor System during FOB/TOB activities.

To solve the education problem and ensure that each entering student achieved a basic understanding of the Honor Code, Code of Conduct, and judicial system, Baker and Reiser collaborated this summer to dramatically improve the manner in which new students are introduced to PC's demanding standards of conduct and honor.

In years past, the Honor Code segment of the FOB experience was one of the less time-consuming activities. An FOB leader would take her group to a classroom and spend five to ten minutes answering questions about the Honor Code.

According to Reiser, the old system was not serving the best interests of the new students. The process whereby FOB leaders, who themselves had no training in PC's judicial system, spoke authoritatively on the intricacies and nuances of the Honor Code didn't adequately communicate the serious nature of Presbyterian College honor.

Two major changes in the judicial orientation emerged from Baker and Reiser's brainstorming.

First, an orientation for campus judicial leaders was added to pre-FOB schedule. This orientation provided an opportunity for the members of the college's Judicial Council, Appeals Board, and Honor Code Committee to explore the philosophical background and practical application of PC's honor system.

Second, those judicial leaders then led small group discussions with FOB groups to explain the judicial process, the meaning of the Honor Code and Code of Conduct, the significance of signing the Honor Roll, and to answer questions.

According to Reiser, the two changes go hand-in-hand. Carefully informed judicial leaders will be better able to explain the honor system to new students. "We're kind of doing it in a trickle-down sense," said Reiser. "We're trying to orient the leaders first of all and have them go talk to the students."

But while Reiser is optimistic about how the changes in the orientation process were implemented, he is reluctant to declare victory for himself and Baker.

"We'll just have to wait and see if the message gets all the way down to the student body, and if not, we may have to try a more direct approach," said Reiser. "I think this is something we'll try for a couple years and just go from there."

Men's soccer returns seven starters

By Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The PC men's soccer team returns seven starters from a squad that went 15-4-3 last season. PC shared the SAC regular season title with Catawba and won the SAC tournament. This was the team's fourth title since 1991.

Coach Ralph Polson enters his fifteenth season with a 164-83-23 overall record. He recently coached 12 All-Americans; recent All-Americans include Jimmy May (Class of 1997) and Jeremy Ransom (Class of 1998).

Coach Polson recruited ten freshmen to help out the team this year.

"This year's squad reminds me of my 1993 squad—we were young, a lot of freshmen and sophomores," said Polson. "Most of the freshmen played with the top club teams in their state and region."

Heading the list of returning starters are seniors Jeremy Ransom (goalkeeper) and Bryan Ridgley (midfield).

Ransom is a two-time NSCAA All-American and could become the first three-time All-American in the history of PC athletics. This summer, Ransom played for the Cocoa Express, an amateur team, and led them to the finals before losing 2-1 in the championship.

"In the semi-finals, Jeremy saved three out of five penalty kicks in the shootout," said Polson. "He will be a team leader."

Ridgley led the team with 16 goals last year and was the SAC Tournament MVP and was named to All-SAC and All-South Honors.

PC has scrimmaged two teams. They defeated Elon 2-0 and lost to Furman 3-2.

"We played really hard in the Furman game," said Polson. "Furman will be a top-twenty team in Division I."

PC plays seven out of the top ten teams in the region this year. This year the South Region gets four bids instead of three. This will give PC a better chance of making the NCAA tournament since some of the toughest opponents are in the South Region. Last year PC was looking in on a bid, and with the help of a fourth bid, PC should find its way into the NCAA Tournament. PC ranks twenty-third in the preseason and opens the season September 6 against Anderson College.

Dickey gearing up for new era

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

Excitement is building as the PC football team kicks off the Coach Daryl Dickey era. Dickey will try to lead PC to victory over Shepherd College. Last year Shepherd College defeated PC 33-17.

Coach Dickey was hired after Coach Perry resigned last year after a 5-6 record and a 29-37 overall record in six seasons.

Coach Dickey is a veteran coach and was guided by such powerhouses as Bobby Bowden at Florida State, Johnny Majors at Tennessee and Bill Curry who coached last year at the University of Kentucky. In Dickey's senior season at Tennessee, he quarterbacked the University of Tennessee to a 9-1-2 record and a victory in the Sugar Bowl over powerhouse Miami 35-7. Last year Coach Dickey was offensive and quarterback coach for Georgia Southern.

"Our team is coming together and the team is upbeat and very aggressive about the style we have implemented," said Dickey.

As two-a-day practices wind down and PC starts to focus on Shepherd College, the offense will have a new look this year. Only four returning starters will have experience going into Saturday's game.

The biggest hole to fill will be at the quarterback position. Gone is PC's all-time offensive player Randy Sullivan. Sullivan holds many career records including most passing yards with 4700 and most touchdowns with 43. Sullivan passed for 700 yards last year before going down with an injury. Expect to see a lot of playing between sophomore Bubba Pittman and freshman Blake Wilkey on Saturday.

In the backfield, senior Terrance Grant returns with 793 rushing yards last year and nine touchdowns. Junior Stephen Wedgewood will start as fullback.

At the wide receiver position, there will be two new starters. Juniors Roshard Hall and Ben Power should step up to be starters, but look for them to share time with many incoming freshmen.

On the offensive line, seniors Ryan Keese, Jeff Moore and Eric Godfree return. Moore had 31 blocks and has two years at playing center for the Blue Hose.

Defense is back in full force with eight returning starters. This experience and leadership will help the young offense get on track early in the season.

Junior Duane Thompson anchors the defensive line. He was the 1995 SAC Defensive Freshmen of the Year. Last year he had 45 tackles.

Seniors Tony Davis and Stephaun Newton hold down the linebacker position. Davis had 85 stops last year and five tackles behind the line of scrimmage. Newton, coming back from an injury, totalled 52 stops in only eight games last year.

The defensive secondary will have a lot of experience this season. Senior cornerback Chris Hamilton had 38 tackles and three interceptions. Junior Lee Hannah had 38 tackles and three interceptions. Junior Troy Gamble played free safety last year. He was All-SAC with 60 stops and a team leading 4 interceptions. These three performers also return kickoffs and punts. Hamilton returned one for a touchdown last year.

With all these new positions needed to be filled, Coach Dickey also brought in five new coaches. Tommy Spangler will be the defensive coordinator. He was defensive coordinator at Georgia Southern.

Mark Speir will be defensive line coach. He served as an assistant at Western Carolina from 1991-1996.

Eric Thigpen was a graduate of Georgia Southern in 1996. Thigpen played safety and had 36 stops his senior season.

Harold Nichols will be recruiting coordinator for Dickey's staff. He, too, was at Georgia Southern last year.

Todd Kirk will serve as offensive line coach. Kirk came from Tennessee-Martin where he was offensive and strength coach.

PC only needs three wins to reach the miracle number of 400 wins in the history of football. They should be able to get the first win this Saturday against Shepherd College. Look for a lot of new faces on the field and the start of the Coach Dickey era.

Women's soccer features youth, talent

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The PC women's soccer team will have a new look out on the Ponderosa this season. The team is very young. PC returns four starters and 13 letterwinners from last season.

Coach Brian Purcell returns for his eighth season. The team finished 15-3-1, shared the SAC regular season conference and won the SAC Conference Tournament. Purcell was the 1994 NSCAA National Coach of the Year. His overall record at PC is 94-48-3 and has taken the Blue Hose to the National Tournament two of the past three years.

"I am optimistic about this season because of the talent level we have and an excellent group of freshmen coming in," said Purcell.

Coach Purcell brought in seven freshmen this year to fill the void left by the seniors who did not return this season.

"This is one of the best groups of freshmen I've ever recruited," said Purcell. "They are young and the talent level is very high."

Only one senior will return. Brooke Wright is an offensive explosion for PC. She was the leading scorer for PC and second in the nation with 27 goals. Wright was NSCAA second team All-American Honors and All-SAC Conference.

"Brooke is a very special senior, and she will help us on the offensive side," said Purcell.

Junior Heather Jones was named to the second team All-SAC. She is a midfielder and scored two goals and had seven assists last year.

Starting in goal this year will be Junior Sarah Price. She had a 0.66 GAA (goals against average) last year.

"Sarah is very important, and she was perhaps the best backup goalkeeper in the nation last year," said Purcell.

PC scrimmaged the College of Charleston and lost 1-0.

"I was very happy with the way we played because C of C is probably the third hardest team we will play this season," said Purcell.

PC comes into the season with a pre-season rank of 13. PC opens their home game against number-two-ranked Lynn University on September 20. Lynn was runner-up a year ago in the National Championship game. PC will also face off against number-four-ranked Barry University in October.

Retention rates prompt questions about class size, student determination

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

In August 1995, Presbyterian College welcomed 352 freshmen to campus. Those freshmen formed the largest entering class in college history, just barely edging out 1992's 348 freshmen.

In August 1997, only 270 of those 352 freshmen returned to Clinton for the start of classes. Those figures indicate that the college has retained only 77%, just more than 3 out of every 4 students, of the class of 1999.

In contrast, August 1994 brought 281 freshmen to PC's campus. Today, 235 of those students are still enrolled at PC, representing an overall retention rate of 84% for the present senior class.

How does one account for those numbers?

"What I think is important when you look at the retention statistics is to find out where the retention dip has taken place," said Dana Paul, vice-president for enrollment and dean of admissions.

The retention statistics, published recently by the office of the Dean of Students, chart the number of students enrolled beginning with their freshman year. Each successive year has a report of how many students out of that class have remained at PC, and report the ratio of present students to initial class size in a percentage value.

According to Dean Nixon, the statistics were a nice surprise.

"My impression was that the attrition rate would be higher," said Nixon. The report, which the dean referred to as "very encouraging," indicates "a strong academic program and healthy feeling among students about their initial college

Considering the volumes of students that have transferred both to and from PC in past years, no clear consensus has emerged about what makes other schools more desirable than PC or vice versa.

"What we find," when trying to determine why students transfer, "is that it's really difficult to pinpoint one overriding factor," said Paul.

One former member of PC's class of

"You'll notice that our retention has gotten much stronger from freshman to sophomore years over the past 11 years, so that we're pretty much in the high 80% area for a majority of years starting in 1988," said Paul. "That's really more critical because it tells us something about the persistence of freshmen. If you've got freshmen coming in who are qualified, they can make it through their first year."

The relationship discussed first in this article, that of class size to retention rate, is regarded by campus administrators with mixed sentiments.

"You could look at that class of 281 [from 1994] and say that was a nucleus of students who really wanted to be here, and because they really wanted to be here and because they felt they made the right choice, they persisted at a higher percentage," said Paul.

"When you have a big class annually, your attrition rate is larger. There's more people in that freshman class with a variety of needs and demands and find it institutionally hard to meet all those demands," he said.

Despite numbers that would indicate an inverse relationship between class size and retention rate, Paul is hesitant to assert that retention rate is strictly tied to class size. The difference between a large class and a small class, according to Paul, is seen in the commitment of those entering students.

"I really do think that there is a grain of truth in there...that the bigger the class, the more people you're going to have floating around in there who might have been a little less committed than that class of 281," he said.

WHO'S STILL HERE?

YEAR	TOTAL ENTERING AS FRESHMEN	STILL HERE	RETENTION RATE
1994	281	235	84% after 3 years
1995	352	270	77% after 2 years
1996	287	252	88% after 1 year

choice," he said.

"The dip [in retention] has taken place from the sophomore to junior year," said Paul.

Paul cited several explanations for the dramatic dip in retention rates that has historically troubled schools like PC between sophomore and junior years. The primary explanation, according to Paul, is the convergence of important decisions that must be made during the late stages of the sophomore year.

"This is the time that you have to decide what you're going to major in. There's no more slack time," he said. "Once you enter your junior year, you find yourself in a position where you're more likely to stay 'at your original college.' Students are more likely to make these important decisions before their junior year than before their sophomore year.

1998, now studying in the University of South Carolina's Honors College, performed a cost-benefit analysis after her sophomore year before finally deciding to transfer.

"I didn't think I was getting what I was paying for," said Taryn Jackson.

According to Paul, costs are often given as the driving force behind a decision to transfer.

"There's a tendency sometimes, when students are reluctant to give you a reason, for them to cite expenses. It's sort of an easy way out," he said. "What we have found, and the research that's been done over the past 15 years shows that that's not always the case."

Despite recent fluctuations in retention rates, Paul is quick to dismiss the assumption that these are symptoms of long-term trouble.

PC lands grant to start club-level handball team

Presbyterian College will be a member of a new eight member team handball conference approved by the US Olympic Committee.

Two members of PC's student activities staff submitted a grant to the USOC in May requesting funding for the proposed conference.

A $514,000 grant from the USOC will be used to create the Southeast Team Handball Conference, to be operated as a club sport.

The proposal puts four schools in an east division and four schools in a west division. Joining PC in the east division will beander, Furman, and Newberry. The west division will consist of Georgia Southern, Emory, Georgia State, and Georgia Tech. For 1997, the conference will begin with eight schools and 12 teams (eight men's teams, four women's teams). The plan calls for expansion to 16 colleges and 28 teams in 1999 and 2000.

Bryan Madden, assistant director of student activities, will serve as commissioner of the Southeast Team Handball Conference.

"Team Handball is a relatively new sport to the southeastern United States at the collegiate level," said Randy Randall, director of student activities who, with Madden, submitted the proposal. "We are pleased that the US Olympic Committee has chosen Presbyterian College as one of the members of its pilot conference at the club sport level, and we are also pleased that Bryan Madden will serve as the league's first commissioner."

Retention rates show that strong classes come in small packages

Where have all the juniors gone??

Those opposed to expansion of student enrollment at Presbyterian College have never had as obvious an advantage as they do at present.

Recent publication of retention statistics by the office of the Dean of Students has shed light on the success that small freshman classes have typically enjoyed at PC.

Today's senior class, which entered as freshmen in August 1994 and was PC's smallest class since 1985, has retained 84% of students after three years.

In sharp contrast, today's junior class, which entered as freshmen in August 1995 and was PC's largest class, has struggled to retain students. Today only 270 of the original 352 remain.

To show the difference more clearly, the senior class has lost only 46 students in three years at PC. After one year, the present junior class lost 48 students. To date, they have lost a total of 82.

Why are these numbers important?

These numbers indicate that small entering classes flourish at PC. Institutional arrangements are such that PC just can't accommodate large freshman classes. The school simply can not continue to bring in large classes and expect to provide the same quality of educational experience.

Bring in the bright and resourceful David-sized classes like the present senior class, whose determination has allowed them to endure. Leave behind the Goliath-sized classes, whose sheer size has proven to be a disadvantage.

Presbyterian College and its students are best served by bringing in small classes.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Campus,

The members of Students for Environmental Education (SEE) would like you to know what we are doing this year. Right now, we are selling Eco-Mugs, which are refillable mugs you can use on campus and around town. Take the mugs to Taco Bell, Unkie & Ann's, or the Pizza House for a free drink, and discounts at Burger King (20%), McDonald's (10%), Hickory Hills (1/2 price drinks), Harry's (10%), Pizza Inn (10%), $30 refills at the canteen, and more for only $5. The mugs allow you to not only reduce waste at these restaurants, but you save money, too! The mugs will be on sale during lunch at GDH all this week, so don't forget to bring your money!

As in the past, we are recycling aluminum cans on campus. Can bins are in locations all over campus. Please use them. There will be a can pickup every other Thursday at 4:00. (There was one yesterday). In order to save room in the bins between pickups, give the empty aluminum can a squeeze so it takes up less space before tossing it into the bin. Because there is not yet a good outdoor storage bin at the Senior Village, we would like the townhouse residents to store their own cans. Then, place the empty cans outside on the sidewalk in a plastic bag before 4:00 on those Thursdays so we can pick them up. If C-Enter fraternities (C-Enter) is donating some recycling bins to the campus, you will soon see the new bins in Georgia Dorm and Springs.

Our major goal for the year is to start a paper recycling program on campus. Because the majority of waste generated at PC is paper, we see this as a primary concern. A Clinton town meeting was held Tues. September 22 on the subject of recycling. Hopefully we can work with the town in establishing a successful program.

SEE has meetings every Wednesday night from 7:00-7:30 in Calhoun's. For more information, contact Rich Laster (7020) or Jennifer Hansel (8856). If you would like to be placed on our email newsletter, send an e-mail to jehansel and you will get periodic updates of the club's happenings.

Sincerely,

Rich Laster

Freshmen elect class officers

Well, the 1997-1998 school year has definitely begun. Already many things are happening on campus. Last week freshman class elections were held. Congratulations to Seaton Womble, the new freshman class president, and to Katie Cooke and Sara Hopper, the new freshman class representatives. The whole election process was a huge success. I must say that this freshman class is very involved. Three students ran for the president position, and eight students ran for the representative positions. They were supported well by their class, especially at the speeches that were held in Calhoun's.

Congratulations also to Jon Baggett. He was appointed as the new junior class president by the executive council of the Student Government Association. All of these new officers were inducted on Monday, September 22.

We had our first President's Council meeting Wednesday, September 17. President's Council is made up of the leaders from the different organizations on campus. We meet once a month in order to share what each organization is doing and to plan a calendar of events. We hope that by doing this we can increase support for each other and improve communication on campus. The calendar from these meetings will be placed on the wall calendar located behind the pool tables in Springs. Please make use of this!

Artist cherishing learning environment

by Emily Benthall

Anyone who has had the chance to talk with Parrish Swanson, a senior from Cordele, Georgia, knows that, more than likely, he will greet you in French if not first by the recitation of a famous quotation. Those who do not know Swanson will certainly recognize his portrait of Einstein which hangs in the lobby of Thomson Library.

As a History/Art major and English minor, Swanson has accumulated a broad body of knowledge in the past three years. He is involved in the Student Art Guild, Celtic Cross, Department of Juvenile Justice, serves as Vice Moderator of Westminster Fellowship, and is a leader of Lackville Presbyterian Church's youth group.

From his earliest days, Swanson was destined to stand out among his peers. He remembers that his a chance to share with them more important things. This is one of the many ways I can give back to society through my testimony. I want to give these kids a sense of hope, for, as I tell them, it's by the grace of God I was not caught in my youth," said Swanson.

"Parrish has taught me about patience, dealing with difficulties, and overcoming trials," said McCallum.

Nature, another of Swanson's loves, has lead him to spend his past seven summers as a camp counselor. He shares with kids the two most important attributes in his life: his faith and learning.

"These kids get excited when I recite literature to them, and are fascinated by my interpretations," said Swanson.

Swanson's teachers have no shortage of praise for him. "I commend Parrish for the extraordinary progress he has made," said Dr. Jim Skinner. "In my 33 years of teaching, I can recall one other student who has progressed from where he was to where he is so quickly."

mother read him Shakespeare when he was a child instead of typical fairy tales.

"My grandfather was an Apache Indian minister," (hence Swanson's nickname "Chief") said Swanson, "and he wanted me to be a great speaker, so he made my mother read me Shakespeare. When kids told me about Little Red Riding Hood and the Three Pigs, I said 'Don't you know of Hamlet?'"

Swanson did not always love learning, though. He grew up in a "rough neighborhood" where kids sold drugs and carried guns regularly.

"I was your typical juvenile that got into trouble," said Swanson. Teachers termed Swanson a "slow learner" and placed him in a special education class.

"Upon entering high school I became involved in athletics to get the attention of girls," said Swanson, "and then I found two very good friends who were exceptional in their school work. This triggered my competitive spirit and challenged me to do the same."

Swanson helps long-time friend Carey McCallum at the Columbia Department of Juvenile Justice.

Following graduation, Swanson would like to further his education at Princeton Theological Seminary, and then pursue a career in Christian education.

"I would like to be less traditional in my teaching by incorporating individual student abilities, such as art, and involving kids in hands-on-experiences in nature. Becoming a college professor is a possibility," said Swanson.

Swanson's love for learning and obtaining knowledge led him to his major. He is an in-depth person who hates generalization, and he looks to history for a world view and insight on what he can continue to study.

"What has impressed me most about my PC experience is the love of education the professors share as well as sharing so much of themselves. My growing faith has deepened along with understanding and the developing of my mind through the love of education," said Swanson.

Swanson's leather wristband is very characteristic of his attitude toward life. On it are the German words "ICH ANS" which interpreted mean, "All that I am capable of doing."

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council finds student guilty of vandalism, improper conduct

The Judicial Council met on the afternoon of September 9, 1997 to hear a Code of Conduct case involving a charge of vandalism, destruction of property, and improper conduct (alcohol). The charge was read to the defendant by the chairman, to which the defendant plead guilty.

After the plea, the defense presented evidence of extenuation and mitigation. One witness was called, the defendant. The prosecution then presented its case, calling no witnesses. Both the prosecution and the defense made their closing statements, each making a formal penalty recommendation.

The chairman then dismissed the prosecution and defense from the room while the members of the Council deliberated on an appropriate penalty. On the first vote, the Council decided on the following measures to be implemented:

A. 100 hours of community service to be completed by the end of spring semester, 20 of those hours being spent driving the Safe Ride Shuttle.

B. The normal penalty for a first offense alcohol violation.

C. Termination of on-campus driving privileges for the remainder of the semester.

D. Personal apology to interim president, Dr. Thomas Reeves.

The hearing was adjourned, and no appeal was filed.

PC alum to perform October 1

Chuck Henderson, a 1975 graduate of Presbyterian College, will return to his alma mater October 1 to perform in Inklings.

Henderson, who has been writing music and playing guitar since the late 1960's, has received copious praise from important figures in the world of folk music.

"Chuck is best described as a traveling minstrel; bringing his guitar and harmonica from town to town, his music is elegantly simple and his ballads will touch your heart," said Ed Ponopkin of the Grey Eagle Tavern & Music Hall in Black Mountain, North Carolina.

Asheville, North Carolina's Mountain X-Press newspaper described Henderson's art as, "Music that is heavily influenced by the likes of Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger, quite a crowd pleaser."

Alumni find happiness in campus employment

by Taryn Davison
Staff Writer

Are any of you asking yourself "What are they doing here?" or "Who are they visiting?" Well, there are a few alumni back on campus mixing with all the old and new faces of freshmen, upperclassmen, administration, faculty, and staff. They are recent graduates of the classes of 1996 and 1997 who have accepted employment positions here at PC.

Three admissions counselor positions have been filled with a class of '96 graduate Natalie Mayes and two class of '97 graduates, Stephanie Winslet and Blythe Matheson.

They were informed of the job opportunity by Martha Anne Green in Career Planning and Placement and then had interviews with the admissions staff.

"The Admissions Office notifies me of the jobs available," Mrs. Green said. I look for students who have loved PC and have a well-rounded knowledge of the college. If they have a genuine love for the product they are trying to sell, they will be successful as admissions counselors."

After accepting the jobs, the new admissions employees went to Atlanta for an Admissions Counseling Conference and learned all about how organized they needed to be.

While at PC, Mayes majored in sociology and then went to real estate school in Atlanta. She is happy about this job and admits there is still a lot to learn.

Her plans are to stay in admissions at least a year.

"The job suits my personality perfectly," Mayes said. "I love people and I love PC."

Winslet majored in business and Spanish and was in a real estate job using her Spanish to rent apartments to Hispanics. It was a hard job, so she was excited to be hired by admissions. She plans to stay no more than three years because she was advised by a former professor that by then the college needs fresh people in admissions.

"This job is a great transition from college to the real world because you are still at PC, but involved in a different side of how the college works," Winslet said. "The part of the job I didn't know about was how much planning it takes to prepare for the seven to eight weeks of travel in the fall."

Two resident director positions were filled by class of '96 graduate Sandy Flowers and class of '97 graduate Cathy Clasen.

Flowers was visiting last spring and heard that most of the RD's were leaving. Now she is back in Smyth and she will finish seminary at Erskine in May.

"I feel this is a really good job for me because I'm able to apply what I'm learning in classes to my ministry at PC," Flowers said. "It's neat to be able to give something back to PC because I want to help students have as good of an experience as I did."

Clasen came to be the RD in Belk this year through a series of neat and unexpected coincidences.

"I felt like I was supposed to be back at PC at the same time the job opened up," Clasen said. "It's a blessing to be back at PC because there was a lot I was involved with and being a RD gives me an opportunity to continue in those things. It's a means by which I can still be a part of the things that were important to me like Common Ground and the Fellowship Choir. Even though being a RD has its moments, I enjoy getting to know the freshmen and helping in the process of making PC a second home."

Ellison Manley, a '97 graduate, is the new assistant girls basketball coach. She has loved working here and has been able to see how much work the coaches put into preparing the team.

"When our season ended last spring, I realized I wasn't ready to give basketball up," Manley said. "I had learned so much about the game over the past four years so I just asked Coach Couture if I could help her out this year. All the logistics came together from there. I am honored to be part of the coaching staff at PC. Our athletics department is packed with talented coaches and players from whom I learn something everyday. However, I'm not sure where I'll be next year."

Dawn Youngblood, a '97 graduate and a student athletic trainer for four years, is now the graduate assistant athletic trainer. This past January, head trainer Nelson Jones offered her the position. She plans to keep the job a few years while taking classes at PC, Erskine and Lander to become a certified trainer. Her duties include working and traveling with the football team and the women's basketball team.

Retention rates prompt questions about class sizes

However, in this time of transition for the college, Paul does not necessarily believe that concern over retention rates should eliminate any possibility of expanding class sizes in the future.

"I don't think 1994 makes an argument against getting bigger," said Paul. "You simply have to realize that during those years that we bring in a nice, big freshman class that are qualified people — they have the grades, they have the interest — that you simply have a greater number and variety of folks in that class in terms of their needs, their expectations, their likelihood that they will change their minds and go after a major that we do not have."

"My feeling is this: that a class of somewhere between 300 and 350 is probably our optimum. If we brought in a class of 375 freshmen — that would look great up front, but it could be problematic," he said.

In light of concerns over retention rates, Paul classifies PC's situation as fitting on a spectrum somewhere "between moderate and anomalous" and closer to anomalous.

"Holding on to 77% of a class is respectable," said Paul. "That's an important thing to remember — that's a respectable retention rate."

"The fact of the matter is that we still have over 75% of our students graduating that started here as freshmen. There are schools in the United States that would literally give their left foot [to match that graduation rate]," said Paul.

The numbers confirm Paul's assertion. According to Nixon, the present graduation rate for private colleges and universities in the nation is 72%. The graduation rate for public colleges and universities is a feeble 63%.

Gouge recalls unique and memorable study at Oxford

by Kay Owen
Campus Life Editor

Dr. Ed Gouge, Daniel Professor of Chemistry, embarked on a memorable and unique educational experience when he accepted the Kyle Spencer grant to study for a term at Oxford University.

Gouge and his wife, Dianne, travelled for eight hours and 4,009 miles from the Charlotte airport to Oxford. The grant they received was made possible because Spencer had so enjoyed his experience at Oxford that he wanted the faculty of other institutions to be able to have the same opportunity. Each year, the grant supplies funds for faculty from PC, Sweetbriar College and Columbus State College to attend a summer term at the university. The grant appropriates funds for two people from PC to go, generally a faculty member and his or her spouse, though it is possible that two faculty members could go. The program is part of a partnership between University of California, Berkeley and Worcester College of Oxford University.

"The opportunity is made available through relationships between University of California, Berkeley and Worcester College," Gouge said.

The grant stipulates that faculty must take a particular course. "The History and Architecture of Oxford," Gouge took this course, requiring him to travel throughout the city of Oxford, studying buildings and scenery. These excursions were a major part of the course curriculum. The group visited Blenheim Castle, birthplace of Sir Winston Churchill and present home of the 11th Duke of Marlborough. They also took a bus trip to Cambridge University.

"Oxford is an old, historic city, and because of its age, importance and university, there are a great many architectural styles throughout the city and the campus itself," Gouge said. He also had to attend daily lectures and write a paper. His paper was research on Robert Boyle, an alchemist who is known as the "Father of Modern Chemistry."

The participants, 93 in all of the first summer term, were enrolled as members of the Bodleian Library.

"Before witnesses we had to vow that we would not start a fire, remove items or bring food or drink into the library," Gouge said. "We had to sign a statement swearing that."

The group as a whole followed a strict, fixed schedule. They ate all meals together in the Senior Commons Room. "When we did dine," said Gouge, "everyone stood until the program directors came in, pronounced blessing, and then everyone was served by waiters."

Each participant was invited to dine with the program directors for one dinner during the term.

"This was called 'sitting at the high table,'" said Gouge. "That's when you were wined and dined and made conversation with the program directors."

Mrs. Gouge took a course also, "Castles and Cottages." She visited Goodrich Castle, Raglan Castle and Chepstow

Dr. Ed Gouge spent the summer studying history and architecture in England.

Castle in East Wales.

Oxford University is composed of 37 independent colleges. Each undergraduate is assigned a tutor at his particular college, and he reads mostly independently for three years. After the undergraduate study, the student takes a university exam for his degree from Oxford. The education students receive is restricted to their major course of study, with no general education requirements.

"Oxford study is much more narrow than study at PC," said Gouge. "At Oxford, if you read English, that is all you do."

The Oxford program is aware of the more liberal agendas of American universities, but has done little to broaden their educational base.

"At Oxford, there is much sentiment toward the American way of study, but they are certainly not ready to change yet," said Gouge.

Outside of the university tours, Gouge and his wife toured much of the city on their own. They spent hours in the Blackwell's Bookstore where people are encouraged to browse and enjoy the atmosphere.

"It's hard not to buy something there," said Gouge. "We did not resist the temptation."

Some of Gouge's favorite parts of the city were the museums. He visited the Ashmolean Museum, the Museum of the History of Science and the University Museum, which was his favorite. In the University Museum, Gouge toured through the Natural History section with greatest interest.

Other outstanding characteristics of Oxford are its gargoyles and grotesques. The original gargoyles were intended as drains for building foundations, but few are functional today. Also, the Sheldonian Theatre is the site of Oxford graduation. While the Gouges were there, Nelson Mandela presented an address at the theatre.

Gouge found it difficult to narrow down to one favorite part of his three weeks at Oxford. He did enjoy the peace and tranquility he found when he visited the surrounding country.

"I certainly enjoyed the English countryside more than Oxford proper," he said. "The lavender was in bloom, and you would see huge fields, which from a distance looked like bodies of water; then you would smell the lavender."

Gouge also enjoyed meeting the others on the study. He and his wife still keep in correspondence with some friends they made in Oxford.

"Overall, it was an incredible experience — a learning experience, exponentially," said Gouge.

When the term ended, the Gouges' daughter joined them in London. Together they toured the cathedrals of Canterbury, Dover, Windsor and Salisbury, as well as the Stonehenge structure, one of the Great Wonders of the World.

Volleyball team cruises to 8-2 record in ten games

By Jeff Walker

Coach Debbie Holcombe returns five starters and 10 letterwinners from a volleyball squad that won the SAC Tournament and finished 31-7 last season.

Returning starters this season are seniors Beth Mann and Erin Olson. Mann was named to the First-Team-All-Conference and SAC All-Tournament Team last year. Mann averaged 2.81 kills, 2.85 digs and a near .300 hitting percentage last year. Olson was named Second-Team All-SAC and averaged 3.70 kills with a .341 hitting percentage.

Senior Mary Kruse finished seventh in the conference with 3.58 digs and led PC last year in serve percentage with .944 and pass percentage with .884.

Senior Sarah Nichols and juniors Lauren Axson and Jenell Sanders are expected to bring experience off the bench this year to help the returning starters. Nichols averaged 1.38 digs, had a serve percentage of .909 and had a pass percentage of .812. Axson had a .217 hitting percentage and also had an .891 serve percentage. Sanders posted 3.6 assists last year, which ranked her tenth in assists in the SAC.

Sophomores Stephanie Cloud, Kinsley Craven and Crescent Dodson should see some playing time this year. Cloud is a returning starter who finished second on the team with 3.57 digs last year. Craven averaged 1.30 kills per game last year which placed her fourth on the team. Dodson had 159 assists and a .313 assist percentage.

Two talented freshmen should also contribute greatly to the team. Amber Peden from Dorman High School and Rachel Bishop from Summerville High School will look for leadership from the seniors this year. Peden was the 4-A State Player of the Year and selected to the S.C. North/South All-Star Game. Bishop was also selected to the S.C. North/South All-Star Game.

"The girls are working hard so far this year but we lost a heart breaker to Gardner-Webb in the Catawba Tournament," said Holcombe.

The Blue Hose got a big win over USC-Aiken. This match went to five sets and PC won 16-14 in the fifth in dramatic fashion. USC-Aiken went to Michigan and played some of the top northern teams in the nation.

PC lost a touch match to Francis Marion 3-1.

"This was a good loss, because Francis Marion went to Florida to play in a tournament and they defeated number four in the region, Florida Tech," said Holcombe.

PC will be playing in a tournament in Florida to compete with some tough Florida teams. The top five teams in the region are from Florida.

PC competed at the Catawba Tournament on September 12-13. PC cruised, defeating High Point University, Pfeiffer College, and Queens College 3-0. PC met up with Queens College in the semifinals again and won 3-1. In the finals, PC lost to Gardner-Webb 3-0.

"Even though we are preseason number one in the SAC, Gardner-Webb will be our toughest competition in the SAC," said Holcombe.

Mann made the All-Tournament Team at the Catawba Tournament.

PC volleyball is setting their sights on both winning the SAC regular season and the SAC conference tournament a feat that has never before been accomplished. PC is 8-2 and faces a big match against SAC opponent Gardner-Webb as their next home match on October 18.

Blue Hose fall to top team, 21-3

Defense holds Carson-Newman scoreless in second half

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

PC could not hold off three first-half touchdowns by number-one Carson Newman to pull out a victory in front of a crowd of 2,300 at Bailey Memorial Stadium. PC lost 21-3.

The defense held Carson-Newman to only one play in the second half, but the offense spotted only putting three points on the board. Junior Bubba Pittman came in the second half to complete 13 of 25 passes for 169 yards. Four times PC put into the Carson Newman 40 yard line but could only connect a three field goal of 31 yards in the fourth quarter.

PC rushed for 125 yards and passed for 245 yards. PC did not have any trouble moving the ball but just could not capitalize on the two interceptions that Carson-Newman threw.

"We failed to take advantage of turnovers and we made too many mistakes in the first half," said Coach Mary Dickey.

The Blue Hose's second game of the season was against Charleston Southern at Charleston. PC squeaked out with a 16-7 win.

Charleston Southern led 7-0 before senior Kevin kicked a 24 yard field goal with 10 minutes left in the game. PC rallied in the fourth quarter by scoring 13 points to pull out the victory.

The game from behind win was turned on the coming attack. PC rushed for 133 yards in the game.

Junior Wade rushed for an eighth 100 yard game for PC in first touchdown of the 12-0 mark in the fourth quarter. He finished with seven carries for 40 yards.

Two series later Daniel Godfree broke loose and put the icing on the cake with a 40 yard touchdown dash down the sideline with two minutes left in the game. Godfree finished with six carries for 50 yards.

The backbone of the running game came from senior Terrance Grant who rushed for 83 yards on 24 attempts.

"We capitalized on their mistakes, but we still could not get rolling in the first half," said Dickey. "We were able to move the ball the second half."

Senior David Snyder, a defensive back, was awarded the SAC Pepsi Defensive Player of the Week for September 13. Snyder had nine tackles and 3.5 sacks in the Charleston Southern game.

The first game of the Dickey Era came out with a bang with 2,700 fans turning out at Bailey Memorial Stadium to see their new head coach. PC lost to Shepherd by a close score of 18-14. PC scored first on a Grant 1 yard touchdown run early in the second quarter. Shepherd ran off 18 straight points to take an 18-7 advantage into halftime.

In the second half, the defense came alive and allowed only 182 yards total for Shepherd. PC scored early in the fourth quarter from a Pittman pass to Ben Power for an 11 yard touchdown pass. The next two series PC went four downs and out before Shepherd ran out the clock.

Grant ended up with 73 yards rushing and a touchdown. Freshman Blake Wilkey passed for 158 yards with two interceptions.

On the season, the defense has not given up any points in the second half. Leading in the rushing department is Grant with 219 yards and one touchdown. Wilkey has passed for 265 yards while Pittman has passed for 201 yards and one touchdown. Freshman D. Young is leading the receiving corps with 146 yards. Freshman Travis Smith and Power have 120 and 112 yards respectively.

Junior Lee Hannah is leading the team with 13 tackles and sophomore Brad Harris leads the team with two interceptions.

PC will be on the road for the next three weeks. The Homecoming Game will be against Elon October 18, and the Blue Hose will face off against Mars Hill during Parents' Weekend on October 25.

Cross Country achieves varsity status

PC added a new sport last year: cross country. Cross Country was a club sport last year, but this fall it moved up to varsity status. Coach Laura Timmons has taken over duties as cross country coach.

The women's team consists of juniors Katie McGinley, Robyn Loveless, and Jill Webster, sophomores Jennifer Hansel and Christina Tran and freshman Sarah Jones.

The men's team consists of senior Eric Stribnick, juniors John Moorman and Mark Dinkins, sophomores Matt Braswell, Bryce Johnson and Jay Shippin and freshman Joshua Blankenship.

According to Timmons, all these athletes are on a volunteer basis in which the women run approximately three miles, while the men run approximately five miles in their meets.

PC ran in its first-ever cross country meet at Lander University on September 13. The women finished fourth with 81 points, while the men finished seventh with 141 points. Top finishers for the women were Loveless at number nine, Jones at twelfth, Tran at fourteenth and Hansel at seventeenth. On the men's side, Stribnick finished twenty-second, Moorman twenty-fourth and Johnston thirty-third.

The Blue Hose ran in the Winthrop Invitational this past weekend. The meet consisted of teams from Division I and Division II. The women's team finished twelfth. Top finishers for the women were Jones (twenty-eighth), Loveless (thirty-eighth), and Hansel (sixty-fourth). The men's team finished twenty-first. Top finishers for the men were Stribnick (eighty-seventh), Moorman (ninety-ninth), and Johnston (one-hundred-fourteenth).

The next meet is at Mars Hill this weekend, and the Conference Meet will be at Wingate.

THE LAST WORD: A report from the vice-presidential search committee

by Tommy Reiser
and Leighton Hart

As we exited through the front door of the Smith Administration building Thursday afternoon, we knew what had to be done. We just weren't sure exactly how we were going to do it. It had been a long morning, full of grueling meetings with administrators and faculty. The purpose: to select Presbyterian College's next Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs.

The job was no small undertaking. Several weeks earlier, we were approached by a high-ranking college official who wishes to remain anonymous, who asked that we lead a search committee, composed of the best and brightest faculty, staff, and students that PC has to offer. We were given complete discretion in the composition of this committee, and money and resources were to be no object. After days and days of scrutinizing resumes, we formed what has now affectionately been nicknamed by those in Admin, as "the dream team." The committee consisted of Leighton Hart, Tommy Reiser, and special consultant, Albert Moore (a.k.a. Mitchell, Mitchmo, Swampfoot, Moo-ray, Mitchell, Manure, and Liverpool).

We were given a general profile from the boys upstairs about what qualities were needed in the next dean. Item number 1: bitchin' hair. Let's face it, whoever becomes the next dean at PC will be living in Dean Moncrief's shadow. People may have questioned some of Dean Moncrief's policies and they may have second-guessed some of the more formidable bills charged to the college from Tan 'N' Tone, but with respect to the former dean there is universal agreement on one subject: the man had a handsome mane.

There's a lot that goes into the job, and it takes a special type of man or woman to live a 24-7 life of glitz and glamour. Along with all of the meetings and conference calls, the new dean will have to leave plenty of time for high-speed limo rides through Clinton, the occasional drug and wine binge, and of course, the "escort service" needs attention too. In summary, we need someone who has had some experience in the spotlight.

Our task was clear enough. After leaving Admin, we headed straight back to our precious townhouse, making only one stop at Edmunds to be mocked and harassed by the photographers who shot our senior centerfolds. We sweated and struggled for hours to think of potential candidates, but made no progress.

Eventually, something hit us. We're not quite sure what it was, maybe the fumes from still-drying paint in the townhouse, maybe a cloud of sawdust from the hard-working power saws over at Building C, or perhaps the fertilizer from our freshly seeded backyard. We don't know. The point is, we knew who we had to get. Being that there were so many noxious substances in the air at the time of our revelation, we can't be 100% certain that the story we will tell you wasn't just some fume-induced delusion. But we like to believe it's true. Anyway, read on...

It wasn't a new name. It had been tossed around many PC search committees. School dietician, Grotnes Dorm RD, former restaurant owner turned GDH caterer (oh wait, that's been filled.) To be honest, we're ashamed we didn't think of it sooner. It wasn't until Leighton climbed into his bed in the red tank top and candy cane striped running shorts that Tommy realized who our next Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs must be. Richard Simmons. Off to the drawing room.

We knew the negotiations would be fierce. We trained for hours for our first encounter with the man. Our special consultant, Mr. Moore, proved invaluable during this time. He never hesitated to throw on the shorts and the tank-top and jump around like a girl. In fact, it was disturbing how happy he was to do it. We also knew that as ambassadors for PC, we would need to appeal to Mr. Simmons' sense of physical fitness. 23 hours and 55 minutes of every day would consist of doing absolutely nothing that could be confused with being "healthy." But for those 5 minutes every afternoon, we would stand in front of Espm2 and flex along with the International Women's Bodybuilding Tour.

And knowing that there's nothing that ol' Richard likes better than somebody who's lost a couple of pounds, we fudged our driver license weights to read 295. If losing 200 pounds doesn't impress him, we don't know what will. Next step: the meeting.

Our plans for a formal meeting on our lovely Clinton campus didn't come together, so we figured we'd drop in on him in action. This particular night, he was busy inspiring many of Columbia's more "healthy sized" men and women to lose those extra pounds. We could feel the energy as soon as we stepped into Columbia Mall. Richard was in the midst of an inspiring routine filled with much gyration and pelvic thrusting.

Before long, the moment was upon us. We were whisked away by men wearing tank tops, running shorts, and walkie talkies (ie. Simmons' security.) The guards led us to a smoke-filled room in the back corner of the Gap. We're quite sure that we were on the boys side. Because we've never been questioned by a saleswoman as we mistakenly tried on clothes from the girls half of the store. Not on September 17, 1997, not ever. We don't care what you may have heard.

In walked Simmons, whose sheer presence nearly overwhelmed the both of us. Tommy whipped out a contract, and the two stapled sheets landed delicately on the makeshift table. Richard gave it a quick glance, then had one of his goons show us his counter-offer. Richard's offer hit the table like a stack of World Books dropped from the dome of Neville. It was clear we had to work on some of the finer points of the contract.

Our contract made vague references to various responsibilities such as running faculty meetings and establishing graduation requirements. His contract proposed a "Deal-A-Meal" program for GDH, and strict Saturday morning "Sweatin' with the Oldies" routines with the Blue Ladies. Our contract put him in charge of PC's convocations and lectures. His contract put him in charge of spandex.

We volleyed back and forth for the next hour, and thought we were close to a settlement. But there was one issue we just couldn't resolve. We tried our best, but he didn't seem to see things our way. And no matter how many times we tried to tell him, he still didn't believe that the shower's in the dean's house were not capable of pumping champagne.

And so sadly, there won't be a Dean Simmons frolicking around Admin in the spring. And perhaps there's no other thinly clad, sweating man with an afro out there that can lead PC into the future, but that doesn't mean we will stop looking. We'll keep you posted.

EDITOR'S NOTE

The events and conversations described above are purely fictional. Mr. Simmons is not presently a candidate for any position at PC.

IFC imposes new rules on rush, horseshoe litter

by Kay Owen
Campus Life Editor

Rules for activity on fraternity court and for 1997 rush are different from previous years. The rules and guidelines were set by the Inter-Fraternity Council and guided by Joe Nixon, dean of student affairs. The IFC consists of 17 members: President John Kimball, Vice President Warren McSweeney, Secretary/Treasurer John Ballard, IFC representatives Greg Jowers and Matt Navarro as well as two representatives from each fraternity. Together they determine how the fraternity system will operate and make restrictions on behavior and activities in the houses and surrounding areas. The two members from each fraternity act as liaisons between their chapter and the IFC. They take the topics discussed within the council and present them to their fraternity in order to get a consensus.

"We'll go back after a meeting and discuss with chapters to get opinions," Kimball said. "The IFC representatives are supposed to be links for their fraternity and give the council what their fraternity feels."

According to Kimball, Nixon may suggest a change or addition to current policy, but the council alone makes the final decision.

"Dean Nixon never decides for us," Kimball said. "He'll try to influence us, but he pretty much leaves it [the vote] up to us."

Nixon emphasized his position as faculty advisor to the IFC.

"I serve as advisor to the IFC," Nixon said. "I think most of the rush rule changes were initiated by members of IFC. I did not play a role in initiating the rules, but saw them to be positive changes and supported them by not calling question to them."

New rush provisions are in addition to all those from 1996. The new guidelines provide more specifics on relationships between members and rushees during the rush period. Also, the fine for a second violation of rush regulations increased from $200 to $300. Nixon said he saw a strong consensus between IFC members concerning the changes.

Rushees will receive a list of regulations and are expected to follow the guidelines set by the IFC. Nixon feels the new provisions will improve the rush process.

"I think the new rules will enhance the smoothness of rush," Nixon said.

Procedures for accept day were left out of the 1997 Rush Regulations list. Nixon says the IFC will have to meet, discuss and determine those rules before rush begins. Rules for accept day will be in effect and enforced as all other parts of rush.

"The reason for accept day procedures is out of concern for safety and to prevent accidents when people run out of Neville and jump on each other," Nixon said.

The IFC has established a new rule outside of rush that is effective for 1997. There will no longer be bottled beer allowed in the fraternity houses. Bottles are permissible in fraternity court, but must be thrown away upon entering any of the houses. The fraternities should provide cups for those wishing to take beverages inside.

"As far as bottles go, it was brought up by Dean Nixon," Kimball said. "It was a problem in the past, so we thought it would be good to ban it, so we voted it in."

Nixon suggested this provision due to the problems in the past with litter and broken glass in fraternity court.

"There was a lot of broken glass around fraternity court, and it was a safety concern," Nixon said. "I thought it best to ban bottles, but that is something that has so far not been very enforced."

Nixon feels the bottle rule should apply all over campus as far as it concerns littering and the cleanliness and upkeep of PC's appearance.

"I really wish people would take more pride in the appearance of the community and not litter," Nixon said.

NEW RUSH REGULATIONS FOR 1997

- 1) No rushees are to be allowed in the room of any fraternity member with the exception of the rushee being a registered roommate of a fraternity member
- 2) While rushees are in a fraternity house, they are not to be allowed in either of the bedrooms, and at no time are any rushees to be put in a one-on-one relationship with a fraternity member behind closed doors
- 3) Any brother found distributing alcohol to a rushee, even at his request, will be fined $100 and his case will be turned over to the Dean of Students
- 4) Any rushee found guilty of failing to report a rush violation to the IFC will be dropped from the current rush and not be allowed to rush for one year

Leaders seek to boost use of Calhoun's

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

Calhoun's recently renovated and redecorated, is spacious yet cozy. It is filled with comfortable furniture perfect for relaxing. The walls are bright, it has a pool table, a dart board, a stage and a food counter. It seems to be a fun place, yet Calhoun's sits behind Jacobs Hall, often empty, despite its convenient hours Thursday through Saturday.

When PC students expressed the need for a social alternative to fraternity court several years ago, the school responded by assembling a group to examine the options. Joe Nixon, dean of students played a part in the process.

"We had the leaders from SGA and IFC come together to discuss concern about more students going away for the weekends," Nixon said. "Concern in particular arose about providing alternative social outlets for non-Greek students. The concern was expressed as part of the internal self-study process [during the 1994-95 school year]. It was part of the long range plan that preceded the institutional self-study."

The task force assembled to address the issue of social alternatives considered several options for student hangouts. They discussed revising the layout of Springs or converting the basement of Georgia Dorm, current home of Inklings coffee house, to include other social facilities. According to Bryan Malden, assistant director of Springs Campus Center and staff member in charge of Calhoun's, Calhoun's emerged as the solution, "a place for people to hang out, not to compete with fraternity court, but just as a weekend alternative."

Once used as a student residence hall, Calhoun's has always been PC property, said Skip Zubrod, vice president of finance.

The house required renovation to be useful as a hangout.

"Before it was Calhoun's, it was the Women's Social Hall," he said. "We probably put out $20,000 into redoing the building about two years ago."

"We had to put a new roof on it, and a good bit of the expense went to alter the interior to accommodate the stage and the room with the pool table," Nixon said. "We had a decorator come and look at the facility to pick out the colors and furniture. Several student leaders helped by painting the rooms."

The creators believed Calhoun's would be its own entity, a new place for students to go.

Skinner's Confederate chronicles life and death of Civil War soldier

by Dan Hart
Managing Editor

Anyone who has seen the classic film Gone With the Wind will remember the hardships that the fictional O'Hara family faced during the Civil War and Reconstruction. Like Gone With the Wind, The Death of a Confederate (Athens, Georgia: University of Georgia Press, 1996), a new book edited by Dr. James L. Skinner, Charles A. Dana professor of English, tells the story of a north Georgia family during the tumultuous events of the mid-nineteenth century. Unlike Gone With the Wind, however, The Death of a Confederate is not fiction.

Published by the University of Georgia Press, The Death of a Confederate is a collection of selected letters of the Archibald Smith family of Roswell, Ga., from 1864 until 1956. The letters included in the book focus on a single tragic event that was common to many American families during the Civil War—the death of the oldest son from disease contracted during the war.

Although Skinner has no blood relationship to the Smith family, his family has a unique connection to the Smiths. The Skinner family inherited the historic Smith plantation home in Roswell in 1981 and opened the estate to the public in 1991. Along with the estate, the Skinners inherited the personal belongings of the Smith family.

These personal belongings included a trunk that Willie, the family's oldest son, had sent to his parents just before Savannah fell to Union forces in December of 1864. Inside the trunk was a treasure of personal letters from Willie's family and friends.

"When the trunk was opened in 1986," said Skinner, "it was the first time that it had been opened since Willie sent it home in 1864."

Skinner stated that his younger brother Arthur, who is head of the visual arts department at Fickler College, spent a sabbatical organizing letters found not only in this trunk, but also scattered throughout the "squirrel-infested attic" of the Smith estate and typing those letters into his computer. In a mass, the Smith family letters and papers covered the early eighteenth centuries until the 1970's.

James Skinner reports that he had just completed work on another book (the autobiography of Southern industrialist Henry Merrell) when his brother approached him with the idea of compiling a book based on the Smith letters.

Skinner's task in organizing the collection of letters into a structured work was a formidable one.

"You've got to clear a lot of hurdles and jump through a lot of hoops to take this raw data and convert it into a book," said Skinner.

The "hurdles" that Skinner had to clear were the background research that was necessary to put the work in historical context and the challenge of weaving a plot from the letters in order to give unity to the work as a whole.

Background research included investigation of newspapers and historical records; such investigation was necessary to explain to the reader certain historical events to which the letters allude. According to Skinner, background information was not always easily acquired. In addition to examining the official Confederate records of the state of Georgia, Skinner had to search the records of the Confederate government based in Richmond, Va., and the "Official Records of the Rebellion" that were compiled by the federal government shortly after the war. Archival material and family history also had to be documented.

In addition, Skinner faced the challenge of providing a structure for the work as a whole. Skinner chose to focus on the story of Archibald Smith's oldest son Willie, who, after participating in a dramatic escape from Savannah hours before the city was captured by Union forces, contracted a disease and died in Raleigh, N.C., on July 7, 1865. Willie's story is paralleled by the story of his younger brother Archie, who participated in—and survived—combat during the war.

The "hoops" that Skinner had to go through were the editing procedures required to have the book published. Skinner recalled that, because of the serious nature of the work, he did not want the book published by a commercial publishing house. Instead, Skinner chose to get the work published by the University of Georgia Press, because, he stated, the University of Georgia Press is an academic press that has earned a reputation for publishing books that have an appeal beyond academia. Skinner stated that the peer review process, in which the manuscript was submitted to review by experts in Civil War history, was a particularly major hurdle.

The Death of a Confederate differs from many accounts of the Civil War because it does not focus on the stories of major historical figures and events.

Rather, The Death of a Confederate provides a portrait of a typical upper-class Southern family and recounts details of everyday life in the South before, during, and after the Civil War.

"There's really nothing like this," said Skinner, "because Willie's position was under shellfire for two years and he never mentioned it in his letters—Why? It was because he didn't want to worry his parents."

Indeed, Willie Smith's letters provide us with a portrait of a young man with a sensitive, artistic temperament and deeply held religious convictions. Many of Willie's letters, in fact, include detailed descriptions of nature or display concern for Willie's younger brother.

Although he was never promoted from the rank of private, Willie Smith enlisted for the duration of the war. Despite his support of the Confederate cause, however, Smith did not always see eye to eye with his comrades-in-arms. In a letter to his mother dated January 25, 1865, Willie wrote, "I can see no hope for our cause. Our armies except Lee's are demoralized mobs. Our generals are drunkards and the soldiers black with profanity."

Skinner noted that he sees Willie's willingness to fight in the Confederate army, despite his disenchantment with the army's leadership, as an indication of the Smith family's loyalty to the Confederate cause.

"That means, 'I'm not going to quit,'" said Skinner, "and Willie Smith never did quit."

Nevertheless, Skinner noted that the Smiths were hardly virulent pro-slavery advocates. In fact, Skinner noted, Archibald Smith, who was a devout Presbyterian, felt guilty about owning slaves and, in contempt of the law, he taught his slaves how to read. From 1850 until 1860, Archibald Smith actually freed most of his "servants," as he called them, and he paid wages to the three "servants" that remained on the estate.

According to Skinner, the divided will of the Archibald Smith family, torn between its obligation to God and its obligation to its homeland, provides the story of the Smith family with all the elements of a "tragic family" in literature.

"Nothing in real human life is as simple as the politically correct or the politically orthodox would like it to be," stated Skinner. "These letters are the story of a Christian family trying to do their best according to the best lights they had."

Hose fall in Homecoming battle

Homecoming '97 brought on tough Division I opponent Elon to Bailey Memorial Stadium in front of 2,950 alumni, staff and students. On a rainy, foggy October afternoon, Elon proved to be too much for PC as Elon came out with a 24-3 victory.

Elon came out of the wishbone offense and ran the ball the whole contest. PC could not stop the run as Elon averaged 392 yards rushing and two scoring touchdowns. PC got on the board first with a 31-yard field goal by sophomore Zac Thack. Elon had a 53-yard touchdown run and an interception return for a touchdown to take a 13-3 halftime lead. PC's defense played tough in the second half and gave up only a field goal and a late touchdown in the fourth quarter. PC drove into Elon territory in the second half, but could not put the ball in the endzone. PC finished the game with 140 yards passing and 21 yards rushing.

PC got its biggest win of the season when it knocked off number 15 Catawba 10-7 in front of a stunned crowd in Salisbury, N.C. on Oct. 11. This was a defensive game and neither team could get points on the board. The defense played to heart out and forced five interceptions and two fumbles. Thack kicked a 24-yard field goal to give PC its only points in the first half. PC jumped out for a 19-0 lead late in the fourth quarter when freshman Blake Wilkey hit junior Ben Power for a 21-yard touchdown pass. On the next kickoff, Catawba returned the kickoff 95 yards for a touchdown. Junior Troy Gamble saved the day when he intercepted a Catawba pass on PC's 40-yard line with 41 seconds left. Gamble had three interceptions in the afternoon. On offense, Wilkey completed 16 of 22 passes for 193 yards. His longest pass was 40 yards to junior Ben Power. Gamble rushed for 1 yard in 20 attempts.

While the Blue Hose are often loved and feared, David Dinkley, "It's still the middle of the season, but this year we're really going to give the fans a good game."

PC won the road to Greenville College game on the Thanksgiving Power 20-10. The Blue Hose came out strong in the first quarter scoring 21 points and another touchdown 49'. The Blue Hose kept the pressure on in the second quarter with Grant and sophomore James Gore rushing for a touchdown each. PC 35-0 at halftime. Gore and Wade added two late touchdowns in the second half. Finally, Tusculum got on the board and scored a touchdown with 9:11 left in the fourth quarter.

PC had 481 total yards with 271 yards rushing and 210 yards passing. Wilkey completed 4 of 10 passes for 90 yards and a touchdown.

Women's tennis team shows promise in fall season matches

By Coach Donna Arnold

The Presbyterian College women's tennis team begins the 1997-1998 season with several new faces and a tradition to continue. PC finished 19-6 and are ranked first in the region and 21st nationally. Losing four starters from last season's Conference Championship and National Tournament team, this year's squad will have some big shoes to fill.

Led by senior captain Kimberly Hampton and junior Kelli Kirkland, the team looks forward to a promising season with the addition of four talented freshmen. Coach Donna Arnold feels this team will be inexperienced in college match play, but they are, overall, more skilled than last year's team. This fall, the team will gain valuable college playing experience against some tough competition. Arnold is pleased with her team's play so far and they are showing signs of improvement and promise.

The fall season consists of individual tournaments with no team match play. The players opened the fall season at Furman University against Wofford, Winthrop, and Furman — all Division I schools. Some highlights of the Furman tournament were Kimberly Hampton's 6-1, 6-1 defeat of Furman's #1 player from last season, Jarrell Starnes and freshman Sunny Armstrong's defeat of Furman's Mahaley White 7-5, 6-4.

The team's performance at the Rolex Regional tournament at Barton College was promising for the spring. PC had five players in the finals of their respective flights. Freshmen Heather Combs and Clayton McGee faced each other in the finals in B Flight singles competition, while Kirkland won the B Flight singles consolation bracket. Hampton and Armstrong made it to the finals in doubles but fell short of the championship title.

In the Georgia College Invitational, PC showed positive signs of improvement. Hampton had a tough match against the #11 ranked player in the nation, but could not pull out a three setter losing 6-2, 3-6, 4-6. McGee fell short in the finals of Flight B singles. In the B Flight Doubles bracket, Kirkland teamed with McGee to face teammates Combs and freshman Allison Merritt in the finals.

"We are very young this year but I can't wait until team matches in the spring," said Hampton.

"We are doing great with four freshmen and I expect us to do very well in the spring season," said Armstrong.

The team will close the fall season in Augusta, Ga. Nov. 1-2 against some top Division II teams.

Men's tennis team returns 8 strong starters

By Coach Bobby McKee

PC men's tennis team returns all of its starters from a squad that got to the South Regionals last year.

Returning for the Blue Hose are seniors Tom Swift and Ronnie Setzer; juniors Zack Loftis, Preston Menning, Chuck Webb, Will Stewart, and Todd Roemmich; and sophomore Jeremy Carl.

Head Coach Bobby McKee brought in two freshmen, Donnie Thoresen and Seaton Womble.

PC participated in four tournaments during September and October.

At the Gardner Webb/Limestone Tournament Sept. 19-20, PC had great results. Thoresen won the "C" Flight, losing only one game in four matches. Roemmich made it to the top four in the "B" Flight losing to the eventual winner of that flight. Carl lost his first match but came back and won three straight matches and won the "B" Flight Consolation.

During the first PC Open, Swift dominated the field and won the open draw with a victory over teammate Webb in the finals. The doubles team of Swift and Thoresen got to the finals before finally losing a tough match.

The second PC Open, was rain-shortened and never completed. Roemmich and Thoresen were still winning when the tournament was called.

The biggest tournament of the season was the Rolex Regionals. Loftis, Swift, Menning, Webb, Stewart, and Thoresen represented the Blue Hose. Swift ran into two tough players and lost both his matches. Loftis and Menning each won a match in the A Flight before losing their second round matches. In the B Flight, all three of PC's players did not lose to an outside opponent. Thoresen, Stewart, and Webb were in the semi-finals with Thoresen defeating Stewart and Webb defeating a player from Lees-McRae. Thoresen and Webb did not finish the finals.

In the doubles flight, Webb and Stewart were defeated in the first round by Erskine's #1 team. Thoresen and Swift won one match before losing to Lees-McRae's #2 team and 1 oits and Menning made it all the way to the finals before losing to Barton's #1 doubles team.

"Everybody is playing well this year but the key this year is our doubles play," said Menning.

"Doubles has done well this year and we had a great fall season," said Webb.

"We have a real good chance with regionals this year and we have all of our starters back from last year's squad," said Swift.

"The team has shown consistency of good play throughout tournaments in the fall, which, in turn, should help us do well in the spring," said Carl.

Men's soccer team posts 5-1 conference record

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The men's soccer team is off to a fast start with a 9-3-1 overall record and a 5-1 SAC record. Currently, PC is ranked seventh in the regional rankings, but has a chance to bid for a playoff spot against upcoming opponents Lander and Catawba.

PC started off the season on Sept. 6 with a 6-0 shutout victory over Anderson. Senior Bryan Ridgley scored two goals while senior David Dore and freshman Jamil Ficklin. Gus Goding and Walter Howard each scored one goal. PC outshot Anderson 16-3.

PC lost a tough match against highly touted USC Spartanburg 3-2 in overtime. Dore scored on a penalty kick in the latter moments of the second half to force overtime. The Rifles took advantage and scored in the first few minutes of overtime to win the game.

The Blue Hose stopped Erskine 1-0. Scoring for PC were Ridgley, Dore and sophomore Erik Anderson.

Senior Jeremy Ransom held off a flurry of shots to keep the Blue Hose 2-000 from Belmont Abbey. PC tied Belmont Abbey 2-2 with goals from Ridgley and senior Todd Anderson.

Eleventh ranked Alabama Huntsville was defeated by the Ponderosa and defeated Catawba, winning 3-1. Ficklin scored the Blue Hose's lone goal. Ransom had five saves.

PC started off the 1997 conference season with a 2-0 shutout of Gardner-Webb. Ransom and Anderson scored for

PC. PC outshot G-W 20-4.

Ransom had his third shutout of the season against Carson-Newman in the Hose's 5-0 victory. Ridgley, Ficklin, sophomores Heath Johnson and Trey Williams and freshman Tommy Wollenberger each scored a goal. PC outshot C-N 16-7 and had four cornerkicks.

The Blue Hose lost a tough match to conference foe Mars Hill 4-2. Ficklin and Anderson scored the goals. PC could not convert on defensive errors made by Mars Hill.

"I think this game sent a wake-up call and made us realize that we need to start playing more aggressive," said Ralph Polson.

PC got their wake-up call by winning the Presbyterian College/Nike Soccer Challenge. PC defeated Fickler 3-1 and then shutout 20th ranked St. Leo 1-0. Anderson scored early in the second half and Ransom made unbelievable saves to ensure the trophy stayed with PC. Anderson, Comer, Howard and Ransom were named to the All-Tournament Team.

PC defeated arch-rival Newberry 6-0. Ridgley, Stephen, and Ficklin scored two goals each and outshot Newberry 23-4. "We have not been shutout any this season so we are scoring goals," said Polson. "The one thing that is our strength is the balance of scoring from everybody on the team."

Ridgley leads the team with seven goals and Ficklin is right behind him with six goals. Hanks leads the team in assists. Ransom has six shutouts and his goals against average is 1.12 a game.

"We are playing well and I think we have things in the right direction going into number 11 under this week," said Ransom.

Women's soccer team ranked No.7 in nation

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The PC women's soccer program is very young this year, but this youth has helped the program attain a national ranking of thirteen, a 7-4-1 overall record and a 4-1 conference record.

"The team is young, but we are playing well and coming together as a team," said head coach Brian Purcell.

PC defeated Erskine Sept. 10, with a 2-1 win. On a rainy, muddy field, senior Brooke Wright and sophomore Sara Plank scored in the second half and left with a victory.

Belmont Abbey gave PC a scare before Wright put the game out of reach. She scored six minutes into overtime to pull out a 1-0 victory and kept PC undefeated.

The Blue Hose defeated a pesky Lenoir Rhyne team 3-2. Wright scored her third goal of the season but got help from juniors Diane Hancock and Rebecca Monroe. PC outshot Lenoir Rhyne 16-6.

PC lost its first match of the season when the number-two-ranked team in the country, Lynn, squeaked out a 1-0 victory four minutes into overtime. Junior goalkeeper Sarah Price had nine saves.

PC scored four goals in the first half to shut-out Gardner-Webb 4-0. Sophomore Karen Markham scored two goals while Monroe and freshman Jamie Harris each scored one goal. Price stood tall in goal by making seven saves.

Junior Heather Jones led the Blue Hose to a 1-0 victory over Carson-Newman. Her goal came one minute into overtime. PC outshot Carson-Newman 13-3 but just could not put the ball in the back of the net during regulation.

On Sept. 30 PC lost to region foe Mars Hill 2-1. Mars Hill scored with seven minutes left in the second half. PC outshot Mars Hill 19-3, but could only score once by Markham early in the first half.

PC scored a major win over sixth-ranked Francis Marion University 1-0. This was Francis Marion's first loss of the season; Hancock scored the only goal of the game at the thirtieth minute mark.

Price had her fifth shutout of the season with a 2-0 victory over the Wingate Bulldogs. Wingate scored in their own goal and Jones put the other goal into the back of the net.

PC entertained sixth-ranked Barry University and came away with a 0-0 double-overtime tie. Price stopped all 11 Barry shots and defended the goal on ten cornerkicks. Price was named SAC/Pepsi Player of the Week for her shutouts against Barry and Wingate.

"Losing Wright for the rest of season, the team has responded well and come together and can play well with any team in the country," said Purcell.

Jones, Wright and Markham lead the team with three goals each. Harris leads the team in assists with three. Price's goals against average is .82 per game.

PC has two tough matches against Queens College Oct. 28 and Catawba Nov. 1.

Blue Hose volleyball continues impressive season

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Blue Hose volleyball team is off to a 15-6 overall record and a 7-2 SAC record.

On Sept. 24, PC defeated Catawba 3-2 (15-13, 6-15, 7-15, 17-15, 15-9). Senior Beth Mann had 40 kills and 33 digs. Senior Mary Kruse had 18 kills and 30 digs. Senior Erin Olson had 5 blocks and senior Jenny Frieling had 84 assists.

PC went to Gardner-Webb and lost 3-0 (15-8, 15-12, 15-13). PC lost to Gardner-Webb earlier this year in the Catawba Tournament.

The Blue Hose played a hard fought match against conference foe Mars Hill but lost 3-2 (4-15, 15-8, 13-15, 15-8, 11-15). PC was led by sophomore Stephanie Cloud, who had 25 digs. Mann led the team with 21 kills. Mars Hill is now first in the SAC with a conference record of 6-1 and a seven game winning streak.

PC travelled to Florida over Fall Break to compete in the prestigious Moccasin Classic. The Blue Hose won two and lost two games. PC defeated Florida Tech in the opener 3-1 (15-12, 13-15, 15-10, 15-10). In their second match, PC lost to Florida Southern 3-0 (15-5, 15-12, 15-8). PC defeated Rollins 3-2 (15-8, 14-16, 15-7, 10-15, 15-11). PC's fourth match was against the second-ranked University of Tampa. PC lost 3-1. Tampa was national runner-up last year and came within three points of being national champions.

"We accomplished our goals in the tournament and with this we can play against the top teams nationally," said Head Coach Debbie Holcombe.

PC defeated Carson-Newman 3-1 (13-15, 15-3, 15-6, 15-9). Mann had 25 kills while Frieling had 51 assists and Kruse had 15 digs.

"We've had a good season so far and have stepped up our level of play," said Cloud. As long as we play together as a team, nobody can beat us in our conference.

Mann leads the team in kills with 318. Kruse leads the team with 269 digs. PC has home games against Lenoir Rhyne Oct. 28 and Gardner-Webb Oct. 29.

Templeton addition on schedule

-from staff reports

Construction of the addition to Templeton Gymnasium is proceeding according to schedule and should be completed sometime in mid-January, according to Skip Zubrod, vice president of finance.

"Construction is moving along well," said Zubrod. "I don't anticipate any problems."

The addition will house five locker rooms for female athletes and four locker rooms for male athletes. The addition will also house ten offices for head coaches and assistant coaches.

"The addition is intended primarily to augment women's sports," said Zubrod. "When Templeton was built, there were no women's sports at PC."

Construction is being carried out by Cannon Construction Company of Newberry, SC.

Advancement director Brown to leave PC, headed for college presidency

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Following a year of dramatic change within the Presbyterian College administration, another PC vice president has announced his intention to leave the school.

Vice president for college advancement Dr. Ted Brown has announced that he will assume the presidency of Martin Methodist College in Pulaski, Tenn. effective March 1, 1998. Brown will be the 36th president of MMC.

Brown's decision to leave PC comes in the wake of several departures from the college's administration. Brown's resignation represents the third departure of a top-level administrator since former president Dr. Kenneth B. Orr announced his decision to retire last fall.

Brown's duties during his 12 years at PC have included oversight of the college's alumni relations, fund raising, and church relations.

Brown will be presented with an entirely new set of challenges and opportunities when he takes the helm of MMC in March.

"The first priority is getting acquainted," said Brown of the tasks that lie before him. "That's always the first priority for any new president, to get to know the constituency."

Once Brown has acquainted himself with Martin's administration, faculty, students and Trustees, his first major project will be to expand the enrollment of the college. Martin, a small, liberal arts college, presently has an enrollment of approximately 600 students.

"That [student enrollment] is going to be the first item on the table," said when you're offered a college presidency you don't think about it, it's just something that you do when the offer comes along. I was tremendously honored, but it was an incredibly difficult decision because I love PC."

According to Brown, several key factors influenced his decision.

First, Brown saw an opportunity to would either start and finish that campaign or leave before we were underway with that. So it seemed to me that there was about an 18-month window that, if an opportunity came along, I would want to respond to it."

Third, Martin's location played a role in Brown's decision. Brown grew fond of Tennessee while studying at Vanderbilt University. He holds a Master of Divinity degree and a Ph.D. in higher education administration from Vanderbilt. Following his studies, Brown served Vanderbilt Divinity School as assistant dean and director of development.

"We had almost eight years in Nashville and enjoyed the setting there. I did two degrees at Vanderbilt, and so the opportunity to go back there and be close to some old friends was another nice possibility," said Brown.

One final factor that drew Brown to Martin was the college's close connection to the United Methodist Church.

"The church connection, which parallels PC's church relationship, is very strong. The relationship with the United Methodist Church is one that has never been questioned or weakened in any way," said Brown. "So that was another thing that was attractive to me."

In light of the opportunities that lay before him, Brown admits his reluctance to leave the town that has been his home for 12 years.

"We love Clinton," said Brown. "It's a neat family town. My family has deep connections here and good, close friends. It's going to be a painful time between now and March."

Brown.

"There is a genuine and concerted interest in growing. They're at about 600 students now, and they want to be right at 1,000 or perhaps a little bit larger," he said. "I think it's the same sort of inclination PC has --- that to offer an educationally viable academic program you need to be in the 1,000 to 1,200 range."

Despite the seemingly irresistible attraction one might have to accept a college presidency, Brown admits that his decision to leave was by no means easy.

"It was an incredibly difficult decision," he said. "People assume that lead Martin in a positive direction.

"In a lot of respects, Martin College has the potential that I have seen realized at PC during my twelve years here... a very strong Board of Trustees and an incredible level of enthusiasm about the future of the college," he said.

Second, the timing was right with respect to his duties at PC. The next major project facing PC's Advancement Office is a campaign to expand the school's endowment. Such campaigns often last several years.

"We know that there is a major campaign looming on the horizon," said Brown. "I had made up my mind that I

POINT

PC losing a winner in Ted Brown

When vice president for college advancement Dr. Ted Brown leaves campus next semester, PC will lose one of its finest administrators.

Brown, whose commitment to this institution has kept him in Clinton for the last 12 years, deserves a heart-felt "thank you" from each member of the college community.

While Brown's is a face that may not be immediately recognizable to some students, the fruits of his labor can be seen all over campus. In his role as director of advancement, Brown is responsible for raising funds for the school. These funds are used to construct buildings, pay bills and establish scholarships.

To give you an idea of what has kept Brown busy during his years at PC, the following is a list of some of the building projects organized and completed during his tenure: renovation of Jacobs Hall, construction of Edmunds Hall, Barron Hall, Grotnes Hall, Brown Commons, Harper Center, Mabry-Smith-Yonce center, Harrington-Peachtree Church Academic Center, and the current addition to Templeton Gymnasium, just to name a few.

Martin Methodist College is very fortunate to have Ted Brown assuming its presidency. PC has benefited tremendously from his deep and abiding commitment to providing for the financial needs of this institution. We know he will work wonders in Tennessee.

Busy Judicial docket a bad sign

Now well into the fall semester, the student body has seen to it that members of the college's Judicial Council make the most of their membership.

To date, the Council has been called together 4 times to hear violations of the Honor Code or Code of Conduct.

What does this tell us? The rate of conviction tells us that an alarming number of students are not conducting themselves in a manner that reflects a commitment to live and study honorably.

Honor is serious business, and each student should take time to reacquire themselves with the promises they made when they entered this community.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

I would like to clarify a few inaccuracies made in the article "My Turn" in the October 24, 1997 issue of the Blue Stocking.

First, RHA is made up of three elected officers: a President, who is elected by the entire student body; Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer and a president from each residence hall. It does not include the RA's. The purpose of this organization is "to represent the residents of all PC residence halls on all matters concerning the residence hall community. RHA shall be responsible for facilitating communication and cooperation between residence halls, to seek solutions to problems facing resident student and residence hall governments, and to provide and coordinate programs which benefit the residence hall community." All resident students are technically members of RHA and are invited to all meetings which take place Wednesday nights at 7:30 p.m. in the front room on the second floor of Sprague.

Second, let me clarify the process of changing the visitation policy. The process starts with RHA and can be brought to the RHA by any resident student. It does not have to come through a RA or RD. The RHA can then propose changes to the policy to the Student Affairs Council. If the Student Affairs Council approves the changes, it would then have to be approved by the faculty and possibly the Board of Trustees. It does not have to go through SGA or the Academic Affairs Council.

Third, I would beg to differ with the statement, "At many universities and colleges, there are multiple policies, but at PC, there is only one policy, with three options." Here at PC, we have two policies. One policy is the one the article talks about changing. The other one is the one which governs the townhouses. The townhouses have a 24-hour visitation policy. This is basically the same exact policy as the one at Furman. At Furman, the residence halls have the same visitation hours as we do. In their apartment complex, the residents sign a contract with their roommate agreeing on the visitation hours which will govern their apartment. These hours can range from 24-7 to the traditional visitation hours and vary from apartment to apartment. The Head Resident apartments in the residence halls are treated the same as the apartment complex.

Lastly, I would like to point out several reasons why we have a visitation policy. One of the main reasons we have a visitation policy is for safety reasons. The visitation policy makes it less likely that a strange person of the opposite sex will be confronted after hours. This protects residents against strange men or women who have bad intentions from wandering the halls late at night.

Another reason is to help prevent roommate conflicts. Several of the roommate conflicts we deal with each year center on the fact that the roommate's boyfriend or girlfriend stays over or is not welcome. The visitation policy gives these residents an excuse to ask the boyfriend/girlfriend to leave when they feel uncomfortable.

Michael Rosolino

Acting Director of Residence Life
RHA Advisor

Dear Editor:

This letter is written in response to the article written by Candice McLaurin in the October 24 issue of the Blue Stocking. There are some inaccuracies which should be corrected.

1. Any changes in the college visitation policy would not have to be approved by the student council. However, I think that would be advisable because the president of the Residence Hall Association is a member of the student council and represents all residence hall students in student council meetings.

2. A suggested policy change does not have to be brought to the attention of a Resident Assistant or Resident Director first, although that may be done. Suggestions can also be made to RHA members, the Student Affairs Council, or to members of the Student Affairs Staff. RA's and RD's are not elected and are not a part of the governance structure unless they hold dual office.

3. The Academic Affairs Council would not necessarily have a change in the visitation policy on their agenda for consideration.

4. The statement about Furman University having a 24-hour visitation in its residence halls is inaccurate and misleading. In Furman's junior and senior apartment complex, 24-hour visitation is an option, but only when the residents agree and sign a contract. None of Furman's dorms have 24-hour visitation except for the RD/Head Resident's apartment, and then only where the third apartment has an exterior door entrance.

While I am not fundamentally in favor of a 24-hour visitation policy at Presbyterian College, I am willing to listen and consider proposed changes and have done so in meetings with the Residence Hall Association. The primary reason for my position is that many roommate conflicts and complaints concern the presence or frequency of members of the opposite sex being in rooms which results in a student's being unable to study, sleep, or feel comfortable.

There are many defensible arguments for and against a 24-hour visitation policy and I agree with some points on both sides of the issue. However, the concern expressed in McLaurin's article for students who violate the present policy in order to study is an issue which I believe can be solved in ways more specific to the problem than changing to a 24-hour visitation policy. One possible solution is providing 24-hour access to study in Harrington-Peachtree or some other building on campus.

Big man Baughman exemplifies campus involvement

by Kay Owen
Campus Life Editor

You might see him playing his guitar and singing on stage at linkings or walking through campus giving a tour. Senior Michael Baughman is a man about campus and is involved in many activities at PC.

A business administration and "aspiring music minor," Baughman has been a member or currently participates in many different organizations on campus including being an SVS coordinator and a member of Pi Kappa Phi, Stirlings, Student Alumni Council, Campus Outreach, Celtic Cross, PC Choir and Student Fellowship Choir. Student Fellowship Choir was a challenge for Baughman. His year as a member of that organization was life-changing and gave him a new outlook on many different things.

"It made me realize your life is not out on your own and not always believe what you are taught to believe," Baughman said.

He said his first impression of the group made him feel at home. Like he was "fitting in" on other people's turf. But he soon learned to break down those boundaries. Baughman learned the most through the fellowship choir's prayer and praise time.

Baughman believes PC is about learning to be oneself and forcing oneself into new experiences. Getting involved and meeting people are Baughman's finest memories of his years on campus.

"The whole experience—getting involved, meeting people, not excluding myself from anything—that is what PC is all about," Baughman said. "My whole junior year was a big chance to get involved. I know all of the people here are very similar, but everyone has something to offer and if you do not get to know individuals, you don't engulf yourself in the full PC experience."

Many friends at PC influenced Baughman as he grew through his college experience. He feels the diversity of people he knows helped to shape his time here and his growing process.

"There have been thousands of people who have gotten me involved," Baughman said. "Having different groups of friends has gotten me connected. I haven't tried not to be a part of a clique, but there were so many people I wanted to know that I never got into a particular group."

Baughman believes students must make an effort to enjoy the PC experience.

"At PC," Baughman said, "you get out of it what you put into it. If you don't get out and do different things you are not going to grow as a person. In college, you have to put yourself in uncomfortable situations and see how you react to them. That is a way to find yourself."

Dr. Jermain Disasa describes Baughman as a person who is always positive and pleasant around other people regardless of the situation.

"The thing I like about him besides being tall and intimidating is that he also carries a great personality and cheerful attitude," Disasa said. "Even though he is so big, he can make himself as small as you are. He can bring himself to any level."

No major influence pushed Baughman to attend PC. He took a chance on a school with which he was not entirely familiar.

"I got in basically where I applied," Baughman said, "but I didn't want a big school. PC was one of the best schools I applied to, and I had been here a few times and knew some people, but it was a shot in the dark. I didn't know much about the school, but I also didn't have a plan for a major, so liberal arts was the best way for me to go. Also, some major influences in my life, my preacher and youth minister, graduated from PC, so I thought it could be a good place to go."

Growing up in Anderson, SC, Baughman was the youngest child. His sister laid the groundwork, and he benefited from her experiences. His father taught him worth ethic by making him take summer jobs.

"Had it made because my sister made a lot of mistakes that I got to learn from," Baughman said. "I wasn't always good, but my parents were always singing my praises because I never got caught where my sister did. Now, I was a baby and was sheltered and got whatever I needed or wanted as a kid, so in college I wanted to learn to be on my own and to discover who I am because in high school I never did."

Disasa sees Baughman as a person very concerned with the well-being of children and young people today.

"We chat and talk together about life," Disasa said, "and we also talk about the aspect of youth and children. I think he pays a lot of attention to that."

This summer Baughman plans to do a charity marathon. He is currently in the application process and has to raise $6000 in order to participate.

"I am excited about this summer," Baughman said. "I am riding the Journey of Hope, a cross country bike trip from San Francisco to Washington, DC. It raises money for PUSH (People Understanding Severely Handicappeds)."

Summer Missionary Scholarship Announcement

Ever wanted to be a missionary for a summer—but wrote that idea off because you need summer salary savings for school? Well, if you are a member of the Presbyterian Church (USA) or Associate Reformed Presbyterian denominations and would like to serve in your denomination's summer mission program, there is good news!

The Jane Todd Presseau Summer Missionary Scholarship is available to supply the money a summer missionary would normally earn and save. PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council acquits two, suspends one

The Judicial Council met Thursday, October 23, 1997 to hear an Honor Code case involving a charge of cheating. Two individuals were involved in the case. The charge was read to each defendant by the chairman, to which the defendants both pled not guilty.

After the plea, the prosecution and defense each presented their opening arguments. The prosecution then presented its case, calling only one witness, the professor in whose class the violation allegedly occurred. After which, the defendant called three witnesses. Two offered character testimony while the third was another student in the particular class.

The prosecution and defense then summarized their cases. The chairman dismissed them from the room while the Council deliberated. A verdict of NOT GUILTY was returned and the hearing was adjourned.

The Judicial Council met on the evening of Thursday, October 30, 1997 to hear an Honor Code case. The charges, stealing and lying in college business, were read to the defendant by the chairman. The defendant plead guilty, and the defense presented evidence of mitigating and extenuating circumstances. The first witness for the defense was the defendant, who retold the story of what took place, and explained her actions following. The defense then called several witnesses to testify that this was indeed out of character for the defendant. A fellow student was called, as well as a family friend.

The prosecution then presented its case. It offered that few mitigating circumstances, if any, were involved, and seeing that two Honor Code violations were committed, no less than the normal penalty should be implemented. An incident report was entered, and no witnesses were called. The defense then counter-offered a penalty recommendation comprised of community service hours that would allow the defendant to remain at PC.

The prosecution and defense were excused from the room while the Council deliberated. After deliberations, the defendant was then called back into the room, and punishment read. The Council ruled that the normal penalty for a first-offense Honor Code violation be implemented, suspension for the remainder of the fall semester as well as for the spring semester. The punishment was appealed, and on November 6, 1997 the Appeals Board upheld the Judicial Council's decision.

Equestrian team seeks students

The Presbyterian College equestrian team is currently seeking interested students to participate in intercollegiate competition.

The team, which is new to PC, meets for practice once per week at the Foxcrest stables in Laurens. The competitions incorporate both the Western and English riding styles.

The team is currently preparing for its next meet, which will be February 14 at the University of South Carolina. Interested students need no previous experience.

Tough men's basketball team ready for tough season

By Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The men's basketball team won its first game of the season by defeating Anderson College 70-56. The team improved from its exhibition loss to the Columbia Sharkheads 80-79. Against Anderson College, Byron Graham scored a team high 13 points. Yahnick Martin and D.J. Humphries both scored 11 points and Eric Burrow contributed nine points.

We need to step up and definitely stop people on defense and get the ball to our out players," said Head Coach Greg Nibert.

Coach Nibert begins his ninth season coaching the men's basketball team. The SAC Coach of the Year in 1997.

"We have the toughest schedule PC has ever had..."
— Coach Greg Nibert

Nibert has won 142 games in eight seasons here. Last year, Nibert led the men's basketball team to a second straight NCAA Tournament appearance and a final ranking of fifteenth nationally. PC finished 13-1, winning the regular season title and 20-7 overall.

The Blue Hose are picked to finish second in the SAC and are ranked third in the region.

"We usually play our best basketball during the second half of the season and we have the toughest schedule PC has ever had," said Nibert.

Three starters and ten letterwinners return this year. Seniors who will take a leadership role are center Erik Rothwell, guard Patrick Johnson and forward Blake Buchanan. Rothwell averaged four points per game last year and shot 60% from the floor. Rothwell was named to the SAC Academic Honor Roll. Johnson is a two-year starter who averaged 7.7 points and dished out 3.3 assists per game. Buchanan gives PC a big man off the bench. He appeared in 17 contests last year.

"We have a good base of players that we should be able to win the conference this year," said Buchanan.

The Blue Hose will have experience with five returning juniors: center Eric Burrow, forwards Jason Cochcroft, Byron Graham and Jason McCraw, and guard Grant Gillespie. Burrow returns as PC's starting center. He is a preseason All-SAC conference pick who averaged 12.3 points and 7.6 blocks per game last year. Burrow was First-Team All-South Atlantic Conference and NACBC Second-Team All-District last year.

Cochcroft is a backup forward who can step out behind the arc and drain the three. Graham started in the wing slot last year. He is a preseason All-South Conference Selection. Graham averaged 10.5 points per game last year. In the NCAA Tournament against Elizabeth City, Graham scored 20 points and grabbed seven rebounds. McCraw is a reserve forward who played in eight games last year. Gillespie will give PC depth this year coming off the bench.

"We graduated some good seniors and we have a lot of young players this season, so the talent should be there this year," said Cochcroft. Two sophomores return.

forward Mae Harper and guard Yahnick Martin. Harper saw action in 24 games and Martin saw action in all 27 games last year with four starts averaging 3.7 points a game.

Coach Nibert brought in five talented freshmen who will add a lot of depth to the Blue Hose basketball team. Seth Barkley is a forward from Elkin High School averaging 12.5 points. Kevin Campbell is a guard who earned all-state honors from Wren High School. He averaged 18 points, eight assists and seven rebounds per game. D.J. Humphries plays guard and made All-State Honors for Union High School averaging 22 points and 11 rebounds. Justin Valentine is a forward from Milton High School. He averaged 18 points and nine rebounds. Brad Westbrook graduated from Milton High School where he averaged 18 points and nine rebounds at the forward spot.

Women's basketball team ready for action

By Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The women's basketball team started their season at the Ron Memorial Tournament at Kennesaw, Ga. PC won their first game, defeating Alabama Huntsville 71-55. Jill Neumann led the team with 16 points and Tonay Kelley added 11. In the championship game, PC lost to Kennesaw State 64-56. PC led 31-21 at halftime. Rachel Sloan and Kelley each scored 12 and Neumann scored 10.

Beth Couture enters her ninth season as Women's Head Basketball Coach. Couture was named SAC Coach of the Year in 1997, as PC posted a 17-10 record and an 8-6 conference record. She has guided PC to two NCAA Division II National Tournament appearances. Couture has won 140 games in her eight years here.

"Our number one goal is to ultimately get to the NCAA Division II Tournament but we want to win the SAC this year," said Couture.

The Blue Hose return three starters and 10 letterwinners. Center Tonay Kelley, forward Denzel Barman, and guard Alice Ridgill are the returning seniors. Kelley averaged ten points and five rebounds per game. She was selected to the Pre-Season All South Atlantic Conference Team. She was named PC's Best Offensive Player last year at the award's banquet. Barman ranks seventeenth on PC's all-time rebounding list with 390. She is also seventh in blocks with 44. Barman averaged five points last year. Ridgill averaged 3.4 points while dishing out 1.2 assists per game.

Juniors returning are center Jennifer Condon, forward Laita Jones, and guard Darah Huffman. Condon started two games last year averaging 2.7 points and 2.3 rebounds. Condon was named to the SAC Academic Honor Roll. Jones averaged 8.6 points and 4.1 rebounds per game. She finished fourth on the team in scoring last year. Huffman averaged 8.1 points last year, but got a career high with 21 points against Augsburg.

PC returns four guards that are all juniors: Jill Neumann, Christina McRae, Jenny Ray, and Heather Couch. Neumann is a returning starter who was named SAC Freshman of the Year and is preseason All-SAC Second Team. Neumann averaged 9.1 points while dishing out 3.2 assists per game. McRae is coming back from a second half season knee injury. She scored four points and three assists against Lander last year. Also coming back from knee surgery is Couch. She was redshirted last year so she has an extra year of eligibility. Couch started 15 games her freshman year averaging 8.4 points per game. Ray came off the bench in 24 games last season to give the Blue Hose a spark at the guard spot. She averaged two points per game.

"We should be good this year because we have talent and a deep bench this year," said Neumann.

"We are vaulting on the perimeter this year but have experience at the post positions," said Couture. They will be four fresh faces on the women's basketball team. Couture brought in guards Amy Monroe, Tracy Woods, and Sarah Smyrl and forwards Rachel Sloan and Candice Choice. Monroe averaged ten points for Hillcrest High School. Woods averaged 13 points at Mauldin High School. She was named to the All State Team and played in the North-South All-Star Game. Smyrl averaged 12.8 points per game for Loggitt High School. Sloan is the reigning South Carolina 4A Player of the Year while averaging 16 points for Carolina Academy. Choice averaged 20 points for St. John's High School.

"I want to see offensive execution this year and good, tough defensive play," said Couture. "I want to see us play hard this year and this team is one of my hardest working teams yet."

PC will play its first home game of the season against Armstrong State Nov. 19.

ATHLETIC HONORS

MANN NAMED SAC PLAYER OF THE YEAR

Junior Beth Mann was honored last week as the 1997 South Atlantic Conference All-Star Player of the Year. The 5-11 outside hitter from Due West was named the regular season as the SAC statistical leader in kills per game, hitting .34 while placing fourth in hitting percentage (.28) and scoring (10.5 points). The preseason All-SAC selection posted 40 kills during a career-high 10 games last year, which not only tied for the most in NCAA Division II this season but was also the fifth best single match performance in NCAA Division II volleyball history.

Among key on the All-SAC first team is Erin Olson, a senior middle blocker from Oconee State. On the second team is Mary Kruse, a senior outside hitter from Westminster.

BURROW NAMED PRE-SEASON ALL-AMERICAN

Eric Burrow, a 6-10 junior center from Bowersville, Ga., has been named to the 1997-98 Preseason Division II Bulletin Super 16 All-America team.

Burrow averaged 12.3 points, 7.6 rebounds, 2.0 blocks while shooting 63.0% from the field last season and was named first-team All-SAC.

He was the only player from the South Atlantic Conference named to the preseason team this season by the magazine, which picked the Blue Hose as the third best team in the NCAA Division II South Atlantic Region this season behind Georgia College and North Carolina Central.

Team Handball hits PC

Action has begun with the brand-new men's and women's handball teams. Both teams have faced-off against teams from rival colleges. This first handball season is reaching its conclusion, with only the Southeast championship tournament left in each team's schedule. PC will host those games December 5 & 6. The women will face Furman, Lander, and Georgia Southern. The men will face Furman, Lander, Benedict, Georgia Tech, Georgia Southern, Emory, and Kennesaw.

Lady Blue Hose fall to Catawba

PC played host to a first round game of the 1997 NCAA Division II National Soccer Tournament on Sunday, November 16. The Lady Blue Hose faced off against Catawba on the Ponderosa. Despite strong play from the Blue Hose, PC could not pull out a victory. Catawba won 2-0.

THE LAST WORD: Back page veterans deal with the complex issue of consumer protection by Tommy Reiser and Leighton Hart

with Last Word Intern Robbie Bryan

Dear Sir or Madam:

It has come to my attention that a certain local restaurant (who I wish to remain nameless for legal reasons) has been participating in what many students are calling the "French Fry" conspiracy. For years this well-known restaurant has been cheating PC students and Clintonians out of not only money, but also French Fries. I think this is a serious issue and our campus should be made aware of it.

You see, the problem is not with the actual prices. The unseen problem occurs when you order a plate and do not like cole slaw. A plate normally comes with cole slaw and yum yum fries, but there exists an option to replace the white cole slaw with extra golden brown fries. This option is the typical choice of many patrons (excluding those who like cole slaw). Upon selecting this yum yum fry/slaw swap, you are FORCED to pay an extra 65 cents. To the normal person this increase may seem fair, but trust me the price is bad, not good, not good, bad, and not good. If you examine the prices closely, you will see that a sandwich, a medium drink, and 2 orders of large yum yum fries can be purchased for about the same price. You are essentially paying this restaurant to take away your cole slaw and give you less yum yum fries. When I asked my waitress about the conspiracy she defended the restaurant by saying (and I quote), "The potatoes cost more than the stuff the cole slaw is made of, that's why you have to pay more." Not wanting to start an argument, I accepted this knowing it was a clever ploy they used to more confuse me. You and I both know that they don't have homemade French Fries and I am pretty sure the price of frozen yum yum French Fries is neither expensive nor dependent on the volatile potato stock on Wall Street. Whenever I go to Ingle's a 1 lb. bag of frozen yum yum French Fries cost only $2.99.

I'm really pissed off now! Be smart, don't get the plate!!!

Your Protector and Defender.

Robbie Bryan

Dear Robbie:

Thanks for bringing this controversy to our attention. As you may or may not know, we at the Blue Stocking are committed to seeking the truth, regardless of the consequences. We don't care who gets hurt, we're going to get the real story out to our readers. Both of them.

While your letter confronts some very serious issues, there are some gaps that must be filled. First, your waitress should know that "the stuff cole slaw is made of" is known to people all over the world as "cabbage." Second, we think it's very important that the PC community realize that this policy discriminates in favor of those who adore cole slaw.

Finally, we are delighted you have brought this matter to our attention because it raises a fundamental question that every American should answer for his or herself- Which is worse? Getting cheated out of money or getting cheated out of delicious French Fries?

SGA committee secures 24-hour study in H-P

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

When the Student Government Association established its goals for the 1997-1998 school year, increasing student study hours in classroom buildings was a major area of concern. According to Rich Lassiter, SGA senior class representative, the goal has been accomplished: as of December 1, students have 24-hour study access to the Harrington-Peachtree building.

Since the completion of H-P in the spring of 1996, only the two ground floor rooms beneath the amphitheater have been open to students 24 hours a day.

"Before now, we've been able to go on the ground floor of H-P, two small rooms with fixed desks and chairs, which were not very accommodating and didn't have enough room for students who wanted to study late at night," said Lassiter, who spearheaded the SGA campaign for extended study hours.

"Originally we wanted to expand [available study rooms] to include just the entire ground floor [of H-P], so we submitted a proposal to Dr. Reeves on November 3. Dr. Reeves was very receptive to the change," said Lassiter.

The proposal raised issues such as inadequate study areas in dorms; the closing of the Huddle House, a traditional study haven, and the atmosphere in Springs, a 24 hour study area in the past, which was not conducive to quiet study time. In addition the proposal suggested a plan for opening the entire ground floor of H-P to students with late-night study habits.

Upon reception of the proposal, Dr. Reeves appointed Morris Galloway, Dean of Administrative Services, and Dean of Students, Joe Nixon, to a committee with SGA members Brad Blake and Lassiter and gave them a week to work through the proposal. Vice president for finance Skip Zubrod and interim vice president for academic affairs Dr. David Gillespie also attended the meeting.

Lassiter said the committee's solution was to give students 24-hour access to most of H-P.

"We decided the most feasible way to give students extended classroom study hours was to give them H-P. It was the only building that already had limited access via the card-readers, so students, especially female students, might feel more comfortable studying there late at night," said Lassiter.

Since the elevator in H-P provides access from the ground floor to the entire building, opening just the first floor was not an option.

Lassiter said, "If you had access to the first floor, you had access to the whole building. The plan became to have access to the whole building except the five rooms with computer equipment."

The solution generated some discussion about heating and cooling costs said Lassiter and also about "how nice the building is."

"Of course, there's always the fear also that computer rooms could be broken into," Lassiter added. "We've asked that any non-PC students be reported to Public Safety," he said.

Grey Mayson, Chief of Public Safety at the college, commented on his intentions to increase security for H-P at night.

"What is going to happen is the building will be locked up at regular time. We will do the normal security rounds but will step them up a little bit as necessary just to walk through the buildings as people study late at night," said Mayson.

Mayson felt comfortable with the security in the building, because it has card-lock access and plenty of telephones.

"Students can call us if they see something suspicious. There is [a telephone] in the basement and one on the main floor, and I think there's one on every floor," said Mayson.

"Students have asked for a number of years to have a study area available. We feel safe about ya'll being in there. During exam times we'll do walk throughs of all the buildings without card-access," said Mayson.

Intramural field flasher gets jail time

A Simpsonville man was recently sentenced to one year in the South Carolina Department of Corrections and four years probation by Eighth Circuit Judge Thomas Hughton, Jr.

David Alan Youngblood of 106 Hackamore Court in Simpsonville was arrested June 13, 1997 after indecently exposing himself to a female at the PC intramural park. On that date, PC Public Safety lieutenant Tim Painter responded to the call from a cell phone. Painter fell in behind the subject vehicle on East Maple Street as Youngblood's vehicle left the intramural park. Youngblood failed to stop for the blue light and siren for approximately one mile. One Clinton Police cruiser joined the pursuit as well as one off-duty PC Public Safety officer and one off-duty Clinton Police officer.

The incident report noted Youngblood's vehicle license plate was covered by a red towel to obscure the license number. In addition to the indecent exposure charge, Youngblood was charged with obscured vehicle license, reckless driving, and failure to stop for blue light.

PC Public Safety Chief Grey Mason indicated there have been four reports of indecent exposure within the past year at the intramural park. Three reports indicated the subject drove a vehicle of the same color and description as Youngblood's vehicle. There have been no further reports since Youngblood's arrest.

Students wait in line to pay for breakfast at the canteen in Springs Campus Center. Students may now charge up to three meals on their meal cards throughout the day at Springs provided that they do not charge more than three meals on their card per day, regardless of whether the meals are eaten at Springs or Greenville Dining Hall. According to Skip Zubrod, vice-president for finance, the present meal card policy was always the official policy, but has been recently reinforced when questions concerning the policy were raised.

POINT

Hats off to campus leaders for success of proposal

Congratulations to the Student Government Association for the successful implementation of its proposal to expand computer lab hours and to provide 24-hour access to the entire Harrington-Peachtree Academic Center.

The manner by which the proposal was implemented showed signs of quality performance by several student leaders. Those student leaders, after forming a committee to discuss the issue, were able to effectively sell their position to school administrators in a constructive and non-confrontational fashion. Credit should also be given to those administrators that helped make 24-hour study in all of H-P a reality. The willingness of administrators to be receptive to the proposal and to experiment with the new plan is encouraging.

It is the hope of the Blue Stocking that the Student Affairs Council will be just as receptive to student concerns when that group takes action on the Residence Hall Association's proposal to revise dorm visitation policies.

"Dead week" still squeezing life out of students

The end of another semester has arrived, and the work is almost over. The only challenges left to overcome are final exams.

It has been customary in the past for the week prior to exams to be a "dead" week, meaning that professors have made efforts not to administer major tests.

The end of each semester is an exceptionally busy time for every member of the college community, students above all. While we respect the right of the faculty to construct their syllabi autonomously, it is our belief that professors should make a good faith effort to ensure that students are not faced with major tests, projects, and reading assignments during the last week of classes. This will allow students to finish term papers and smaller projects, get a jump on exams, and squeeze in the mental and spiritual preparation necessary to face the coming week of rigorous examination.

Reimagining: If God can be a woman, why not Santa?

By: Dan Hart, Managing Editor

Modern theology has, in recent years, revolutionized our conception of the divine and has freed us from our unenlightened, paternalistic biases, yet one major obstacle still remains in our quest to develop a fully inclusive attitude — the most patriarchal symbol of our own culture — Father Christmas himself, Santa Claus.

Clearly our conception of the jolly Christmas spirit as a white-bearded, aged male is rooted in the prejudices of our Western patriarchal society. While such a view of Santa Claus may have been true in the past, and since truth is relative, we as a society must invent a truth that is relevant to our modern culture. We must begin to become comfortable with the idea of Santa Claus as a jolly, fat woman.

But while we're at it, we should also consider some of the other myths surrounding the Santa figure that are clearly incorrect and dangerous.

First of all, we must reject our environmentally insensitive notions of the Christmas Parent. Should we, I ask, portray our beloved holiday heroine as wearing the fur of innocent animals which were mercilessly slaughtered to fulfill the selfish greed of human beings? Should we, I ask, portray dear old St. Nicklette as the abusive slave driver of defenseless reindeer? I answer that such a view of Santa Claus only helps to support an attitude that denies the rights of animals; therefore, such a view must be rejected if we are to develop as a progressive society that recognizes the personal rights of all hooved, antlered animals.

Second, we must reject our capitalist notions that Santa Claus exploits laborers in a toy-manufacturing sweatshop. An analysis of Santa's manufacturing enterprises raises two disturbing questions: 1) Does Santa force elves to work in the infamous sweatshop simply because they are horizontally challenged and, therefore, unable to resist Santa's oppression? 2) Does Santa discriminate against other mythological creatures (e.g., nymphs and satyrs) by hiring only elves to work in the toy factory?

Finally, we must reject our Eurocentric notions that Santa Claus is the patron saint of the Christmas holiday, since such a view necessarily excludes those who do not celebrate Christmas. I suggest that we recognize Santa as the symbol of a non-sectarian Winter Festival and change the date of Santa's arrival to Dec. 21 in honor of the winter solstice. I realize that such changes will anger many of those reactionary extremists who still regard Christmas as a celebration of Christ's birth and who still insist that the Santa Claus figure is derived from the Christian Saint Nicholas. Such extremists should not be allowed to force their religious views on the rest of the population by taking a perfectly good American consumer tradition and trying to make it into a religious celebration. In addition, extending celebration of the Winter Festival to people who normally would have no need to buy expensive gifts in December is good for the nation as a whole, since merchants will sell more goods and our national economy will thereby be strengthened.

I urge that these reforms be adopted immediately and that all people adopt a more inclusive view of Santa Claus. Remember—Ms. Claus is making a list and checking it twice, and she's gonna find out whose inclusive and nice! Ms. Claus is coming to town!

SGA thanks administrators, outgoing officers

It is hard to believe that this semester is coming to an end. I sure do hope that everyone has had a great year. We definitely have a lot to look forward to next year with the arrival of our new president, Dr. John Griffith.

On behalf of the student body, I would like to thank Dr. Reeves for all of his contributions as interim president. He has been very supportive of SGA and very visible to the students around campus. We appreciate everything he has done and will miss him when he is gone.

SGA has stayed busy throughout the semester. We recently accomplished our goal of increasing study hours in academic buildings and in the computer labs. Harrington-Peachtree will now be open on a 24-hour basis. Only students will be allowed access through the card readers on the ground floor. The computer lab in H-P will remain open to midnight. It will also be open on Saturdays from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. and on Sundays starting at 1:30 p.m. A special thanks to Rich Lassner and Brad Blake for working so hard to get this study hours proposal passed.

Next semester we will be losing two of our SGA officers to another country. Both Mary Frances Patrick and Lindsay Jayssoux are going to England to study.

We appreciate their hard work and wish them lots of luck! Congratulations to Leighton Hart and Betsy Rollins, who will be serving next semester as the SGA vice president and secretary, respectively. Good luck to everyone on exams! During the exam period, H-P, Neville, and Calhoun's will be available 24 hours. The GDH Study Breaks will be offered on Sunday, December 14 through Wednesday, December 17. The doors will be open at 11 p.m., and these well-needed social events are complete with coffee, hot chocolate, popcorn, and cookies. Happy Holidays!

Bridgforth balances biology, Bible

by Beth Blackburn
Staff Writer

"He is no fool who gives what he can never keep to gain what he can never lose," missionary Jim Elliot said. This quote captures the essence of Senior Samantha Bridgforth. Her devoted, dynamic character and involvement have made her a key student on the PC campus. Bridgforth has set a track record that is true to her philosophy.

"It's really a matter of offering those things that God has given me to those around me, whether it be time, a listening ear, advice, or love," she said. Bridgforth has found a number of outlets at PC in which to do so. Her membership in Beta Beta Beta, Psi Chi, and Omicron Delta Kappa reflect her abilities as a student. She also plugs into activities such as Student Alumni Council, Zeta Tau Alpha, Stirlings, and Campus Outreach.

Bridgforth is convinced that Campus Outreach has made the most fundamental difference in her life.

"It has helped me to move forward in my relationship with God and I have learned how I can help other people do the same thing. Also through Campus Outreach, I have been reminded of the basic truths in the Bible and the foundations on which my life needs to be built," she said.

Bridgforth has learned a number of life-changing lessons during her time here.

"I have seen growth in many areas of my life, including my maturity, independence, responsibility, relationship with God, and education," she said.

PC has equipped her for the road ahead.

"The liberal arts education has been incredibly beneficial because you come away very well-rounded, and that's the kind of preparation you need to step into the career world today," Bridgforth said. "The experiences I've had since I've been on the campus have definitely helped to prepare me for whatever lies after graduation."

Though her plans for the future have yet to be refined, Bridgforth has some definite short-term and long-term goals.

"I am really excited about student teaching next semester; I have enjoyed working in the middle school classroom. I have heard that you either love middle school or you hate it, and I am ecstatic about teaching there," she said.

"This summer I will be involved in preparations for work in the missions field and right now, the question is just where on the missions field I will be. My desire is to do missions work indefinitely. I'll stay as long as I feel led to be there," Bridgforth said.

Dr. Bob Hudson expresses high hopes for her potential as a teacher, should she decide to pursue such a profession in the future.

"I am extremely glad she is considering going into teaching, though it has its downsides. Samm will be a positive force on their lives," he said.

Hudson describes Bridgforth as effervescent. "She bubbles and sparkles. Samm is a very positive personality," he said.

From the standpoint of Bridgforth's Christian outlook, Hudson sees her as an excellent role model and a super leader. "She possesses a high moral caliber," Hudson said, "that some teachers don't have. It is my personal belief that her being a Christian will also have a strong effect."

Hudson perceives Bridgforth's capacity to impact others. "She gave her Senior Seminar twice and has great communication skills; her enthusiasm is contagious," he said.

Apart from just touching the lives of those around her at PC, Bridgforth has also been moved and shaped. What she has gained from her years here will stay with her well beyond graduation.

"It is time for me to move on. That doesn't mean that it will make it any easier because PC does hold a lot of great memories and fun times," Bridgforth said, "and although the friendships that I've made during my time at PC won't end, there's just nothing like living on the campus with so many wonderful people."

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council suspends student guilty of forgery

The Judicial Council met on Thursday afternoon, November 20, 1997 to hear an Honor Code case. The charge, lying in college business, was read to the defendant. The defense entered a plea of GUILTY, but wished to provide additional information that may serve to mitigate the penalty.

The defense called only one character witness and then rested after making additional arguments. The prosecution then elaborated on the case, but called no witnesses. The prosecution asked that for the forgery of academic information and faculty signatures, the defendant should receive the normal penalty for an Honor Code violation. The defense made a counter-recommendation, and each party adjourned from the room while the Council deliberated on a sentence.

The Council voted to deviate from the normal penalty and implemented the following penalty:

A. Suspension for the remainder of the semester

B. Letters of apology to the parties involved by the time class resumes in the spring

C. 75 hours of community service to be completed during the spring semester by the time of second semester exams

D. Mandatory counseling sessions

The ruling of the Judicial Council was appealed by both the prosecution and defense. On the afternoon of Monday, December 1, The Appeals Board refused to uphold either appeal, therefore the sentence of the Judicial Council stands.

Summer Missionary Scholarship Announcement

Ever wanted to be a missionary for a summer...but wrote that idea off because you need summer salary savings for school? Well, if you are a member of the Presbyterian Church (USA) or Associate Reformed Presbyterian denominations and would like to serve in your denomination's summer mission program, there is good news!

The Jane Todd Presseau Summer Missionary Scholarship is available to supply the money a summer missionary would normally earn and save. Translated into dollars, that means the recipient will have $2,000 credited toward his or her fall fees. This will enable you to focus on raising funds for travel and other expenses.

Applications for this scholarship and information about mission opportunities are available in the chaplain's office.

Christian education majors who belong to the PCUSA may also be eligible for the Jack and Jane Summer Service Scholarship.

Committee commences search for new VP

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

After the recent flurry of resignations from the college's top administrative posts, efforts are underway to fill the vacancy left by former vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty William Moncrief. The college has formed a committee to conduct a national search for the next academic dean.

Though the search is only in its infant stages, the committee, chaired by Dr. Suzanne Smith, has already advertised the position in the Chronicle of Higher Education and hired a consultant to assist with the search.

According to Smith, a number of individuals from all parts of the country have expressed interest in the vice presidency.

"Candidates are applying from all over the country, and literally all over the world," said Smith.

Adding to the complexity of the national search process is the demanding nature of the position to be filled. Materials put together by the committee and the search consultant indicate that the next vice president should: provide effective academic leadership to the college, further clarify the academic program and market niche of the college, provide encouragement and support for faculty, support the college's efforts to attract and retain a student body appropriate in size and interests, engage enthusiastically in external communication and outreach, and attend to the college's academic infrastructure.

The body of applications received to date appear to Smith to reflect individual diversity as well as geographic diversity.

"We're getting applications from lots of different kinds of candidates...it's just a wide range," she said. "We've got some applicants who aren't even in academia, but most are. We've got applicants who are in similar positions, we've got some who are professors, and some who are department chairs."

The committee will continue to

"We're getting applications from all over the country, and literally all over the world."

-Dr. Suzanne Smith

receive applications through the middle of January, at which point the candidate pool will be narrowed.

"In February we'll narrow [the candidate pool] down some more and do some reference checks. In March, we'll have some off-campus interviews. From there, we'll narrow it down to two to four finalists who will then come to the campus, where the whole campus will have access to them," said Smith of the committee's tasks for the months ahead.

According to Smith, the use of a private consultant to facilitate the search has been beneficial. Assisting PC's search committee is Dr. Barbara Taylor of Academic Search Consultation Service in Washington, D.C.

"She's doing a lot of the legwork," said Smith. "I guess her role is really two-fold. First, she came to campus to compile a pre-search report, which is about a 20-page document detailing the strengths of PC and the challenges that the new dean will face. Then the second thing we have her for is to recruit top candidates. She is in touch with a lot of people in the network of higher education and has a feel for who we are as well as who [the candidates] are."

Smith is counting on the strength of her committee to pick the perfect fit for the vice presidency.

"If you look at the composition of the committee, you see a synergy there that is pretty terrific," she said. "Each person brings an element—a unique element—to the search committee that really adds to the group dynamic."

Representing the student body on the committee are Laura Jacobs and Dan Hart. Representing the faculty are Smith, Dr. Richard Baker, Dr. Joel Jones, Dr. Ann Stidham, and Dr. Dean Thompson. Skip Zubrod and Beth Stanton represent the administration.

One of the tasks Smith and Taylor must undertake is that of making the vice presidency catch the attention of as many potential candidates as possible.

"Often the best candidates are not the ones who are out there looking through the want ads. They are often very happily employed and have no desire to leave," said Smith.

Residence Hall Association responds to campus survey

RHA Pres: Visitation proposal ready for submission

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

In response to recent discussion about campus visitation, PC's Residence Hall Association has authored a proposal to dramatically alter existing dorm visitation policies.

The proposal, according to RHA president Quinton McKissick, is ready for submission to the Student Affairs Council, which will be the first determinant of the proposal's fate.

Since the proposal has not been officially submitted, McKissick could not release a copy to the Blue Stocking, but indicated that information would be forthcoming.

The proposal, authored by McKissick, acting director of residence life Mike Rosolmio, and Jay Philpott was composed in response to results from a recent survey administered to the resident community by the RHA.

McKissick indicated that the survey revealed overwhelming support for 24-hour visitation on weekends, with exceptions from 11 a.m. to 2 a.m. on Monday through Thursday.

Visitation wanted a change in the policy, said McKissick, some wanted 24-hour visitation, some wanted 24-hour visitation on weekends.

McKissick hopes the proposal will address some of the issues that frustrate PC's current visitation policies, such as availability of dorm rooms for group study during late night hours and housing of the opposite sex.

Hopefully, through the proposal, the administration will see that we are able to make adult and mature decisions, and also will encourage residents to be more mature in their decisions," said McKissick.

According to McKissick, dorm visitation policies have long been a topic of discussion for resident groups, but minimal actions have been taken in the past.

"Visitation has always been a topic of concern, but until now no one has dealt with it," he said.

The proposal will be submitted to the Student Affairs Council before the end of this semester, and the Council will likely take action on the proposal at its January meeting. If the proposal passes Student Affairs and receives the endorsement of the faculty, it may reach the Board of Trustees during its February meeting.

Three bring home $66,000 in scholarships

by Dan Hart
Managing Editor

Every summer, 1500 ROTC students from around the nation meet in Fort Knox, Ky. to compete for a number of scholarships offered by the United States Army. The competition, a five week training program in basic military skills, is known as Camp Challenge and is held at Fort Knox three times each summer.

This past summer, three PC students attended Camp Challenge and were each awarded a full scholarship for the next two years.

Ryan Merrick, Phil Compton, and Greg Moore each earned a scholarship of nearly $22,000 per year for the next two years.

All three of them went down to Fort Knox and performed well, and they brought nearly $66,000 back to PC," said Capt. Stephen L. Smith, instructor of military science.

The scholarship includes full tuition, room and board, expenses for books and a modest stipend. Awarding of the scholarship was based on a student's performance at Camp Challenge, which included a physical fitness test, leadership reaction courses, and tests in army weapons systems skills.

"Camp Challenge is morally challenging and physically challenging," said Smith.

While Smith stated that Camp Challenge is challenging, as its name implies, he emphasized that the camp is not intended to be an impossible feat. Most people, he said, can do well at Camp Challenge if they are in good physical shape and are willing to work hard. According to Moore, mental toughness is necessary to succeed at Camp Challenge.

"If you mentally prepare yourself—if you keep a positive attitude—then you can do well at camp," said Moore. One of the most important criteria for awarding of a scholarship at Camp Challenge is positive social and leadership skills. Students are organized in platoons of thirty, and each member of the platoon serves as leader for a certain day during the five-week period.

In addition, various levels of responsibility are found throughout the platoon. According to Smith, students are tested on their ability to follow orders just as much as they are tested on their ability to lead.

"Camp Challenge is an exercise in teamwork and leadership," said Smith. "Part of the experience is learning to function as a team...You have a roommate? Try having thirty of them. It will definitely challenge your social skills."

H-P study hours expanded

"The issue of people who aren't associated with the college getting into the building," was a main issue of the committee according to Galloway. "Card locks will help, though, and it's up to students not to open the door to outsiders," he said.

The committee was also concerned about students leaving trash in the building.

"If [the students] bring in things to eat, the classrooms might smell a little bit distracting in the morning," said Galloway. "Housekeeping doesn't have a chance to clean between someone studying in there at two A.M. and an eight o'clock class."

Galloway also said that the building was intended mainly for group study and that he "wouldn't advise anyone to study there by himself."

Lassiter said that the proposal generated by his committee also brought about an increase in study hours during exams. In addition to H-P, Neville Hall and Calhoun's will be 24-hour access study areas during exam week. Lassiter said that the different environment provided by each building should give every student a comfortable place to study.

In addition, the H-P computer lab hours will be extended to include Saturday hours of 1:30-5:30, Sunday hours 1:30-12, and weekday hours until 12 midnight.

Lassiter said that getting right people to agree to increased study hours was simply a matter of asking a question and proposing a solution.

"People always complain about things like study hours," said Lassiter. "You shouldn't complain unless you have a workable idea on the solution for the problem and are willing to work toward that solution. Dean Gillespie even commented that it would be hard to deny a request from responsible students who wanted to be able to study more."

The Presbyterian College men's handball team reached the finals of the first-ever Southeast Conference Tournament before being knocked off by Emory 18-15. The Blue Hose, after losing 3 team members to penalties, were able to hold Emory to a mere 3-point margin of victory. John Kimball led the game with 5 goals. Ronnie Setzer and Parrish Swanson each scored 4.

To reach the finals, PC defeated Georgia Southern 21-20 in the first round, and edged out Furman 21-19 in overtime. PC has received a bid to compete in the national tournament February 20-22 in Columbia.

"I was real happy with the way we played," said team coach Bryan Madden. "Our philosophy has always been that, since this is new to us, we're out there to have fun. It's neat when you can have fun and win games, too."

Ronnie Setzer and Parrish Swanson were named to the all-tournament team. In addition, Setzer was named to a team that will play in the Pan-American Beach Handball Championships on January 7-12. Teammates Ted Kalb and Jeremy Ransom were named alternates to that team.

Despite being knocked out of the tournament in a 13-7 first-round loss to Furman, the Lady Blue Hose had two players named to the all tournament team. PC's Larianne Collins and Barbara Eves were awarded with the all-tournament distinction.

Managers take pride in doing the dirty work

by Jeremy Carl
Staff Writer

The managers for our fall sports teams have played an important part in the success of those teams. The managers for this year include Devon Beisser, Lucy Evans, Elizabeth Northrop, Sonya McNeil, T.J. Ackerly, Matt Horne, Andrew Folks and Wil Elder.

Beisser, a freshman from Venice, Fla., is the manager for the men's soccer team. Beisser is planning on majoring in Christian Education. Some of her duties as manager include washing uniforms and taking pictures during the games. During the season, Beisser spends two and a half to three hours managing everyday. Beisser's hard work helps to keep everything in order.

"Coach Polson is a great coach to work for," said Beisser.

Evans, a sophomore from Rome, Ga., is one of the managers of the women's soccer team and is currently majoring in Spanish. Evans is in her first year as a manager and has enjoyed it enormously. Northrop, a senior from Mobile, Alabama, is the other manager on the women's soccer team.

Both Evans and Northrop spend at least two to three hours a day involved in their management duties. Some of their duties as managers include washing clothes, setting up before practice and putting up equipment after practice. They also manage little duties which the coach is not able to get to.

"The thing I like most about being a manager is being a part of a college soccer team," said Evans.

"One of the most important things we do as managers is taking care of things before games," said Evans.

McNeil, a freshman from Greenville, S.C., is one of the managers for the volleyball team. McNeil plans to major in accounting and minor in English. Besides being a manager, McNeil plays right field for the PC softball team. Ackerly, a freshman from Roswell, Ga., is the other manager for the volleyball team.

Both Ackerly and McNeil play an important role in the success of their team. Some of their duties include washing clothes, setting up for all the practices, and keeping game stats. McNeil feels that the players on the volleyball team respect what she and Ackerly do.

"I think our job takes some pressure off the coaches," said Sonya.

Matt Horne, a senior from Atlanta, Ga., is one of the managers for the football team and is majoring in history. Since managing takes up so much of Horne's time, the only extracurricular activity he is able to participate in is intramurals.

Folks, a junior from Lancaster, S.C., is the second manager on the football team. Folks is majoring in political science with a double minor in media studies and business administration. Besides being a manager, Folks is involved in Celtic Cross, Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity, and the Sigma Kappa Alpha honor fraternity.

Some of Folks' and Horne's managerial duties include replacing equipment, laundry, and setting up for practice. They spend five hours a day doing all these duties. On game days they usually have to work all day. One of their most important jobs is to keep practice running smoothly.

"Many people don't realize how time consuming a job managing really is," said Folks.

Elder, a sophomore from Memphis, Tenn., is the manager in charge of video taping. This is Elder's second year as a manager. His major is political science. Besides being a manager, Elder is in the Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity.

Elder's job is a little different than that of the other two managers. Elder video tapes practices and games, travels with the team to away games and edits the game tapes for coaches to view.

"The most important parts about my job are not missing any plays and making high quality game tape," said Elder.

Women's b-ball team off to 6-3 start

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

Head Coach Beth Couture has the women's basketball team off to a fast start with a record of 6-3. The women have played tough defense and been able to execute on the offensive end.

"The basketball team is working hard in practice everyday and with the good competition we are playing, the team has responded well," said Couture.

PC participated in the AmeriSuites Shootout in Augusta, Ga on Dec. 5-6. PC responded well defeating Southern Wesleyan 83-50, but losing to Augusta State 87-82. In the Southern Wesleyan game, PC shot a blistering 52% from the floor and never looked back. Denzel Barman scored 17 points and Tonya Kelley finished with 13 points. Darah Huffman helped out with 12 points and Tracy Woody scored ten points. The Blue Hose's defense held Southern Wesleyan to 34% shooting for the game. Against Augusta State, Laura Jones had the hot hand and scored a game high 30 points. She was 8/15 from the floor and made 13 freethrows. Woody scored 13 points and Kelley scored 11 points. Rachel Sloan had a team high seven rebounds. The Blue Hose got 31 of their points off the free throw line.

PC got a home victory on their first home game of the season. With an enthusiastic crowd behind them, PC jumped out to a big lead and put away Armstrong Atlantic 69-55. Sloan and Barman each scored 12 points and Kelley and Christina McRae each scored ten points. PC jumped out to an early 14 point lead and kept this lead throughout the game. PC shot the ball well again with 48%.

The Lady Blue Hose will play their next home game tomorrow at 2:00 versus Anderson College. Following the game there will be an alumni game which will bring back past alumni for a great game

Men's basketball hopes to rebound from losses

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

After winning their first two games, the men's basketball team has lost four of their last five. PC stands at 3-4 on the season with a tough conference schedule coming up after the break.

According to Head Coach Gregg Nibert, there has been better offensive execution in the past few games then there has been in the past, but the team has not stressed defense lately.

PC has one of its toughest schedules ever. This scheduling should help out in the long run when the NCAA Committee meets and gives out bids to the NCAA Division II Tournament.

The Blue Hose shot a hard fought battle to Anderson College on Dec. 6. PC defeated Anderson College earlier in the season, winning by 16. PC came up short with a 45-43 loss. The Blue Hose shot 37% for the game and had 20 turnovers. Byron Graham, Eric Burrow and D.J. Humphries each led the team in scoring with eight points. Erik Rothwell led the team in rebounds with seven and guard Yahneek Martin dished out five assists.

PC participated in the SAC/Peach Belt Clash over the Thanksgiving break. PC defeated its first opponent, Lander University, 55-54. PC was down by five points at halftime but showed endurance and rallied back for the one point win. Graham scored a team high 15 points while Mac Harper and Burrow each contributed nine points. Burrow had a season high ten rebounds. PC shot the ball well at 41% for the game. PC was 6-16 from the free throw line.

In the championship game PC lost to tournament host USC-Aiken 69-63. The Blue Hose came out on fire shooting a whopping 55% from the floor and led by one at halftime. In the second half PC went cold from the floor. Making only ten shots in the second half. PC shot 27% from the floor. USC-Aiken shot 45% for the game. Leading scorers for PC were Graham and Humphries with 12 points each. Burrow chipped in ten while Rothwell scored eight points. Humphries grabbed ten rebounds and Martin helped with seven rebounds.

On Nov. 24, the Blue Hose traveled to the one-traffic-light town of Due West to take on Erskine College. PC has lost to Erskine for the past two years. PC stayed in the game, but lost in double overtime 65-62. Graham led the team in scoring with 16 points. Martin scored 11 and Burrow scored ten points. Humphries led the team with ten rebounds. This game went down to the wire but PC had 23 turnovers to Erskine's 13.

PC played one of its biggest opponents of the season on Nov. 20. The Blue Hose stayed with Tennessee-Chattanooga, but came up short 56-53. PC had four chances to tie the game in the closing seconds but could not hit a three pointer. Humphries led the team in scoring with 11 and Graham dished in nine. Humphries again led the team in rebounds with 7.

The Blue Hose knocked off Allen University 85-57 on Nov. 18. Graham scored 17 points, Burrow scored 16 and Humphries scored 13. PC shot 51% for the game. This was the best showing of the season by the basketball team.

Graham is leading the team with 12.9 points per game. Humphries is averaging 8.1 rebounds per game.

The Blue Hose will play Union Saturday night at 7:00.

Tommy and Leighton off to a rocky 0-4 start, looking to score

by Tommy Reiser
and Leighton Hart

Hello sports fans, and let us both be the first to welcome you to the bottom of page 8. Oh, to look back on years past when editors would ring the front bell at our Georgia Dorm estate and pay us huge sums of cash to tackle page-long projects. We'd give it all to relive the day when we pooled our earnings to successfully complete a load of laundry in the Mafia-run Georgia Dorm washing machine room.

Who will soon forget that fateful day in fall '95 when we debuted on page 8? Where have the glory days of back page "humor" gone you ask? Well, look left, look right, then scroll down about 25 or 30 lines. This is where they've gone. We've been bumped to the bottom of this page. Why? Lack of ability, lack of content, lack of humor...etc. We've been demoted, which is especially sad since one of us runs this freakin' newspaper gig.

After an early season 0-4 record out of the blocks, we've decided to turn it up a notch and give both of you folks what you've been asking for all year. Why? Because there is a public outcry for lameness. We're back!!

We have big plans for this page next semester. The glory days will return. To preview, the first issue will be entirely devoted to welcoming Dr. Griffith through limerick verse. In the second issue, we will publish a statement on our attorney's letterhead apologizing to Dr. Griffith, the Board of Trustees, Dr. Griffith's dog, and Pamela Anderson Lee. Just to clarify things in advance, we have no solid proof of anything. We'll conclude the semester with a career ending (in every sense of the word) 3-part series on the PC Black market goat trade.

So what does that leave us with in terms of material for December 12? Freshman guide to exams? Nope, done in '95 and reshaped twice in '96. Funny Christmas gifts? Not enough material...really, how many times can you use the "give grandma a crack pipe" bit?

Perhaps a newsworthy article for this space? Takes too much time and effort. So here's what we're left with...

Nothing is better than spending Christmas break donating our time to the needs of others, and reading stories to small children. (Okay, so this is only a clever journalistic ploy to make us appear sweet and sensitive to the lady readers.) But what about those children's books that are less well known? Below are some actual titles of children's stories that have been rejected by real editors. We've thrown in a couple of ours as well. Our thanks to Newsweek magazine for the use of these titles. Your job as readers, is to figure out which of these are real and which are the offspring of our wacked-out minds. Get ready for fun.

- (1) Try Not to Stare at the Giants Honey
- (2) My Peg Leg Grandpa
- (3) Gloria, the Sperrin Bank Kid
- (4) Sammy the Snot Who Lives in Your Nose
- (5) Don't Tell Anyone About the "Sugar" That Daddy Sniffs

- (6) Mommy Swings
- (7) Johnny's First Ass Kicking
- (8) I Can't Wait Until I'm Old Enough to Hunt With Dad
- (9) I Rode My Bike To School, But Forgot My Lock, So I Had to Ride Back. But I Got Kidnapped and Now I'm in a Gang
- (10) The Iliad

Now we know what you're thinking. These are all too good to be true. The actual titles that have been submitted and turned down by editors are 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, and 8. Numbers 5 and 7 are actually personal projects that we have in the works. Number 5 deals with the important issue of teaching kids to keep secrets. Number 7 is a combined tale of our first play ground thrashing. As for the Iliad, well, kids love epic poetry.

So what have we shown you? Admittedly, not much. But there's hope for next semester.

But to keep you busy until then, how about helping us out with our limerick... what are some words that rhyme with "menatala" and "bodomy"??

Griffith takes helm, prepares for strategic planning

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

On January 2, Dr. John V. Griffith assumed the presidency of Presbyterian College. Most recently president of Lyon College in Batesville, Ark., Griffith is no stranger to PC's church-related liberal arts tradition. Griffith has spent the majority of his professional career leading colleges affiliated with the Presbyterian Church (USA). Prior to his tenure at Lyon, Griffith served as vice president for institutional advancement at Davidson College in Davidson, N.C. Griffith and wife Nancy have been married 29 years and have two sons, Matthew and Christopher.

A Discussion with PC's New Leader

When did your family finally move to Clinton?

Griffith: "The moving was gradual, over

December 11, as you all were. I think during exams. We spent the two weeks leading up to Christmas unpacking boxes and getting settled in the house. And then our son came home — we have a son who graduated from college two years ago — and a son who is a freshman in college this year. So we were able to have Christmas with the family in the home.

How has your reception been in Clinton?

Griffith: "It was a great Christmas and folks in Clinton were so great to us. We had a steady stream of well-wishers, and I think we have the world's largest supply of fruitcake. And some great fruitcake at that."

How does Clinton compare to your home in Arkansas?

Griffith: "Clinton is exactly the same size as Batesville. Batesville is sort of a combination of Laurel and Clinton in that Batesville was the county seat. Batesville was more isolated than Clinton. The closest city is Little Rock, which is an hour and a half's drive away. That meant that there were a few more things in Batesville than Clinton, but the towns are really very similar."

I would say that Clinton is more of a college town, and it has pleased me to see how much the local community is involved in the college — they come to athletic events, they come to cultural events — that's a stronger tradition here and it reminds me of what it was like when we were in Davidson."

How have the first few weeks in the office treated you?

Griffith: "We had kind of a crazy start. We got through Christmas and it was just great. I started work on the second of January, which was a Friday. Then on Tuesday of that next week my mom died. So I was gone tending to family business for the rest of that week."

I'm still very much in the process of getting settled. The first charge that the Board has given me is to begin the process of developing a strategic plan that will guide the institution through the first decade of the next century. So what I've been doing is working with the officers of the college and the senior six in outlining a process and a timeline for strategic planning."

Have you encountered anything here that has been completely contrary, in a positive or negative sense, to your expectations?

Griffith: "Gosh, well, we discovered Gooney Bird's and we're glad that that's here. That's a nice addition. I wish it were in downtown Clinton. Let's see... everything has pretty much been affirmations of positive things. We've been to one athletic event, and it was good to see the spirit there."

What are some of your hobbies or interests?

Griffith: "One of the things that Nancy and I like to do is walk around campus. We have a dog named Belle, who at Lyon would frequently get votes for student body president. She's a great, aging, yellow lab. But you'll see us around campus walking her in the morning and evening, and we use that as a time to meet and talk with students."

"We bought a vacation place on Lake Murray. We enjoy the water — swimming and boating — and find the water very relaxing."

"We also, as you'll see during our open house, have an exercise room and we find that as a good way to relax. And we make use of that most afternoons or before going to bed."

"We both sing, and have been in choirs, but don't know if we'll do that here or not. We both read alot. That's the way we try to keep our minds active. I think you've answered my next question. I was going to ask what is at the top of your to-do list."

Griffith: "I'll tell you what's the very first thing, and that's getting to know people. The alumni office has a lot of alumni meetings scheduled so I can meet the alumni. The church relations office has a good number of meetings scheduled with leaders of the church, and I'll be preaching from pulpits a number of Sundays in the spring. So I would say that the first priority is getting to know the people, the place, and the traditions."

College celebrates vision of slain civil rights leader

Unique performance pays tribute to MLK

by Ben Acton

Martin Luther King, Jr.'s dream was not only celebrated, but also lived out Monday, January 19. PC students and members of the community of all backgrounds flocked into Edmunds Hall to see David Van Leer's performance of The Norm Of Greatness, a one man show featuring the life and work of the highly acclaimed civil rights leader. Although some students attributed the event's CEP credit as their reason for attendance, many still emphasized the importance of King's message.

"I thought the program sounded really interesting and I truly respect what Martin Luther King did as a person," said sophomore Paul Potratz. Freshman Roney Wade agreed and added that Monday was "a time to put aside and show respect" for King.

Cultivating a continued interest and respect for King's work were two prime objectives of Shelia Hill, director of PC's Office of Multicultural Affairs, in organizing Monday night's event as well as the Martin Luther King, Jr. chapel service Tuesday and other programs throughout February and April.

"With Mr. Van Leer's production, we hope to offer a program that will reach a broader range of people and, therefore, promote broader discussion and reflection upon King's ideas," said Hill.

"My expectations for this event and the following discussions on Tuesday are to provide an enjoyable program as well as an enlightening one. I also would like to question the continued relevance of Dr. King's dream and discuss exactly how visionary that dream really was," she continued.

Hill also said she was very pleased with Van Leer's portrayal of King in The Norm Of Greatness, in which Van Leer recited four of King's speeches, including "I Have a Dream" and King's last speech, "I Have Seen the Promised Land."

"[The performance] stirred up a lot of feelings, it was really an emotional trip into the past," said Hill.

It is this emotional response of the audience that Van Leer, who has also appeared on Broadway and television, said makes him want to perform his one-man show, which he has done on more than three hundred college and university campuses.

POINT

Survey results show freshman priorities are in the right places

The results are in from the annual UCLA survey of college freshmen, and are currently being analyzed by PC administrators. The survey, which has been administered to freshmen since 1973, tells us a great deal about our institution. 224 PC freshmen responded to the survey, and the responses they provided are encouraging for many reasons.

First among those reasons is that 86% of freshmen indicated that PC was their first choice when applying to college. Just 9% indicated that PC was their second choice. What this statistic shows us is that students are here because they want to be. They want to share in the proud traditions of academics, honor, fellowship, and personal growth that this institution provides. It is only logical to assume that these students will give greatly of themselves to their academic and extracurricular pursuits.

The second encouraging statistic that stands out deals with service. Of the 224 PC respondents, 90% indicated that they had performed volunteer work during the past year. This figure is the highest in recent years, and stands in dramatic contrast to the feeble 76% registered by the 1990 freshman class. Hopefully, the 90% figure represents a sincere belief by this year's freshman class in the value of service and volunteer work in our community.

Presbyterian College will continue to thrive if its dormitories and classrooms are filled with students who desire to be here and who conspicuously reflect our school's motto: Dum Vivimus Servimus. We believe, on the basis of these survey results, that our students are on the right track.

Letters to the Editor

Presbyterian College—a friendly, open environment—or so we thought. Recently we noticed something that has changed our opinion of our school and its traditions. Quite frankly, it embarrasses us, a feeling that we've never felt about PC. Maybe you have noticed it too. What we're referring to is the new T-shirt being sold at the Greek Shop. You know, the one with the PC seal on the front and that endearing phrase on the back, "If you haven't heard of it, you probably can't afford it." Granted, some of us are insulted when another person has never heard of our school, but is this the attitude for which we want to be known? PC already fights the stigma of being a school for little rich kids. Do we need the help of advertisements that perpetuate that misconception?

After the initial shock and embarrassment of seeing the shirt, we were struck by the sheer absurdity of its claim. A Stirling, armed with facts from the Admissions Office, confirmed what we already suspected to be the truth: Over 75% of PC students receive financial aid in some form. According to this statistic, most of the student body cannot afford PC. Does this shirt mean that if you cannot afford to pay full tuition at PC, you are not welcome here? Does it imply that quality education is only for the rich? Should reward for academic achievement not be valued?

Dum vivimus servimus. While we live, we serve. Since this motto has made it onto the seal, we assume that it is an important tradition at PC. The printers of the T-shirt must have been confused—certainly such irony couldn't have been intentional. Maybe we should change the motto to "While we live we serve ourselves." How can we face all the people that we volunteer to help with such an attitude?

Now some of you may be thinking that we're overreacting to a T-shirt, but we think that it goes beyond that. It represents not only our school and ourselves but our values as well. To tie together such an arrogant statement and something as integral to the school as its seal is incongruous. We're not against freedom of expression. Certainly you have the right to wear this shirt if you choose. We just ask that you think about the message that you are sending out the next time you wear it. Remember that you are speaking not only for yourself but for all of us.

Erin Turner and Susan Haynes

S.G.A. NOTES

At its meeting Wednesday, January 21, the Student Government discussed/took action on the following topics:

• The SGA voted unanimously to grant the Equestrian Club a charter as a student organization.

• Members were reminded of the Open Forum scheduled at the SGA's previous meeting. The Forum was scheduled for Thursday, January 22 at 7:00 p.m.

• Rich Lassiter suggested that Calhoun's be made available to clubs for meetings and to students for small parties. Sarah Hopper, noting complaints about fitness center hours, suggested that Calhoun's be converted into a fitness center.

• John Kimball announced that the Safe Ride Shuttle will be sponsored by Hickory Hills Barbeque. Students who drive the shuttle will receive a Safe Ride Shuttle t-shirt and a coupon for a free meal at Hickory Hills.

• Rich Lassiter suggested that amendments be made to the SGA Constitution to improve the officer election process. Lassiter asked that all potential candidates be required to read the SGA Constitution before running for office and suggested that those students who plan to spend a semester abroad be disqualified from running for office.

• Laura Caudell announced that Special Olympics will be held April 17, and that students interested in participating should contact Katie Mowry.

• The SGA gave its approval to a letter urging the college to be more diligent in its commitment to keep students studying abroad informed of events on campus.

Griffith completes first month as president

"On February 9, Nancy and I are having an open house for students, faculty and staff and that'll be from 4 to 6:30. We'll have the whole house open, bedrooms included, so you can wander all over the house. We're eager to have students over, and I'm also eager to meet with different groups on campus. Nancy and I really enjoy being with students—that's why we're here."

Is there, or are you aware of, a reputation that you have with respect to your presidential style? I know some ministers, for example, can carry with them reputations as being congregation builders, or budget fixers, things like that. Are you aware of any of those characteristics that apply to you?

"I think if you talk to people at the other two institutions I have served, Lyon College and Davidson College, they would say that I'm good at leading a community in planning. And a corollary to that is being involved and building a strong sense of community."

"And another thing, my dad was an educator and was dean at Colgate University, and as a child, mom and dad would always have students over at the house. So one of the things I had instilled in me as a youngster that has stayed with me, that often administrators forget, is that this place exists to educate students. That's why we're here. Being a student-centered institution is something that I keep at the top of the list, and remind myself of."

Why PC? And why now?

"Well let me answer 'why now?' first. When I was hired at Lyon I was asked to commit to ten years. What they asked me to do was put together a strategic plan and then work to put it in place for the faculty, students and staff. And we pretty much accomplished that plan ahead of schedule, and it's time at Lyon now to start a new planning process. The person who leads that needs to be able to say that they, in good conscience, could be there for the duration of that plan. I couldn't. I had made use of my skills in that period at Lyon and it was time, in my judgment, to look at other options."

"I knew that I wanted to continue to work at student-centered institutions that were liberal arts colleges, residential, and church-related. While I had grown up in the North, most of my professional life has been played out in the South, and I knew the Southeast very well from my time as vice president at Davidson, and knew of PC."

"I looked at the information from PC and was delighted to see the really fine progress this institution has made in the past ten years. That progress also coincides with a real economic vitality in South Carolina, particularly this part of South Carolina, which has changed so since the 1970's and early 1980's."

"I saw in Presbyterian College an institution that was strong, had a clear desire to be an institution affiliated with the church, had a strong academic program, a wonderful tradition in athletics, and a potential for an even brighter future. The potential here, it seems to me, for continued advancement as one of the best liberal arts colleges in the South, and for that matter in the country, I think is clear. And it's a journey that I want very much to be involved in."

PC IN BRIEF

Judicial Council hands cheater two semester suspension

The Judicial Council met on Thursday afternoon, December 11, 1997 to hear an Honor Code case. The charge of cheating was read to the defendant. The defense entered a plea of GUILTY, but wished to provide additional information that may serve to mitigate the penalty.

The defense began by entering a brief statement. The first witness, the defendant, was called in order to explain his side of the story. Following several questions by the prosecution and Council regarding the academic status of the defendant, two additional character witnesses were called. The first was a member of the athletic department, and the second was a close friend of the defendant. Neither witness was questioned by the prosecution or the Council.

The prosecution then elaborated on the case. It called no witnesses, but simply reiterated the purposes of the normal penalty and why it applies in this particular case. The defense offered a punishment deviant from the normal penalty, in which the defendant would receive an "F" in the course in which the violation occurred, but only be suspended for one semester (the remainder of the current semester).

After deliberation, the Council decided that the normal penalty should be implemented, whereby the defendant will receive an "F" in the course, be suspended for the remainder of the fall semester, and also be suspended for the spring semester.

An appeal was filed by the defense. The appeal board upheld the decision of the Judicial Council.

Volunteers needed for SVS programs

Student Volunteer Services is currently offering a wealth of opportunities to get involved with serving the community. Among these are:

1. A teacher at Martha Dendy needs two PC students to help proofread articles her students are composing...any English majors interested?
2. Algebra tutors are in high demand...the timing is flexible and requires as little as 1 hour per week.
3. Martha Dendy is starting a Boy Scout program and needs leaders (no experience necessary).
4. 12 students at Clinton High need assistance in basic areas in order to pass the exit exam for graduation. If they don't pass, they will not receive a diploma. Time is flexible with your schedule.
5. The Bone Marrow Drive will be held February 13.
6. Special Olympics will be held April 17.

Freshmen more likely to serve, less likely to drink

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Results are in from an all-encompassing survey administered to this year's freshman class shortly after its arrival in the fall. The survey results show that this year's freshmen are more likely to attend a religious service, do volunteer work, and less likely to drink a beer than last year's freshman class.

The survey, administered each year to freshmen across the nation, is an effort of the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA).

Of the 224 PC freshman respondents, 99% indicated that they had attended a religious service in the past year, a two-point jump from last year and a full eight points higher than the average for Protestant, four-year colleges and universities.

In addition, more freshmen than ever spent time in the past year performing volunteer work. Of the 224 respondents, 90% claimed they had volunteered their time in the past year, compared with 89% the previous year, and 82% for Protestant, four-year colleges.

58% of respondents indicated that they had consumed beer in the past year, down from 63% the previous year. Also, 59% indicated they had consumed wine or liquor during the previous year, down from 60% the previous year. While these numbers may indicate a decreasing tendency of students to use alcohol, only 40% of respondents at Protestant, four-year schools drank beer, and 46% drank wine or liquor.

Since the information goes into the national database, it is particularly useful to students because it means

Actor delivers speeches in honor of social activist

One person who received that message was Chris Thorpe, who, as president of the Multicultural Student Union, also introduced Van Leer Monday night.

In his introduction, Thorpe made reference to his dreams of being a teacher and how one can affect the lives of those around him. Van Leer's performance only enhanced and enhanced those views.

"I wasn't that familiar with many of Dr. King's speeches [until tonight], but after hearing Mr. Van Leer, I feel even more motivated and uplifted to look around my environment and see what I might be able to change for the better," said Thorpe.

The willingness to change and incorporate more than just ideals of social justice were essential components to King's vision, according to Hill.

"To me, King's work was about not only social justice, but also it was about the principle of inclusion and equality for and among all Americans, both black and white. Sometimes, I think that gets lost in the shuffle when discussing King and his dream," she said.

With Monday night's program and with the other events planned by the Multicultural department for the next few months, Hill hopes to "find" the ultimate impact and legacy of King and his message of freedom.

"Finding something to be passionate about in life, not letting the dream die is a fitting tribute to Dr. King," Hill said, continuing, "It is important to remember that [King's] message was not particular to his place and time. The dream is appropriate for any place or any time."

PC alum returns to teach courses in the medical humanities

by Kay Owen
Campus Life Editor

As a product of hard work by Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy, and in conjunction with the Fullerton Foundation, this semester PC offers new courses in medical humanities. Due to Baker's efforts, which gave the courses structure and planning, and the Fullerton Foundation, which provides the college with money to support the courses and the cost of bringing visiting professors, two classes are now available to supplement the typical curriculum.

Introduction to Medical Humanities is a course to prepare students for medical school and a career in the health fields. The class meets three days per week to discuss issues such as death, suffering and sickness. The focus is on the psychology, theology and sociology of how medical problems affect people's lives, rather than the more traditional courses dealing with how diseases affect the human body. Currently 24 students are enrolled in the course taught by Baker, Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion, and Dr. Bill Porter, visiting professor of medicine.

Porter alone teaches a second medical humanities course, Seminar in Medicine and Humanities. The class deals with reading literature about medical topics and analyzing the stories in light of people's personal lives and individuality. Porter describes the goals of the class as learning what people are truly about, preventing the depersonalization and dehumanizing that often accompanies medical work, and separating the "harmony of songs" versus the "screed of life."

Porter believes that students' attentiveness to other people, and later, patients, is a necessity for medical professionals.

"Relating to patients by listening to the narratives of their lives is the only thing that keeps the medical practice from becoming impersonal," Porter said. "Here is why the story is important: why the patient died and how he or she died."

Baker is the "glue that holds the classes together," according to Porter. Baker developed the ideas for the classes and used the Fullerton Grant money to make his plans a reality. It was Baker who contacted Porter to participate in the courses.

Porter has been teaching the medicine and literature course at Davidson College for four years. Porter practiced medicine in Charlotte from 1970-86. In 1986 he began teaching medical education at Carolina Medical Center. His specialty is in internal medicine, particularly oncology/hematology. Porter also contributes reviews and reports to the Charlotte Observer and is involved in the Bio-Ethics Resource Group in Charlotte and other medical research groups.

Porter commutes from Charlotte to Clinton to teach. He spends his Tuesday nights in an apartment above Brown's Commons on campus. He sees the commute as a worthwhile drive in order to contribute his services to students at PC.

"With public radio and books on tape, I am making it," said Porter. "I can ignore some of the bad traffic in greater Chester. It is a 100-mile trip, and some days I may find it longer than I want it to be, but overall the trip is a time to reflect and get myself together."

Porter is a 1959 graduate of PC. He notices many differences between the campus and student life between then and now. Now, Porter said, the campus is much bigger and facilities are nicer. He also sees the students as more involved with PC life rather than outside interests.

"We were a more insulated group," he said. "We were all from South Carolina and Georgia. We all wore white socks and crewneck sweaters. We were more involved in outside schools and activities. The main thing that seems to be the same between then and now is that Strom Thurmond is still South Carolina's senator."

Arnold preparing women's tennis team for tough season

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Following a productive fall tournament season, the PC women's tennis team is gearing up for its opening match season. Under the direction of Coach Donna Arnold, the women are ranked third in the nation.

As she prepares her team for a tough spring season, Arnold is relying on the depth that her young team possesses. Four of Arnold's seven players are freshmen, and each will be in the line-up for each tournament. Those four include Sunny Armstrong, Clayton McGee, Allison Merritt, and Heather Combs.

"The four are very strong players, hard workers, and bring a lot of depth to the team, which is one thing we have been known for," said Arnold.

Despite the relative inexperience of the four freshmen, Arnold feels that all are prepared to excel in collegiate competition.

"We had four tough tournaments in the fall, and that really helped with getting the freshmen ready for college play," she said.

According to Arnold, the freshmen fared well in their first collegiate matches.

"They did okay," said Arnold. "It's just a big difference between junior tennis and college tennis, especially with the tournaments we play. These are really strong tournaments against ranked teams and ranked players. And some of the girls might have played a senior, and that's four years' experience going up against a freshman."

"We had a few little nerve cases every so often, but they worked through it. Talent-wise, the girls are okay," she said.

Arnold, always with an eye toward post-season play, has scheduled a tough season for her seven women players. PC will face a traditionally strong Georgia College team early in the season. The Lady Blue Hose will face Augusta College, another traditionally powerful program, early in the season, as well.

"In the conference," said Arnold, "Carson-Newman will probably be our biggest competition, and that's who we beat out last year. So they want to get us."

Preparation is the key to any contest, and the team's practice schedule has been afflicted with rainy weather. The Lady Blue Hose, who last picked up their racquets to face opponents in early November, have frequently had practices rained out.

The Lady Blue Hose start their season in Clinton February 17, when they will face Erskine.

Senior Spotlight: Ransom named three-time All-American

by Robbie Bryan
Sports Editor

Known affectionately as "The Red Rocket" to his friends and teammates, Jeremy Ransom has made his mark on Presbyterian College. Hailing from the booming metropolis of Chapin, S.C.,

Ransom is perhaps known best as the goalie for the men's soccer team, and not so well known as being the goalie for the men's handball team.

Ransom has played soccer since he was a short, chubby, red-headed six-year old.

"When I was six years old, I played my first year of recreational soccer. Every time the ball came to me, I would bend over and pick it up, no matter where I was on the field. They threw an ugly shirt on me and put me in goal. I used to cry after every goal and they would have to stop the game, but I've still been in there ever since," said Ransom of his seemingly innate goalkeeping skill.

Ransom played soccer throughout high school. He has known Coach Ralph Polson for several years before coming to PC, and their relationship is one of the main reasons Ransom came to PC. When he was ten or so, Ransom came to a soccer camp at PC. His father's company installs sprinkler systems in athletic fields, and it was through his father's business dealings that the Ransom family and Polson came to know each other. Polson kept up with Ransom through the years. When it came time to choose a college, Ransom compared every other school to PC.

"Basically, I had already made up my mind," he said.

Ransom is the first person to be named a 3-time NCAA All-American in any sport at PC. In 1995, he helped lead the soccer team to their best record in the school's history (17-3-1). That year, the team made their first appearance in the NCAA Division II Tournament. Playing in that tournament is Ransom's fondest memory of PC. The other awards and recognition he has received for soccer are almost too numerous to count. However, Ransom's achievements on the handball court are not too numerous to mention. Ransom was recruited to play for the PC men's handball team in their conference championship tournament appearance. His skill as a goalie and catlike reflexes helped take the team to the finals. Ransom was ejected from the final game and the team wound up losing the match. He was selected along with Ronnie Setzer and Ted Kalb to travel to Brazil, where he played with the U.S. Olympic handball team.

Ransom is a political science major, and hopes to play professional soccer after graduation. "I want to play soccer because I can while I'm still young and because I want to say that I'm a professional athlete," said Ransom.

But Ransom does not expect to be drafted into the MLS unless he performs exceptionally in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where he will play as the only Division II player selected to the Elite 16 roster for the Umbro Select All-Star Classic.

Ransom would also like to serve as an assistant coach while completing his Master's degree in sports or public administration.

"The thing I'll miss most about PC," he said, "is the sense of community in having 1,000 friends that you can hang out with, and the sense of belonging somewhere. I think that's PC. A lot of people don't really give PC a chance, but I've always stood up for it. I like it. It's not perfect, but show me somewhere that is."

Scouting Report:
Men's Tennis

The Blue Hose men's tennis team finished the 1996-1997 season with an 18-7 record and a ranking of second in the South Atlantic Conference. The expectations for this year are for an even better season. The Blue Hose have been given an impressive pre-season ranking of second in the conference and twenty-first in the nation.

Coach Bobby McKee made it clear that he and his team have two main goals: to win the conference and, most importantly, to qualify for the national tournament. In the past two years the team has competed in the NCAA regional tournament, but not the national tournament.

"Right now we just have to go out and win our key matches," said McKee.

Coach McKee is enthusiastic about a new addition to his team. Donny Thoresen, a freshman from Roswell, Ga., is expected to boost the team's efforts.

Beginning on February 26, you can see the team in action at eight home matches.

Fearsome ebola virus hits campus, students urged to hit the infirmary

by Tommy Reiser
and Leighton Hart

It's that time of year again...okay, so how many times can we beat that opening in to the ground? Well, if all goes as planned, we'd have to say about four more times this semester. So what time of year is it, the two of you ask? We could pose that question to a wide variety of PC students and get the same answer from nearly every person we ask: "Umm...excuse me, fellas, but who are you pathetic guys? Why are you asking me a question? And, for the love of God, why is one of you riding around on the other's back?"

However, the answer we were looking for was: the spring semester slump. We all know this slump pretty well. The two of us especially. All it takes is some clever collaboration between your advisor and the registrar to give you the absolute worst schedule known to man. Thrown in 3 straight weeks of rain, get the Super Bowl behind you, and all of a sudden you're spending every morning eyeing the Wild Turkey and watching reruns on Fox of "When Animals Attack Porn Stars."

And had we this year again been 5th year underclassmen, we may have fallen into a similar trap. But with age comes wisdom. And if there is anything 6 years at PC have taught us, it's that you must start off each semester on a good foot. And that streaking through Lake Orr may not just be harmful to fish, but can also earn you 25 hours of community service.

Oh, these are the days when we look back to first semester, when if boredom arose we could always go and steal a good book from the library. You've heard us say it before: there is nothing like the kick you get out of stealing a copy of the Social Science Index. It really gets the blood pumping. But now with the top-of-the-line, newly-installed security system at the door, we guess they've put an end to our misdeeds. Sure, there may have been talk about the funky yellow carpet, the lime green and orange chairs, and maybe other renovations. But library officials were obviously on to our main plan for attending Presbyterian College — a school known for its Honor Code — to steal books.

All of that aside, we have devised a simple, three-step plan for combatting the spring slump. The first task: convince yourself that you are in the southern hemisphere. That way, you will be tricked into thinking that it is the fall semester. Now granted, this plan is not for everyone. It takes a special kind of mental dullness to carry this out. So those of you who would categorize yourself as an "exceptional idiot" or those of you who have found anything in this article remotely interesting may be able to pull this first task off. However, we must warn you that after just 2 years, we were able to fool ourselves no longer.

Thus we move to our second task: careful scheduling. Make the most of your classes. First, you mustn't fall into what we refer to as the "administrative trap." Their catalog would lead you to believe that you must take 15 hours per semester at PC in order to get the 122 hours you need to graduate. We'll let you in on a little secret of ours. Admin is run completely by a laptop Macintosh that sits in the closet of the first floor bathroom. But, you ask, what about all of those dignified people we see walking around? Well, while the laptop does its thing, all the pretty faces are busy running the college's secret, yet extremely lucrative, missile assembly plant in Bolivia. Anyway, we don't know what kind of higher math that laptop is capable of, but after giving a pretty good go of it on our fingers, we'll tell you that we're getting numbers closer to 3 or 4 hours per semester for graduation. If you don't believe us, call the guys that live next door to us.

Getting back to scheduling, this semester we have decided to Introduction to Lifesaving. Why? Because lifesaving is a practical skill. You never know when all those hours in the pool will come in handy. One day you'll be sitting in your high-rise office, looking down on the city below, and some fellow employee will spill hot coffee on her hand. You'll feel better about yourself knowing that, if you were in a pool, you might actually be able to help this person out. Intro to Lifesaving is a one-hour class, and as the years progress, you will learn the value of these little gems. Electives are always key, since they don't tie you down to some "major" or "career aspiration" too early in your senior year. The additional 3 hours which round out our schedule this semester are composed of honors research in Advanced Lifesaving. We are currently undertaking a project with A. Mitchell Moore and G. Rich Lassiter. The "advanced" part of this course, as you can see from the photo above, comes from the fact that the advanced lifesaving pool is frozen. Just imagine trying to apply the wealth of knowledge gained in Intro (where the water was actually water) on ice. It's not for the weak, and we have found that the key to our success will come in the form of good, old-fashioned practice. It's a rare Saturday that you won't find the lot of us carefully performing lifesaving demonstrations on ice rinks all over the southeast. On one recent expedition, Mitchell Moore took out an unsuspecting 8-year-old girl with a crushing cross check. (Note to readers: the little girl bounced back to her feet as Mitchell sustained massive head and neck trauma, shown above.)

And finally, to alleviate the 2nd semester blues, we should take time to realize what is really important this time of year. With all of the rain, cold weather, and hard times, our thoughts should turn not to ourselves, not even to our fair school. They should be focused squarely on our dear friend, marmota monax, the eastern groundhog. In two short days, the little fella will arise from his wintry quarters, the whole world watching, and unravel weather mysteries before our very eyes. This little rat will tell us how far off springtime is. He's alone. He's afraid. We understand you, Mr. Squirrel. Many times, in fact, 3 in the past week, we have coiled back into our townhouse after mistaking our shadows for that of a man nearly 6 feet tall.

And so maybe what we can all take away from this article is that there will be time when we'll all have to step through our own doors this semester, make the best of things, enjoy life, enjoy your friends, and take some time out to relax and steal a good book from the library before the college hires the snipers.

CHAMPS reaching out to motivate promising students

by Ben Acton
Staff Writer

Over 100 champions have been on PC's campus the past four years—and that's not including athletics. These champions are a part of CHAMPS, a special program designed as a collaboration between PC and the Laurens/Clinton community in assisting and motivating promising young students.

Since its inception in 1995, CHAMPS has provided local students with a vision of not only fulfilling their potential on the high school level, but also to consider the possibility of a post-secondary school education. The program is overseen by PC education professor and Director of Special Programs, Dr. Jermain Disasa. CHAMPS also involves participation from an eighteen member steering committee, as well as community leaders, teachers, several PC departments, and PC students who serve as mentors to the 120 CHAMPS students.

"The PC students, who serve as mentors are the backbone of the program. They act as a link between the child and the program," said Disasa.

This link is due in part to the time the mentors spend with the children involved in CHAMPS. During the CHAMPS summer program, mentors and kids live and work together at PC for two weeks. These two weeks serve as a major part of the CHAMPS program, as the students learn to interact with their peers and mentors as well as attend educational classes and workshops taught by area teachers and PC faculty.

"In those two weeks, our mentors are able to cut through many of the barriers these kids have, and connect with them in a very deep way. They do some very special kind of parenting," said Disasa, elaborating on the mentor-student relationship.

Cathy Clasen has served as a CHAMPS mentor the past two summers and this year serves as the CHAMPS intern, where she is responsible for coordinating monthly follow-up programs between the students and the mentors.

"[As a mentor], you really are able to connect with these kids and their families, and you can empathize with both their struggles and their joys," said Clasen.

Many of these follow-ups involve simply keeping in touch with the CHAMPS students through phone calls, letters, or by visiting them at school and eating lunch or watching a game with them. But the benefits of this relationship extend beyond such simple acts.

"It's a very good experience to be able to see the friends you make as a mentor and to be able to continue watching those friends grow and mature through their participation," said Chris Thorpe, mentor.

Mentor Jennifer Skelton enjoys seeing the children grow through the program.

"The experience has been unlike a lot of similar things I've done with kids, like summer camps. In that setting you usually don't continue to have a relationship with the kids," added Skelton. "It's inspiring to see these kids turn negatives into positives and it's also impressive to see them take risks and step across racial boundaries in connecting with one another," she continued.

A new proposal is on the table for the Academic Affairs Council — a plan to implement a plus/minus grading system at PC for the first time.

Sentiments in favor of and against the new grading system abound. The idea is a new consideration, so many students are unaware of it; but those who know are strong in their support or opposition.

Dr. David Gillespie, interim vice president for academic affairs, is the head of the council and is strongly encouraging student input concerning the idea. He does not intend to put the plan into action without a majority of students' consent.

"In past years, students seemed to want a variation of the plus/minus scale," said Gillespie, "but I do not think we will do anything if we do not feel the students are in favor of such a scale now."

The proposal was brought to the forefront by the Taskforce on Eclectic Reforms, created by Gillespie during the last academic year. The taskforce is composed of members of the Academic Affairs Council and looks at issues concerning a self-study of the institution. The plus/minus proposal was generated from within the council.

Laura Keely, student representative to Academic Affairs Council, presented the proposal in simple form to Student Government Association. Opinions were mixed. Many did not favor the idea because of added pressure going in to exams, the idea of penalizing lower averages and making more difficult students' ability to keep their grade point averages stable. Seaton Womble, SGA member, said the group consensus was against the proposal.

"We took a vote, and no one was in favor of the proposal at all," said Womble.

Much of the current idea is based on grading systems from Converse College and Oglethorpe University.

POINT

CHAMPS shows all that's right with PC

In its four years of existence, PC's CHAMPS program has touched the lives of over 100 students from nearby communities. The program, which targets promising, but at-risk students, serves to motivate those students to achieve their potential.

The CHAMPS program is a shining example of this college's commitment to extend its loving influence beyond the bounds of our 220-acre campus. Just like so many SVS programs and CEP events, the CHAMPS program incorporates members of the Clinton and Laurens areas into the daily life of this institution for the purpose of mutual benefit.

Presbyterian College owes a great debt of gratitude to Dr. Jerman Disasa for his unwavering devotion to this program, and to the PC students who serve as mentors for their willingness to give of themselves for the sake of others.

There are many aspects of this college that make it a fine institution of learning. But PC's enduring ability to serve its community through programs like CHAMPS makes it a peerless center for personal development.

Students owe it to themselves to run for SGA

Applications are currently available for students interested in running for the Executive Council of the Student Government Association. Elections will be held before Spring Break. Class elections will be held after Spring Break.

The Blue Stocking encourages every student to consider a position on the Student Government Association. Poor participation and uncontested races hurt the SGA, and consequently hurt the student body.

Perhaps the Knapsack says it best: "All students should recognize their responsibility to their fellow students and to the College and should insure that the Student Government Association continues as a viable organization by actively participating in Student Government affairs."

Pick up an application, and give it a run.

My Turn:
Rich Lassiter

The apathy on this campus is appalling.

The students seem to continually complain about the 'awful' conditions they must 'suffer' through here at PC. But they really don't care enough to do anything about it.

Recently, the RHA tried to change the dorm visitation hours. How many students are opposed to this idea? Very few, certainly the minority. One survey was passed out for every student in a dorm. Around 300 were turned back in. What were the other 300 of you doing that you were so busy, you couldn't spend 2 minutes to improve your dorm life? (Just so you know, this proposal did not make it past the faculty, who don't believe we study as late as 2 am. Why don't you talk to your professors about this?) Over and over, students whine about this or that, but the majority of the student body demonstrates that they really do not care by not participating. I'm not saying that everyone has to be a leader, but at least support those who are trying. Go out and make your voice heard!

College is where you are supposed to grow up. Become responsible for your actions. Start participating. Make your voice heard. This college is here for us. Period. It's time we start behaving like we are in the real world. If you were at McDonald's and were served an awful burger, would you complain to your friends? Of course not, you would ask to speak to the manager. All I'm suggesting is that you treat this business, PC, the same way.

Quit complaining to your friends, and start talking to the people who can make a difference, and work with them to make that difference.

SGA elections are coming up. Run for a position. Be that person who can make a difference. Or, at the very least, take the time to vote for those who will.

The author serves as a Senior Class Representative on the Student Government Association

S.G.A. Notes

The Student Government Association (SGA) met on Wednesday, February 11, 1998.

Laura Jacobs attended the meeting to inform SGA of the goings-on of the International Studies Committee. Jacobs talked about the study abroad packets and how the college is planning to move away from the Butler Program in hopes of attaining greater autonomy in study abroad programs.

SGA president Summer Hendley announced that she received a letter from the president at Berry College. The letter said that Berry's Food Task Force wants to come to PC to observe Presbyterian's food service.

Hendley informed SGA members that they are to miss no more than two meetings unexcused. All students who know they will miss a meeting are to call Betsy Rollins and let her know of the reason for their absence.

Leighton Hart brought up the possible grading system change that Laura Keely mentioned when she attended the meeting a couple of weeks ago. SGA voted against the change, but the academic affairs committee must still vote on the issue.

SGA also voted on whether students planning to go abroad should be prohibited from running for office that year. SGA believes that the election of a student who is unable to serve for an entire academic year takes away from another student's opportunity to be on SGA for the entire year. This vote will change the Constitution.

The junior class will begin selling Krispy Kreme doughnuts during the next few weeks in order to raise money.

McCracken puts work ethic into practice on campus

by Emily Benthall
Business Manager

You might know Micah McCracken by the yarns he spins about Rabun Gap, GA, and the people who live there. Or you may recognize the trademark facial hair. McCracken's hometown of Rabun Gap is a small farming community in the North Georgia mountains and provides the setting for many of his family anecdotes. The tradition of family is extremely important to McCracken and something he would like to carry throughout his life.

"Home to me is not a place but my family," said McCracken.

McCracken also has the mark of a solid work ethic. He spends his summers working on his uncle's farm back home with chicken houses, cattle, and hay baling. McCracken's dedication to farm work led to a commercial driver's license, enabling him to drive tractor trailers in the course of his work.

At PC, McCracken divides his time between his studies and jobs in Springs, the college's computer services department, math help sessions, and as a resident assistant. In addition, he has given time from each of the past two summers to come back to PC and help lead orientation trips for freshmen.

"I've met a lot of people as an RA, and I really enjoy it. I think that your RA as a freshman is more important than later years," said McCracken. Currently in his first year as an RA, McCracken is in charge of Barron Hall's second floor.

After graduation McCracken, a physics major, wants to pursue a graduate degree in civil engineering. He has applied to Vanderbilt and Clemson. "I want to become an engineer, and eventually build bridges," said McCracken.

Among the many lessons he has learned during his years at PC, McCracken knows that he must realize and appreciate life's good before he loses it.

"I don't dwell on leaving because then I won't enjoy the rest of the time here, and that would be wasting the time that I have," said McCracken.

One's faith is something else in life that is very important to McCracken.

During his four years here, McCracken has been active in FCA.

"PC has really opened my eyes to different ways people express their faith. God is always there no matter what. Even when things go wrong," said McCracken.

CHAMPS challenges students to meet their potential

Another important part of CHAMPS has been the involvement of the parents of the CHAMPS students.

"The parents are very supportive, especially of the mentors," said Skelton.

Parent relationships are also a focal point of CHAMPS.

"The parents of our CHAMPS students have also helped to connect with the parents of our mentors," said Disasa. "This is important, because it connects that many more people to the community. PC might be the facilitator of the program, but it is only housed here. CHAMPS ownership extends throughout Laurens and Clinton, and because of our mentors' parents, the country as well."

Clasen agreed, saying, "CHAMPS gives you a slice of realism, an idea of a community beyond PC. You see CHAMPS kids or parents at the grocery store and you can talk and relate with them."

The idea of this continual and loving relationship is something that another mentor, Carey McCallum, picked up on.

"The relationship between mentor, teacher, parent, and student is the key. The educational aspects are important, but the fact that each of these young people see so many adults going out of their way to help them fulfill their potential and show them that they are loved is something that will stay with those kids forever," said McCallum.

And although the heart of CHAMPS may be in the one-on-one contact with mentor and student, there are still many other ways for PC students to become involved in the program. Students can work on the CHAMPS newsletter as Both Skelton and Clasen have and tutors are always needed for CHAMPS. Most important to Disasa is becoming more aware of the situations and issues that exist with the program.

"The more we talk about the issue, the more involved we become," said Disasa. "Students can lead instead of waiting to be led. They can write about the situations, make reports on them, they can get involved."

"Our [PC] students are remarkable. I am confident that if they are aware of the opportunity to serve, they will respond," Disasa concluded. Responding to the call --- the true mark of a champion.

A chance to respond is coming up. A CHAMPS workshop for parents and students is planned for Feb. 28. If you are interested in helping or simply observing please call Dr. Disasa at ext. 8377.

PC IN BRIEF

SGA approves amendment to alter candidate eligibility, students vote on issue

On Wednesday, February 11, the Student Government Association (SGA) passed an amendment to the constitution of the student government association. The amendment, proposed by senior class representative Rich Lassiter, will exclude students who plan to study abroad the following academic year from running for SGA office.

Elections for both the SGA Executive Council and for class officers are tentatively scheduled to be held next month on Mar. 3 and Mar. 24, respectively. In trying to prepare for the next election cycle, the SGA has sought to eliminate some problems that the SGA has faced in the past.

Two members of the SGA's Executive Council left campus for the spring semester to study abroad, leaving two vacancies. The vacancies were filled by appointment.

"I proposed an amendment to the constitution to keep the leadership in the Student Council constant throughout the year," said Lassiter. "Midway through the year, replacement officers must play catch up on their duties, SGA's goals and objectives, and also in their relationships with the officers of the college. Additionally, this allows students who wish to serve for a full year the opportunity to do so."

Although Lassiter's proposed amendment passed with the required two-thirds majority, the amendment did not meet unanimous support. Critics of the proposal argue that all students deserve the chance to run for office, regardless of their plans for the following year. The proposal would bar capable and committed students from demonstrating their talents through SGA service.

On Thursday, February 19, the amendment went before the entire student body. In order to be enacted, the amendment required support from a two-thirds majority of the student body. At press time, the election had not yet been held.

Internships combine work, study to create unique alternative

by Dan Hart
Managing Editor

Every semester a number of Presbyterian College juniors and seniors earn from three to six hours of academic credit on a pass/fail basis through internships supervised by their respective departments. For every hour of academic credit, students are required to complete 42 hours of supervised field work documented in a logbook. With a number of students in various disciplines working for both private and government organizations this semester, this semester is no exception to the norm.

Chad Hayes, a senior biology major, is working once a week at the Eden Hall Plantation wildlife zoo in McCormick, SC. Eden Hall Plantation is a privately-owned hunting club owned by an environmental firm and used to entertain the firm's clients.

Hayes, who hopes to attain a graduate degree in wildlife biology, works with Sidney Huskie, a graduate of PC who also holds a master's degree in wildlife biology from Clemson University.

In his position as an intern, Hayes has assisted in calculating the kidney fat index of the deer herd on the grounds in order to compare the fat index of the herd to that of herds elsewhere in the United States. Through such calculations, biologists at Eden Hall can determine the health of their herd of deer. Hayes has also gained experience making food plots for the wildlife at Eden Hall by plowing pieces of land in the forest and planting clover and other plants eaten by the animals.

While internships are available to students of disciplines in the physical sciences, a number of students from other disciplines are also gaining professional experience this semester.

Jennifer Skelton, a senior psychology major, is exploring her interest in counseling through her internship with Hospice, a non-profit organization which takes care of terminally ill patients in their home. Working alongside a social worker, a nurse, and a chaplain, Skelton assists with counseling groups.

According to Skelton, Hospice is different from many government-supported organizations in its emphasis on providing spiritual support to patients. Skelton said that her internship with Hospice is particularly well-suited to her because she is interested in learning more about chaplaincy. Skelton further stated that her experiences helping terminally ill patients have given her a deeper understanding of the issues that face counselors.

"I have learned a lot about grief issues and the stages of grief that people go through," said Skelton.

Amy Johnson, a senior sociology major, is also interning for a social services organization. Johnson is working this semester for the Upper Savannah Care Consortia, an organization which provides case management for people living with HIV and AIDS in Laurens, Greenwood, Edgefield, Abbeville, McCormick, and Saluda counties.

Along with a social worker, Johnson co-facilitates a support group for AIDS/HIV patients, calling and writing letters to clients and informing non-clients who may be interested in joining the support group. Johnson is also compiling a client notebook, which will provide new clients with material about medications, hotline telephone numbers, and other pertinent information.

"It is a much needed service," said Johnson, "especially in this area. So many of the patients are from lower income backgrounds that couldn't otherwise receive the services that they need."

College considers new grading system

Much of the current idea is based on grading systems from Converse College and Oglethorpe University. The members of the Academic Affairs Council worked with their departments to develop scale to best accommodate each academic department. The council met Thursday, February 19, to attempt to find a consensus from among the different systems.

"The process is such that next Thursday people are to bring back the sentiments of their departments to Academic Affairs Council," Gillespie said on February 11. "I feel that at that time we will develop a proposal to present to the faculty in general."

Keely said that the council has not discussed the topic at length, but will do so extensively before it is definitively passed or rejected.

"It will be interesting to talk with the departments and see what they say," she said. "There has not been a lot of discussion yet."

One of the considerations that concerns faculty members about the proposal is the possible inflation of students' grade point averages. Many do not want to increase the average GPA because of the possibility of false implications as to the degree of difficulty of the academic curriculum. Students fear that the new system would deflate grades. As Gillespie pointed out that it could serve to lower averages because professors could assign a grade of B+ rather than raising an average to "A."

Gillespie plans to abstain from the committee's vote.

"I think I will let the people decide," he said. "If I were voting I would think it is a good idea. I have been a teacher a long time, so I see the unfairness of giving C's for students with a 79 as well as those with a 71. I think the plus/minus is a more fair way to do the system."

The 4.0 scale would most likely remain in tact if the proposal passes. That way an A would still receive 4 quality points, while a B+ would receive 3.5, and so on. The new system could be implemented as early as Fall '98.

Keely feels that the issue is of importance for students and faculty alike.

"Things like this that concern the student body and school are very important for admissions requirements and how students' grades will change. An increase or decrease makes a difference," said Keely.

Honors research challenges students beyond the classroom

by Beth Blackburn
Staff Writer

For a majority of seniors, this year is a time to wrap up studies and hope for smooth sailing down the home stretch. The exception stands, though, with those students who have chosen to tackle independent or honors research.

"This is one of the first times I've been able to work on something for myself. I'm doing real work that is important to me," said Liz Beasley, who is composing her own collection of poetry.

There are a number of reasons why students become involved in this type of research. An e-mail from Dr. Bob Hudson prompted Angela Albee's interest in shellfish and the scanning electron microscope, or SEM. Tommy Reiser, a biology major, is working with Dr. James Wetzel to further research Wetzels did for his Ph.D. dissertation on seahorses. Later this month Reiser will defend an honors paper he wrote on fractals for his Math major. In Dr. Charles Coker's Medieval History class, Matt Miller became intrigued by his topic, "The Rise and Fall of the Knights Templar."

A lot of the students have come to these particular topics as a result of their general course work," said Dr. Booker Ingram, associate professor of political science.

According to Dr. Ron Dempsey, who hopes to place more emphasis on the intellectual efforts on campus, students must meet rigorous criteria in order to be academically eligible to participate.

"The student will, after working with a faculty member, fill out a form to be evaluated and approved by the department and the Vice President for Academic Affairs," Dempsey said.

Logs, progress outlines, and weekly meetings with professors are just some of the ways that students stay on task.

"There is a lot of responsibility on the student to organize their time far in advance," said Dr. Leslie Baylis.

"It is not Dr. Barr's job to babysit," Cathy Magee said of her work with Dr. Terry Barr, associate professor of English. "I have to be serious about it and keep on track."

"As a procrastinator, I can say that honors research helped with my biggest pitfall as a student. It is the biggest step that I've ever made academically," said Miller.

Along with lessons in time management, the researchers are learning to utilize the vast resources available to them for their work. This includes such complex elements as the SEM, infrared spectrophotometer, routine lab equipment, and psychological stimuli.

"These students have access to a full range of our instrumentation here," said Dr. Edward Gouge, professor of chemistry, said. Students also use documents, books, articles, interlibrary loans, videos, and computer resources such as the Internet for their research.

"I help guide her first of all through relevant sources and help her to find appropriate sources to give her a solid background," said Dr. Thomas Weaver, professor of political science, of Kim Damon's work on Hamas and the Palestinian-Israeli peace accords.

The professors admit that they learn from the students' experiences as well by working with them, but they stress that it is truly the students' work.

"[Magee] has been the driving force behind it. I work with her to help her stay on course," Barr said.

"It is his initiative. If the person has a problem, we certainly sit down and work with him. Dr. Michael Webb directs his research," said Gouge of the research Elliot Easterly is presently doing with Webb.

"[Webb] is at once as much a lab partner as a mentor," said Easterly.

The students are the primary recipients of the benefits of such independent research. They receive recognition of their work through publications, presentations, and awards, especially the distinction of being honor graduates.

"We try to get their research published in a journal that provides national and international recognition for the college and the student," said Baylis.

Students give presentations to groups such as the South Carolina Academy of Science, regional meetings of chemists, national psychology conferences, and the college-wide audience of faculty and students.

"This is very important in their development as scholars and researchers," said Ingram.

Apart from the public eye, students obtain a greater awareness of their abilities as researchers and their capacity to produce worthwhile work.

"There are no easy answers or solutions," Barr said. "It is a toughening process that reveals an ability for independent research, resulting in a finished and substantial product."

"To me, it is the single most important experience that they can have to build their confidence to make them realize, 'Hey, I am a biologist,'" said Hudson.

"For any sort of graduate work, [independent research] is an invaluable lesson in how to go about research and how to prepare the results of that research," Coker said.

The students expressed similar views of the benefits of independent and honors study.

Robbie Wellington understands the importance of his research for further pursuits.

"You have to be disciplined to do the reading and come prepared to talk about it. Because I plan to go to graduate school, this is sharpening my weak points," he said.

"Honors research leads to a greater understanding of your discipline," said Easterly. "You see your results because you apply techniques and theory perfected throughout endless hours of study."

"For me it has been such a fascinating experience that I've really enjoyed it," Miller said.

"It's been a positive experience. I'll be interested to see whether what we're doing will work out or not. It's the whole idea of not just opening up a book—it's more up in the air," said Reiser.

By choosing to take on a difficult and seemingly insurmountable task, these student researchers have proven that they are mature and focused.

"I'm glad I'm being pushed. It tells me that I have a lot of potential," said Wellington. "I am capable of doing the work. We are partners in a research project."

IM competition heats up as spring sports commence

By Robbie Bryan
Sports Editor

Intramurals have been growing in popularity at PC.

"We have a very high participation rate compared to other schools, but we still haven't reached our goal of 100% participation," said Springs Campus Center director Bryan Madden.

Most students who participate do so for fun or exercise.

"Intramurals are cool," said Warren Turner. "You just go out and play for fun and there is no pressure; just a great time. I don't even have to wear my blue retainer."

The mark of the intramural champion for a certain sport is the coveted Intramural Champion t-shirt. These shirts are worn with pride by all who have won hard-fought battles on the field, court, or table.

"We tasted the glory last year, but nothing feels better than putting on that extra-large, but that's okay, because our team has extra-large hearts," commented Ashley Lamar, co-captain of The A-Team, when asked about the coveted shirts.

ended and it's now basketball season. There are forty-seven teams, which makes basketball the largest intramural sport of the year. Singles and doubles racquetball will start soon, with outdoor soccer soon to follow.

This year's point race is shaping up to be a very close competition. Points are awarded only to competitors in A-league. In the men's division, Pi Kappa Phi and Pi Kappa Alpha are tied for the lead with 240 points each. FCA is following close with 200 points. In the women's division, Zeta Tau Alpha with 200 points, has a strong lead over Alpha Delta Pi, which has 140 points. These points championships promise to be close races that will come down to the final sports.

PC handball teams heading to Columbia for national tournament

by Robbie Bryan
Sports Editor

On February 20-22 the Presbyterian College men's and women's handball teams will participate in the national tournament in Columbia. The men's team will be given one of the top seeds for the tournament for their second place finish in the conference championship. This tournament will represent the dawn of a new era for the development of team handball in the United States.

Despite its youth, PC's teams have a good chance of advancing.

"Oh, I think there is no one in our conference that we can't beat on any given day, but we haven't seen West Point and Ohio State, teams that have played for years and years," said Bryan Madden, the men's coach and the first commissioner of the Southeast Team Handball Conference (SETHC).

The team has three Pan American players who were invited to play team handball on the beach in Brazil with the U.S. Olympic team. These three players are Jeremy Ransom, Ted Kalb, and Ronnie Setzer. Other key players who will help the team advance are (in alphabetical order) Dave Amsler, Jarett Harrelson, John Kimball, Tres Moore and Parrish Swanson. Mitchell Moore, Robbie Bryan, Cam Warren, and Will Gravely add depth from the bench.

The women's team has been invited to the national tournament, as well. They are coached by Randy Randall. They will be led by Larianne Collins, Kit Upchurch, and Barbara Eves. The women will not have as high a seed in the tournament as the men, and they will need to be on fire to advance.

"We haven't taken the handball season as seriously as the other teams, but it was a wonderful experience to help promote and learn this new sport," said team member Laura Keely.

Lady Blue Hose leading conference, battling for bid to NCAA tournament

by Robbie Bryan
Sports Editor

This school year marks the inaugural season for women's softball as a varsity sport at PC. Last year, softball was played as a club sport.

This isn't the slow pitch softball, it's the fast pitch kind. The team's first game of the spring season will be this Wednesday against North Greenville College. They are coached by Debbie Holcombe and Buster Sturkie.

The team is young, composed of ten freshmen and three juniors. Only one player, Shannon Seigler, has had previous experience playing at the collegiate level. She was selected as the NAJ second team all-american 2 years ago when she pitched for Southern Wesleyan

The Lady Blue Hose basketball team beat Lenoir-Rhyne on Valentine's Day by a four point margin. This victory gives the women a 18-6 overall record and a 10-2 conference record. Picked to finish second in the conference in the preseason, the Lady Blue Hose are tied for first with Carson Newman. Right now the team has a one game advantage over Carson Newman. Carson Newman will make up that game this Monday, and depending on the outcome of that game, the Lady Hose could be alone at first place. They are coached by Beth Couture, who will be finishing up her ninth year as head coach this season.

If the girls win Wednesday against Catawba and Saturday against Gardner-Webb, they will likely retain their first place standing.

"All the girls are pumped because we have a chance to win conference for the first time in PC history," remarked freshman Sara Smyrl. Smyrl has been sidelined as a medical redshirt.

The SAC Tournament will be February 24-28 at Mars Hill College. If the team wins, they will get an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

"Our confidence is very strong from top to bottom, so there will not be an easy game in the tournament. Lenoir-Rhyne is next to last in the conference and we beat them by four points. That just goes to show how tough our conference is," said assistant coach Ellison Manley.

Even if the Lady Hose do not win the tournament, they will still have a good chance for a bid to the NCAA based on their record and standing.

University.

Despite its youth, PC's team is strong. Holcombe is confident that her team will achieve success during its first varsity season.

"I feel that we will finish in the top third of our conference. We have uled to play powerhouse teams like Kennesaw State, a team which constantly ranks in the top five in the nation. They will also be playing in the Queens College tournament, where competition is expected to be tough.

The women played a scrimmage February 13 against Spartanburg Methodist. The first game ended with a 5-2 Blue Hose victory. Shannon Seigler was the winning pitcher with seven strike outs. The highlight of the game was Ross Stewart's inside-the-park homerun. The second game ended with the Blue Hose romping Spartanburg Methodist 9-2. Christi Smith was the winning pitcher.

"Winning these games was a great confidence booster for the talent, but we are lacking experience," said Holcombe.

The team will not have an easy season. All their games will be double-headers and they are scheduled to play powerhouse teams like Kennesaw State, a team which constantly ranks in the top five in the nation. They will also be playing in the Queens College tournament, where competition is expected to be tough.

The Last Word: Takin' care of business with the Grif

by Tommy Reiser
and Leighton Hart

Dear Dr. Griffith:

We just wanted to be the first to welcome you here to PC. Okay, so maybe we're not the quickest of fellows, or the brightest for that matter. Truth is, we originally wrote this letter in November and tried to send it up to Admin several times via our elaborate on-campus mailing system. Countless times we have received a glossy 8X10 of yourself with a scribbled greeting along the bottom edge saying: "Tommy and Leighton, thanks for your letters. Never write me again. So thanks again, and remember, no more letters." We were on the verge of being upset, and then someone pulled us aside and told us that you weren't even here yet and that your secretary had been autographing your photos. It's no big deal, though.

However, we just figured that since you're here now, we'd send you the letter we composed back in November. We've tried to edit it up a little bit in the interest of...well, in the interest of us staying at PC. We had to put some more time into the letter last week because when we removed all the curse words, all we had left were "Dear" and "Sincerely." We also took out some things about ourselves that we thought we'd share with you. Gone are our personal goals, our 3 paragraph analogy about girls and Pepsi, 2 full pages about Chia pets, and our plans for a trip out West with you over Spring Break.

But in the interest of your information here's an excerpt from the original letter:

"... And when you're done with the Pepsi, you can just toss the can in the recycling bin and grab another can.

Moving on, we know that you must be bewildered by all the challenges that you are facing as a new campus leader. So we put together a little list of some of the issues that are plaguing the student body. Here's some crucial changes that you must attend to during your first year here. We know that the SGA has told you of many of their achievements this year, such as forming a committee to talk about message boards, and getting a new tank of helium for their office.

We have a few proposals of our own that might merit your attention. First, as the campus becomes increasingly environmentally friendly (just under 80% of the faculty smoke now) we recognize the need to change some of the practices that have dragged this campus down in the past. Here we choose to focus on GDH. The overuse of utensils in the dining hall is out of control. Forks? Spoons?

Knives? Don't you think it's overkill? How's about we stock that place with sporks, thus eliminating the need for three pesky utensils. We'll save water, you'll get those fur-hating folks from SEE off your back, and a certain dining hall official will have more time in front of the poker machine at the Doghouse.

Second, residence life on this campus has become almost intolerable. A recent letter from a high-ranking residence life official sharply reprimanded townhouse residents about coolers, trash cans, and a toilet that adorn the complex. We interviewed the owners of the toilet, and they told us that it is now being used as a marker to show where the townhouse complex's first 20-foot cedar Christmas tree once stood decorated with over 600 colored and white lights. The toilet, which we hear served as the stand for that tree, serves as a little memento. It made perfect sense to us. However, we know that compromise is essential to progress and we're willing to meet you halfway. We'll lose the toilet if you can look into a certain administrator wheeling through our parking lot at 7 a.m. every morning on the back of a chopper hollering, "Hey Saddam! I got your poison gas right here!" (SEE PHOTO) We don't really know what that means.

So those are top priorities, but there's so much more that needs to be done if this school is really going to compete. Here's just a couple more.

There has been much talk in SGA meetings about increasing communication on campus. Back in the day, the belltower would tell students when it was time to switch classes and go to convocation. And since ideas are being volleyed around about a possible belltower renovation for the senior gift, wouldn't it make sense to just smash that freakin' thing down and put a little internet terminal there? Get the money from the senior class for the renovation, buy a $200 e-mail terminal, and take the other $20,000 and head for Tijuana.

Next, colleges are fighting tooth and nail to come up with ways to attract new students. We say forget better food, forget more financial aid. There's a simple two word solution: ferris wheel.

Moving on, the nature trail gets a little muddy after it rains, and it's hard to see out there after dark. Let's pave that thing and light it up.

Next, since job security is not a word that you hear much in Springs these days, we've got yet another proposal for you. Fire student workers and replace them with one hamster. Cost down, efficiency up.

And before we get too preachy, just one more recommendation. When the new alarms were put in the library, a hasty decision was made to change the way the doors swing. And while we may learn to adjust to this inconvenience, it's essential that the school not forget to make one important change. Question 4 on the library proficiency exam should now read "Is the front door: a) a push door, b) a pull door, or c) a push/pull door?" We got burned by that question back in '94.

Okay, we'll leave you alone now. But, and this is not really a threat, but just a "strong reminder." We can only guess that your lease probably looks a lot like ours for our townhouse. Remember, you signed a lease that said you'd pay $265 a month and that you wouldn't have kegs, sticky stuff on your walls, and no pets. Now we know you have no hard evidence about kegs, but we know that there is a certain "Belle" that has been spotted in and around your house. Belle stays, toilet stays. Deal?

Merry Christmas,
Tommy and Leighton

Unpopular majors may trouble next academic dean

by Laura Jacobs
Senior Writer

There are several departments at PC which consistently produce few majors. One might argue that these are a less valuable part of the mission and well-being of the college than their heavily-populated counterparts such as biology, political science, and business administration. Professors from areas with few majors, however, attest that their subjects, although not for the faint of heart (or mind), exemplify the maxim that quantity and quality are not synonymous.

Modern Foreign Languages, for instance, has a combined 1998 total of sixteen students with declared majors in French, German, or Spanish.

Dr. Constance Colwell, professor of modern foreign languages, says that few students choose to major in a foreign language because "most students perceive foreign languages as being difficult. At the same time they do not foresee that they will ever need to speak one."

Daniel Professor of Chemistry Dr. Ed Gouge shares the opinion that the perceived level of academic rigor affects the number of majors in a department.

"People associate chemistry with a rigor that they don't associate with other departments. You are asked to think in terms of models; that's a degree of conception that people aren't accustomed to. Also, people associate math with chemistry, even though it's not what I would call higher math," said Gouge. There are currently eight declared chemistry majors.

Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion, cites not difficulty but they feel, is to get experience in other fields. So, there is no vocational pressure to major in religion," said Hobbie.

There are many formal and informal routes of student recruitment taken by departments with few majors.

Hobbie states that the religion department recruits students for the Christian education concentration, graduate study or who might go into some other line of work other than the ministry."

Gouge said that the Chemistry department has "no qualms" about identifying freshman chemistry students with promise and encouraging them to consider further work in chemistry.

Gouge, however, points to the ethics of recruitment, saying that nobody "who doesn't want to be here" should major in chemistry.

"We don't put a hard sell on anyone," he said.

Dr. Orval Oleson, associate professor of music, said the department lists two declared majors but contains close to twenty intended majors. He mentioned music scholarships as a method of recruitment.

"We certainly look for majors and offer music scholarships to students. This being a liberal arts college, though, we don't go out consciously to visit schools. We probably should," said Oleson.

Oleson also said that lack of practice space and facilities makes it difficult to accommodate additional majors.

Interim vice president for academic affairs Dr. David Gillespie said that he has observed changes in the popularity of different majors since he has been at PC

On Wednesday, March 4, the Student Council of the Student Government Association (SGA) announced the six winners of this year's Executive Council elections. The six new members of the Executive Council will serve the student body during the 1998-99 academic year. Elections to the SGA Executive Council were held on Tuesday, March 3, and a run-off election between the two leading SGA presidential candidates was held the following day.

SGA president Summer Hendley said that she was excited by the voter turnout in the Executive Council elections.

"I was very excited to see the number of people we had participating in executive elections," said Hendley. "I believe this newly elected Executive Council will represent the student body very well. They are all very dedicated and have a lot of energy that they want to put towards the well being of Presbyterian College."

Laura Keely, a junior from Rock Hill, S.C., was elected SGA president, while Jay Philpott, a sophomore from Lexington, Ky., was elected vice president. The student body elected Sally Phillips, a sophomore from Charlotte, N.C., to serve as secretary, and Sara Hopper, a sophomore from Rock Hill, S.C., was elected treasurer. The Judicial Council's appointment of junior Jon Baggett, a native of Walterboro, S.C., to the chair of the Judicial Council was approved by the student body. The student body also approved the Student Union Board's appointment of Shanna McAlister, a junior from Columbia, S.C., to the presidency of the Student Union Board (SUB).

According to Keely, freshman orientation is SGA's main concern at the moment. SGA members will plan FOB activities over the summer.

Keely added that the rest of the SGA agenda is largely dependent upon the goals of the new college administration.

"A lot of what we do depends on what Dr. Griffith has on his agenda and on the energy and support that he gives us," said Keely. "We'll have to work closely with Dr. Griffith during this time of transition to help him adjust and help ourselves adjust."

Keely said that she welcomes input from students regarding their concerns and ideas.

"I hope that I'm approachable both enough that students will give me both positive and negative feedback," said Keely.

Faculty minutes spark student criticism

Two submissions to this issue of the Blue Stocking deal with the minutes of the January 29, 1998 faculty meeting. Excerpts of those minutes are printed on Page Three. Each submission makes reference to incorrect and disrespectful comments made in those minutes.

The Blue Stocking is inclined to agree that the tone of the faculty minutes is disrespectful toward the efforts of students to improve their own quality of campus life.

The minutes, which occupy two full, single-spaced pages, were prepared by Faculty Secretary Dr. James Skinner. While the Blue Stocking understands that reading the minutes of a faculty meeting might be conducive to narcoleptic attacks, it is the opinion of this newspaper that literary embellishment should be kept to a very strict minimum.

In addition, the Blue Stocking believes that faculty members should keep in mind that their proceedings are recorded. We appreciate the collegial atmosphere that these meetings enjoy, but suggest that if less joking took place, perhaps fewer student feathers would get ruffled.

The staff of the Blue Stocking claims no literary sophistication, but one thing we've learned is that good writing is mindful of its audience. Future faculty minutes should be prepared for a campus-wide audience rather than for an audience of cynical and out-of-touch faculty members.

My Turn:
Quinton McKissick

When we came to college, we came to learn and expand our horizons, as the cliché goes. I don't know about the rest of you, but I am beginning to believe that anytime we try to change something here on campus the faculty interferes without ever listening to what we have to say. The Residence Hall Association (RHA) has been trying over the past two semesters to write a new visitation policy and to get it out into effect. After surveying the student body, researching, and writing many drafts, we sent a visitation policy proposal to the Student Affairs Council. The proposal asked for an addition of three hours to the current visitation hours, meaning 11 a.m. until 2 a.m., and 24-hour visitation on Friday and Saturday. At the January 19, 1998 meeting of the council, 10 of 16 members were present. The six members missing were faculty members. After much debate the council voted and the proposal was defeated by a vote of 3 opposed and 7 in favor. RHA later found out that we needed nine positive votes to pass the proposal on to the next level of hierarchy, the faculty. Since the beginning of the semester, Dean Nixon has kept the faculty informed about the visitation proposal.

At the last faculty meeting, the first for Dr. Griffith, the visitation proposal idea was brought up for discussion. The minutes of this meeting included some interesting statements that I think need to be brought to the attention of the faculty and student body. One of the things the minutes states is that the Student Affairs Council has voted down several proposals to extend the visitation hours. This statement is not true; the council has only received one proposal from the Residence Hall Association. Another thing that needs correction in the minutes is a statement concerning Mr. Nixon. It says, "Mr. Nixon has suggested to them (RHA) to change their proposal to 11 a.m. to 2 a.m., seven days a week." Mr. Nixon has only said to me that he would vote for a proposal with those hours, but never suggested to me to change the proposal in order to get it passed. Another thing the minutes don't say is that the majority of the faculty have not received or seen a copy of the visitation proposal. Without seeing the proposal, the faculty has already come up with their own predisposed ideas. Isn't the point of a democratic government to judge everything with a clear mind?

Another interesting statement made in the minutes after discussing the equestrian club and visitation proposal included, "Sounds like another administrator for picking up after horses and monitoring student interactions," which was followed by the statement, "Same thing," by another faculty member.

I think these statements and a few other choice statements in the minutes need to be changed in order for the readers of the minutes to understand what is going on and to know the whole truth.

The author serves as president of the Residence Hall Association and as a member of the Student Government Association.

Theater Review: PC's Makbeth

by Kay Owen
Campus Life Editor

The Theatre Company is hot this semester, with two major performances on the schedule. The first, Richard Schechner's "Makbeth," made its run February 18-21 in Harper Center.

The play, an adaptation of William Shakespeare's timeless "Macbeth," is the same story of greed-ridden characters starving for power, only with a twentieth-century twist. The set is modern, the characters ancient. Although I am not a fan of manipulations of Shakespeare, the company certainly pulled off this 1960's play with incredible insight and definite talent.

Harper Center stage was easily transformed into a simple but telling display of the darkness and secrecy of "Makbeth." The center crown emphasized the magnificent struggle for power and the incredible influence of the ruler. The centerpiece also proved to reiterate the age-old fight for leadership combined with the more modern power struggle.

The Dark Powers, played by Ginny Lawton, Kimberly McKee, and Mary Beth Williams, definitely are the connecting force in this "Makbeth." Their lines are similar, but they reflect ideas and implications that are certainly a diverse variation on Shakespeare's original ideas. Their songs and ritual chants are eerie, their grins and wicked laughter are intriguing. Their callings directed at the impressionable and vulnerable Makbeth initiate a play that tumbles into the world of general corruption and misplaced ambition.

Nick Crisfield is very convincing as a Makbeth who is lured in by the black magic and tempting predictions of the Dark Powers. He quickly falls into the trap of murder and lies as a means of ensuring his good fortune and increasing his chance to gain the coveted crown.

Supporting Makbeth in his journey to the ill-fated end is Carrie Duello's Lady Makbeth. The chemistry between her and Makbeth is very apparent, and their combined ambition brings the audience intimately into their world of darkness and turmoil. The character of Lady Makbeth brings into question the modern role of women in society and in relation to their husbands. Lady Makbeth's desire to be queen comes close to outshining Makbeth's own ambition. Her ceaseless support and encouragement of Makbeth can be interpreted both as a powerful influence as well as a mindless submission.

Brandon Lane as Malcolm and Daniel Cone as Macduff steer the plot forward as they mourn the death of their father and King Duncan, played by Joe Sullwell, as well as the loss of their brother Banquo, portrayed by Robbie Wellington. Malcolm and Macduff discuss the suspicious nature of the recent death and lament the loss of such great family and strong leadership. They propel the play into a sequence of shocks and betrayals as Lady Makbeth takes her own life amidst a backdrop of Makbeth's determination and the later fall of Makbeth by Macduff's sword.

All in all, the play was a creative and original twist on the traditional "Macbeth." The plot moved quickly and kept the audience intrigued, especially on the part of the creepily cunning Dark Powers. The themes and ideas explored in "Makbeth" hold very true to life in this decade and are worthy of being portrayed by PC Theatre Company, which did so in a very persuasive manner.

The Company's second major performance this semester will be "The Odd Couple" April 1-4. Lead roles will be Alicia Weeber as Olive Madison and Nichole Middleton as Florence Unger.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Following numerous months of research, a proposal which examined the beliefs of our campus community regarding visitation was submitted by the Residence Hall Association. It was voted down by the Student Affairs Council. We as an organization failed to accomplish one of our goals for the school year. As an organization this was very difficult for us, however, examining the situation, failing to accomplish our goal was not the most difficult thing to cope with.

Following the defeat of the proposal, the RHA proposal appeared in the minutes of a faculty meeting.

Faculty that could have been key votes failed to show up for the Student Affairs Council meeting at which our proposal was defeated!

From an organizational perspective, the faculty minutes we were given appear to mock our efforts and hard work. From my personal perspective I find it hard to believe that the faculty minutes are not confidential and can be given from administrators to students when they contain such rude comments. I also feel that faculty should set an example for students by attending their committee meetings.

Presbyterian College has reached a threatening time. Not only student apathy has surfaced but also faculty apathy has surfaced. We need to again work together to tackle our concerns as a college. Students and faculty need to attend their meetings because these meetings often determine the course of our institution. This is the time for faculty and students to work together to achieve goals; this is not the time to mock each other's efforts.

Faculty and student organizations exist for the same reason: to better our community. Let us no longer undermine each other's efforts.

Respectfully,

Jay Philpott
RHA Vice President

PC IN BRIEF

Editors selected for publications, managers selected for RadioPC

The Russell Subcommittee on Student Media met on the afternoon of Tuesday, March 4, to select editors for student publications and a manager for RadioPC.

After interviewing applicants, the committee made the following selections:

-Daniel Hart, a sophomore from Ocean City, N.J., will serve as Editor-in-Chief of the 1998-1999 PaC SaC.

-Katherine Lindsey, a junior from Helena, Ark., will serve as the Editor-in-Chief of the 1998-1999 PaC SaC.

-Nathan Cain, a junior from Fairview, N.C., will serve as Editor-in-Chief of the 1998-1999 Figs & Thistles.

-Bradley Wogsland, a freshman from Alpharetta, Ga., will serve as Editor-in-Chief of the 1998-1999 PCNP.

-Natalie Osborne, a sophomore from Lexington, S.C., and Laura Harris, a sophomore from Longwood, Fla., were selected to co-manage RadioPC during the 1998-1999 academic year.

The following are excerpts from the January 29, 1998 Faculty Meeting as recorded by Faculty Secretary Dr. James Skinner. These excerpts are printed here to clarify remarks made in this issue's My Turn column, and in a related Letter to the Editor.

Joe Nixon presented, on behalf of the Student Affairs Council, a most controversial motion to recognize an Equestrian Club. Alarmed Faculty Members, who had to be assured that there would be no paid coach, no building of stables for senior horses, and no fouling of college footpaths — breathed a collective sigh of relief on receiving those assurances, especially on hearing a firm "Neigh" to those questions from Mr. Zubrod, who showed great resolve in refusing to be saddled with equine quadrupeds.

Mr. Nixon gave information concerning a motion to extend visitation hours in the dormitories beyond the current hours of noon to midnight (Sunday-Thursday) and noon to 2 a.m. on weekends. The Council voted down several proposals to extend these hours. Mr. Nixon spoke of the Residence Hall Association's (RHA) request that these hours be extended to twenty-four hours on weekends (pause), not to exceed six nights in a semester (laughter). He does expect the RHA will submit another proposal. He has suggested Faculty would not approve such a radical change, nor would the Board. He has suggested to them 11:00 a.m. to 2 a.m., seven days. When one faculty member actually asked whether the current policy is a "blanket policy," he said that there are three options, but the one mentioned above is the only one currently chosen.

In the midst of these matters, Dr. Griffith mused, "Sounds like another administrator for picking up after horses and monitoring student interactions." The faculty secretary was heard to grouse, "Same thing."

Unpopular majors often very rewarding

"There is some ebb and flow, but ever since I've been here, business has been number one," said Gillespie. "The job market can determine majors. In a good job market, employers and students are likely to take the risk of a non-job feeding major."

Gillespie said that the question of the academic program will be "one of the toughest problems" for the new academic dean to face. Colleges similar to PC have been often accused of moving away from the liberal arts just to look at the bottom line, dropping unpopular majors along the way.

According to Gillespie, the new strategic planning process of PC may address the questions of whether the college should remain an exclusively undergraduate institution; whether new majors such as journalism, communications, or computer science should be added; and how faculty positions should be allocated among the departments.

For most PC professors, the value of their subjects lies not in the number of majors they attract but in the lessons they provide for any students involved in their study.

"A student who becomes proficient in a foreign language has, in many fields of endeavor, expanded job opportunities. People become less narrow-minded when they deal with a foreign culture as well as a language," said Colwell.

Gouge concurs that chemistry and physics majors, as well, stand to increase their job opportunities.

"Unemployment for chemists is less than unemployment for the nation," said Gouge. "Also, every chemical course teaches critical thought. It's a valuable field to study because you can't get through chemistry without solving problems."

"Religion is a valuable major because it gives students a grounding in the meaning and purpose of life, whatever their vocational pursuit might be," said Hobbie. "I wish we could get more religion majors who ended up in business, science, the arts, or teaching because I think it would give them a greater understanding of what their final vocation means."

Philpott, who has worked closely this past year with Residence Hall Association (RHA) president Quinton McKissick, expressed admiration for the college's student leadership.

"I have been very impressed with the old SGA and I look forward to working with the new SGA," said Philpott.

Philpott outlined his vision for SGA in the coming academic year. The vice-president elect said that he hopes to improve attendance at Student Council meetings and improve the overall effectiveness of the organization.

"I don't know that we get things done fast enough to get the proper credit for what we accomplish," said Philpott. "So I hope that we can increase our effectiveness."

Philpott also said that he would like to see improvements made to the dining service and the appearance of the library.

According to Philpott, the SGA Executive Council is responsible for many duties that are not specifically outlined in the college's bylaws. Philpott explained that each member of the Executive Council has certain duties related to his or her position; for example, Philpott, as vice president of SGA, will sit on the college's academic affairs committee as the committee's student representative. In addition, Philpott noted that the Executive Council meets once a week to set the agenda for meetings of the Student Council.

The student body will vote next week for representatives to fill remaining positions on the Student Council.

Henley expressed hopes that SGA will enjoy the same level of participation in the next round of elections that it enjoyed in elections for members of the Executive Council, and she announced that applications for class officers and RHA officers are due Friday, March 20.

Speeches are scheduled for Monday, March 23 at 7:30 p.m. in Springs Campus Center and elections are scheduled for the following Tuesday, March 24.

On Campus: Peer Connectors

There is not much to complain about here at Presbyterian, but it is for sure that some time in the past year the topic of dating has come up as you were sitting around with your friends.

Peer Connectors decided to sit in on a conversation that was occurring on a Friday night in Clinton Dorm between Danielle* and her friends. "I saw Tommy Tuesday on my way to Springs and he said that we should do something this weekend. Finally, I thought, a date. It has been so long. The houses are fun, but it's time for a change in pace. So, all week I have been waiting and he just called now. You will not believe what he wants to do 'together.' All of his friends are going out to the townhouses to hang out and then heading over to the houses. He wants me to find him when we all go out. You know what that means. Around one o'clock, he and his friends will get hungry, then they will come find me. Of course, I will become the sober driver and take a car load to the Waffle House. I just don't understand why it's the same thing every weekend, and why people don't date here."

Does this sound familiar? We know that many have felt this way in the past or this could be happening to you right now. This discussion has come up in our weekly meetings before.

To the shock of the females in the group, many males did not see a problem. Bobby Joe, a typical PC male student, had this to say about it: "Well, I didn't know that you were supposed to date at PC." It seems to me that the fine women of PC would rather meet you at the houses than have you take them out to eat or to a wrestling event. To tell the truth, I have never even thought about taking a girl out on a date. I just think that you get to socialize just as much if you meet her at the houses or at someone's party. So what I would say about the dating scene is that it's great. No Date. No forking out the dough. No having to figure out places to go. No worrying about getting a bus ticket to get the two of you to Greenville. I'm just plumb satisfied!"

I know that one of these opinions sounds familiar to you. Which one is it? We would like to hear your thoughts on the dating scene. What do you like about it? What don't you like about it? Honduras experience forces students to wrestle with poverty

by Emily Benthall
Staff Writer

For the past ten years, students enrolled in the Third World Seminar and Experience class have traveled to Honduras during their Spring Break. The group did so once again this year as part of their experience in studying underdeveloped countries. The intention of Dr. Charles McKelvey, professor of sociology, and Dr. Greg Henley, chaplain, in offering the course was to open students' eyes to the realities of poverty that many times either are overlooked or miscommunicated.

"Our culture suffers from a blindness, and we want students to look at the relations as a society with other parts of the world. Many are reluctant to examine why the poverty of some create our wealth, hopefully, through this course, we can get students to grasp and fully understand the significance of the causes that give rise to poverty," said McKelvey.

The first experience the class faced in January was interaction with members of the Open Door Community in inner city Atlanta over the course of two days. The Open Door is a ministry to impoverished homeless inmates of death row and their families.

"You see the homeless on the news, yet [homelessness] didn't become a reality to me until we helped serve them food. It really shocked me how appreciative, spiritual, and optimistic they are; they cherish their meals and their joy is so much truer than ours," said Kate Ewell, a student of the Third World Seminar and Experience class.

Many of the people that Ewell talked with got into their situation because they were laid off and afterward were unable to get a stable job. Those who could get a job only earned minimum wage and therefore were forced to live day to day because they couldn't afford a home. The trip to the Open Door was essentially a mini-experience to help prepare the class for the Honduras trip during their Spring Break. The class spent nine days in Honduras speaking with labor unions, students, and special workers's studies founders, and interacting with farmers and peasants.

"Through the Honduras trip students see with their own eyes the levels of poverty first hand and the dignity of the people who live in this poverty. Past student impressions have been that of appreciating the things in life that really matter; they have much to learn from the model behavior of those in Honduras, which cause the poor to cease to be an abstraction in turn becoming a reality," said McKelvey.

"The Honduras trip provides an example to the Christian community of how to respond to poverty and to live according to the parable found in Matthew 25. It is the Christian's response to the command of learning to love your neighbor. It is a powerful and rich learning experience that causes students to reflect on why they are doing what they are doing," said PC's chaplain, Greg Henley.

The integration of experience and reflection for better understanding is the main format of the class. After each experience the students are encouraged to reflect and required to journal some of their reflections.

"I've had my eyes opened to something I have never before experienced, and it's disturbing. I question how to live now, and how to live the rest of my life. I question who I am, what the world is doing and what the government is doing. One of my goals of visiting Honduras is to answer some of these questions," said Ewell.

"It's all about the liberation theology, turning words into actions, and what you can do for the kingdom of God. Taking this class has challenged my outlook on life and my world view. I have ramifications on the way I will be a doctor, how I live my life, and why I pay my taxes. I always hated paying taxes, but I've since learned that it's our social responsibility, and I don't abhor it anymore," said senior Eric Stribnick.

According to McKelvey, the self-examination demanded by the course is the hardest part.

"The most challenging part of the course is the reflection that comes in the last half of the semester. This course always has some kind of effect on students. They must look for the next step. Their eyes have been opened and they've seen the way the world generates poverty on a mass scale. Students are then faced with the challenge of what they will do with their life," said McKelvey.

Henley believes that he, as well as the students, benefits from the experience.

"Teachers often learn more than their students, and this is the case with the Third World Seminar and Experience class. I have come to a new profound respect for people in Honduras and their integrity through their ongoing struggles against enormous powers. My commitment is to expose as many students and create a critical awareness so that these problems will be addressed and changed," said Henley.

BEER, BEER, BEER!

Dean Nixon spotted handing out Alcohol Violations

Students have not been putting their empty beer cans into recycling bins. Dean Nixon knows that the energy saved by recycling an aluminum can is enough to run your TV or refrigerator for 4 hours. By recycling program you save 95% of the energy it takes to make a new one.

Concern about the renewability of resources is growing on college campuses. PC is no exception. Many students think it is time for our school to improve our recycling program. Currently the only products recycled on the PC campus are aluminum cans, which are picked up by a group of only about six students every other Thursday.

The Students for Environmental Education are trying to begin a paper recycling program for the campus. The hope is that a committee, called the Environmental Council, will soon be formed. A committee was previously formed in the spring of 1996, but it failed to get paper recycling started. The members of SEE are looking into the paper recycling programs at other schools to get ideas on the best procedures. One dilemma is that there is currently not a plan by any paper recycling companies to collect paper from Clinton or PC. Numerous other details must be resolved.

Another important issue that needs to be mentioned, but is not an immediate priority of SEE, is ending the use of Polystyrene (Styrofoam) in Springs.

The philosophy of SEE is that the Earth was not given to us by our parents, but rather loaned to us by our children. SEE needs more help from people that care about creating a better environment for everyone. If you are interested in getting involved, please come to one of our meetings, which are in Calhoun's on Wednesday evenings at 7pm, or talk to Rich Lassiter.

"Environmental problems are caused by billions of small, unthinking actions. They'll be solved by billions of small, sensible actions."

Celebrate (Mother) Earth Day on Thursday, April 23 with the Students for Environmental Education. The club is hosting a variety of events throughout the day. A demonstration of the campus's waste flow is being planned. The majority of the trash generated at PC is recyclable and is currently shipped to a landfill. In the early afternoon, a campus-wide cleanup is scheduled, including the nature-trail with the AIBS club. In the evening, a bonfire and campout on the intramural fields are planned. Entertainment for the evening will be provided by the band Riverside Jam, featuring several PC students and alumni. Everybody on campus is invited to participate in all the events. This will be a fun time for all! Come out and enjoy yourself!

Underdog women's softball team stunning opponents with skillfull play

By Robbie Bryan
Sports Editor

The PC softball team has started off their inaugural season with a 12-9 record overall. The team was picked to finish next to last at the beginning of the season because this season is the team's first in intercollegiate competition, but the team's exceptional early performance has moved them higher in the league standings.

The team started off with two close wins against North Greenville, but lost the next two games to Augusta State. The Lady Blue Hose split the double header with USC-Aiken, winning the first game 5-1 and losing the second 4-6. Both games against Claflin were called in the fifth innings because of the Blue Hose lead. Claflin was defeated 16-0 and 12-2. Competition was tough against Lander, and the women lost both games. The first game of the double-header was lost 2-3 in the tenth inning and the second game was lost 1-9. The team was en fuego when they met Anderson, beating them 12-1 and 15-3 in five innings with Sonya McNeil 7 for 7 for the night.

When the women played Kennesaw State, which is ranked number-two in the nation, they lost both hard-fought games only by one or two runs. The first game ended in a 2-0 loss and the second was a 1-0 loss.

"We played well and our defense was what kept them (Kennesaw State) down. That was our goal—to keep up with them," commented Jamie Carter when asked if she was pleased with the team's performance during the game.

The girls won the Little Four tournament over spring break. Shannon Seigler pitched a no hitter. Rachel Bishop, Jaime Carter, and Monica Choplin were selected to the all-tournament team.

"We are young and we get better every time we play. The freshmen are getting much needed experience and are learning from those experiences," said student assistant coach Jeff McLaughlin.

Lady Hose basketball sees post-season play

The Lady Blue Hose basketball team finished the regular season 21-7. They shared the title of South Atlantic Conference Champions with Carson Newman. Yes, this means they get a ring.

In the SAC tournament at Mars Hill, the Blue Hose scored above 70 points while keeping their opponents under 60 points. They met with Carson Newman in the tournament final and won by 25 points, 78-53. Jill Newman scored 24 points and the team got to cut down the net.

"The championship was kinda to break the tie. Winning showed we were number one...alone," said freshman Sarah Smyrl.

The team then advanced to the NCAA regional tournament where they first played Virginia Union and won 74-65. The Lady Hose then lost to Bowie State 63-59. Bowie State was the number one seed of the tournament and was ranked 6th nationally. Bowie State later lost to Francis Marion in the championship.

Jill Newman was named to the all-tournament team.

"A lot of people didn't expect us to go as far as we did, but we showed up and brought the ruckus. We didn't come half steppin', and we earned some respect for our team in our conference. Our team is still young...next year, all the way," added senior Tonya Kelley.

Spring Break wins land baseball team national ranking

by Aron Collier
Sports Writer

Coming off a program-record 30 wins in 1997, the Presbyterian baseball team is looking toward a strong season in 1998. These expectations are backed by the return of the entire starting lineup from last year.

Four quality pitchers graduated in 1997, leaving several holes to fill in the Blue Hose rotation. Seniors Clay Hall and Brett Eviszior are expected to fill these vacancies, proving their talent with big numbers last season. Hall racked up a team-high 46 strikeouts in 59 innings, pitched while composing a 5.50 ERA. Eviszior went 4-3 while pitching in 23 games, and he is looking to add to his all-time best 54 appearances. Eviszior also holds the program's best ERA at 3.60 and is second in saves (8) and seventh in complete games (7). His 3.07 ERA last season was good for sixth in the SAC. Sophomore Jeremy Joyner is also counted on to deliver, after posting phenomenal numbers last year as a freshman. Joyner led the team in innings pitched with 66 1/3 and was tied for the team-best in wins, going 5-4. Sophomore Rob Beale is moving to the bull pen this year, where he will assume the role of primary closer. He pitched well last year, ending up with a 4-1 record and capturing one save.

At the plate this season, look for big numbers from third baseman Roger Foltynowicz, who last season belted six homers and knocked in 35 runs, batting .333. His excellence with the bat earned him all-tournament honors, his glove work is exceptional as well. Sophomore first baseman Buck O'Hara will also give opposing pitchers problems, considering his team-best 39 RBI's and .306 average. O'Hara was named team rookie of the year last season and to the all-tournament team in the SAC. Not only does Clay Hall exhibit fine pitching numbers, but he brings talent to the batter's box as well. He hit a team-best .370, which enabled him to showcase his speed on the base paths, stealing 33 bases and giving him the SAC stolen base title. He holds the program's best total, with 63 steals in his four years at PC.

The infield is definitely solid up the middle with seniors Gene Gobel and Damian Patrick at shortstop and second base, respectively. Gobel has a school record 358 assists, while batting .292, and Patrick owns a .958 fielding percentage. Patrick batted .376 last year, legging out three triples. Senior Bryan Carpenter will provide any needed back up at these two positions, bringing a .952 fielding percentage and a .300 batting average off the bench.

PC was off to a 7-6 start going into conference play on Saturday, February 28. This marks the first time head coach Doug Kovash has entered conference play with a winning record, bringing added incentive to making this year a standout for the program.

"Our team started out with some rough games," said freshman pitcher Mike Burns, who is off to a 2-1 start, "but we've pulled together and had a couple of huge wins here recently that are a definite plus for us to begin the conference season."

The team will open the conference season against Carson Newman, which is ranked number-one in the conference. PC is picked to finish fourth in the conference. The team recently knocked off Georgia College, which was then ranked number-two in Division II polls. Freshman Kevin Felts (1-0) started, pitching the first three innings, then handing the ball off to another freshman, Matt Martunas (1-0). Martunas picked up the win in the upset, pitching the next five innings. Jeremy Joyner was brought in to close in the ninth.

PC also toppled the University of Alabama-Huntsville, another top-ten team. With the score 7-3, junior catcher Brad Teal hit a grand-slam to tie the game. Teal then had the winning double, beating Alabama 8-7. At Lynn University in Boca Raton, Fla., PC swept a three game series. Clay Hall went 6-6 during one of those games, in which he hit for the circle.

"I think we have a good team and are capable of winning the conference title," said freshman right-hander Brian Betsill. "If we play as a team we can win a lot of games."

PC is currently 16-9 and has set a new school record, winning 11 consecutive games. Big wins during spring break moved the team to an impressive twenty-sixth ranking in the nation.

With the smooth mix of leadership and promising talent, Presbyterian hopes to successfully attain a conference title and fulfill their aspirations.

Golf team cruising through spring season

by Jeremy Carl
Sports Writer

Tommy Addison begins his sixth season this year as PC's head golf coach. His resume includes two SAC tournament wins and the honor of being a two-time SAC Coach of the Year in 1996 and 1997. The team is currently ranked thirteenth in the nation.

The team includes Chris Eassy, Cliff Hicks, Eric Williamson, Chris Dwyer, Cliff McKinney, and Russ Padgett. The rest of the team is comprised of a strong freshmen class and includes Jay Biber, Mark Easley, Andrew Gardner, and Jon Spjostrom. Thomas Addison, the coach's son, transferred to PC from Francis Marion this semester and will soon begin tournament play.

From Oct. 19-21 the team played in the Chris Cochran/Radford University Invitational. The team finished second and finished higher than Division I schools such as Elon and Davidson.

The Blue Hose played in the First South Bank Intercollegiate in Florence, S.C. from Nov. 2-4. The team shot a score of 905 and finished ninth in the tournament.

Williamson led the team with a score of 215. Spjostrom shot a 230 and Padgett shot a 232. Gardner and Eassy had scores of 233. Williamson had the second best individual score.

The blue hose then traveled to Salisbury, N.C. to play in the Richard Rendleman Invitational from Nov. 16-18. The team finished fourth with a score of 588.

Williamson led the team with a score of 145. Spjostrom shot a 148 and Eassy shot a 149. Padgett shot a 150 and Gardner shot 159. Williamson, Spjostrom and Eassy all finished among the top 20 golfers.

The Blue Hose finished their fall season with five top ten finishes. Those five top-ten finishes include one fourth place, one third place and two second place finishes.

The team wrapped up the fall season with a ranking of eight in Division II.

Eric Williamson ranks sixth nationally with a 72.64 stroke average as of December 8, 1997.

"We had a great fall season with strong finishes and are looking forward to making a national title run in the spring," said Jay Biber.

"The freshmen showed impressive play throughout the fall season," said Padgett.

The team opened up its spring season at the Emerald Coast Collegiate in Milton, Fla. from Feb. 22-24. The team finished fifth and shot a score of 610.

The team placed seventh in the Cheerwine Challenge in Holden Beach, N.C. from Mar. 13-15.

THE LAST WORD: Unpopular writers may trouble next academic dean

by Tommy Reiser
and Leighton Hart

It's noon, and we're doing our usual lunchtime-Springs-mail-email routine. Cruise around the Springs parking lot 6 or 7 times scoping out the parking lot action. Not much happening on this particular occasion. Just the usual behind-the-dumpster accumulation of canteen folk out for a quick smoke. Up around the 15-minute parking a Public Safety officer — hat not fitting quite right because of the red horns and tail slapping the ground madly — has set his pitchfork down just long enough to write out tickets for all the folks who have been parked for a dastardly 16 minutes. Clearly a violation which the school should be aggressively punishing. We drive on, making one more lap. We've got the windows down, creepin' at 5 or 6 m.p.h. Backstreet Boyz are blasting on the CD player. Up by the bike rack a couple of fine co-ed specimens see us roll by. Leighton honks as Tommy points his fingers like a gun and winks awkwardly. They are justifiably embarrassed and walk away.

We decide it's time to park, so we roll into one of the "Reserved for IM Supervisors" spot that has conveniently popped up under Madden's dictatorial rule of Springs. An avalanche of obscenities erupts from the direction of the IM office, but it doesn't bother us. After as many disgraceful IM defeats as we have suffered at the hands of guys twice our size (also read: normal-size guys), vulgar language and obscene gestures from the IM staff have thickened our skin.

The important question to consider before pulling off our daily mail/e-mail caper is where to begin. E-mail then mail, or vice versa? For us, there are three keys: timing, intensity, and above all, being a team player. We move for the door to Springs. It seems simple enough, but this is where most freshman teams falter. The average team would head straight in the parking lot side door. But that door is laden with plenty of what we like to call "slow down factors." It's noon, it's gametime, and many of the big players are stepping up to the plate, checking their boxes.

Slowdown Factor #1: The lowboxers. These are the people that obviously have been screwed by the PC mail system. These poor bastards must contort their bodies every which way (and some which aren't fit even for this print) to reach a box which may or may not contain mail. This usually involves the "kneel-down technique." Legs are laid out all over the floor, and there's often a dangerous amount of kicking and flailing involved.

Slowdown Factor #2: The Springs Mailroom Student "Worker." This individual's job description obviously is free of any references to sorting mail, handling mail, delivering mail, or having to spell the word "mail." We'll just call this individual the "Slopper." You'll be trying your best to avoid the ocean of freakish leg-flailing when you hear, "Hey, hey, uh...how's it going?" Idle chat you presume? Nope. This guy gets paid not hourly, but instead gets commission for the sheer mass of people in the hall at any given time. The more he stops, the slower the traffic, the more leg flailing — you see where this is going? And package slips? Forget it. The perfect little psychological biscuit to stop you.

It's bait. One recent study shows that nearly 2 out of every 3 package slips handed out has no package to back it up. Counterfeit. Why the cover-up? Why the slowdown? Answer this question and you'll see why: whose picture is on the back of most of those package slips? Yesiree, the whole building from weight room to canteen is sickeningly corrupted in an attempt to keep people in the building. More congestion in the hallway = more money in the ping-pong ball machine.

Slowdown Factor #3: The Blue Stocking Office. Between the hours of 7 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. a constant stream of people entering and exiting the campus' hub of major publications. Reporters, typists, interviewers, interviewees, support staff, high school interns and pages clutter up the outlet to the mailboxes.

Gametime: 12:01 in the p.m. We enter through the main doors. Timing is good, intensity, but partnership is lacking. Leighton heads for the mailbox corridor, known to us as "The Hole." Tommy breaks at a negative 45-degree angle back right to the e-mail terminal. E-mail is crowded, but Tommy remains calm. A line has formed, but only three terminals are in use. Reiser fakes toward #3, but moves for terminal #4. He casually sits down, nonchalantly removes the out-of-order sign on the screen and plugs in the dangling cord beneath the desk. Meanwhile, Hart squares up with his box. Hart, a former lowboxer, made a careful trade in early '95 for a "corner high box" in exchange for his dorm lottery number. The year in Doyle sucked, but the box has treated him quite nicely. Hart's intensity remains high, and he fakes toward the door before slashing toward the e-mail terminals. Tossing a package slip in the trash, he makes eye contact with Reiser, who begins logging him in. After typing the last few letters of "WWW.THEGRIFF.COM" for Leighton's password, Reiser takes the tag and heads for his box, pumping a defiant fist in the air. No more than 30 seconds has ticked off since the pair entered the building. It's a huge day. Partnership and intensity are paying huge dividends. Tommy returns from his box, cursing the Stirlings newsletter and FCA slip which littered the innards of his box. Hart completes his e-mail to Admin entitled, "How the PC web page turned around my sorry life." As if it was all one motion, Hart swipes loose the plug with his foot, curses the computer for "breaking" again, and replaces the out-of-order sign on the monitor.

Gametime: 12:03. We're out the front door. We're pretty pumped. But we don't let our emotions get the best of us. We know that more challenges will face us in the days to come. More parking tickets. More big IM guys. More leg flailing.

We're almost back to the car. Some spiky-looking ladies are dining under the umbrellas, so we hop in through the windows. We're pretty sure this has impressed them, because after we circle the lot 3 or 4 times, they pick up their trays and walk back inside wearing the same look as the bike rack chicks earlier. And if we know women like we think we do, it's definitely the "I just saw the man I'm supposed to spend the rest of my life with" look. Take a number, ladies. We've found that the careful combination of intensity and timing required to pull off these daily Springs capers tends to turn girls off. You could be waiting a while

Dome of Neville, columns to meet wrecking ball

by Lee Wilcher
Senior Writer

Work crews are scheduled to begin the next phase of renovation to Neville Hall this week. The first phase, which began after the dedication of the Harrington-Peachtree Church Academic Center, included expansion of faculty offices and installation of energy-saving lighting.

According to construction blueprints, phase two will bring with it the demolition of Neville's dome and elimination of classrooms to create retail space.

"This marks the dawning of a new day for Presbyterian College," said president John Griffith. "We believe that the college can do without some of its more dated features, such as the dome of Neville, and a lot of the columns you see on campus."

According to Griffith, faculty will still have offices in Neville Hall, but the entire first floor will be devoted to upscale shops and eateries.

"We're expecting to see a Pottery Barn in there, a Gap Kids store, and maybe a Rack Room Shoes," added Griffith.

The addition of retail space is intended to boost college rev-

Greenville-based Commercial Sign and Lighting has been contracted to create a sign for the space now occupied by the dome of Neville. The sign's cost is estimated at $970,000.

enues.

"As many people know, PC has had some slight financial concerns during the past few years. These shops can help PC become competitive as it approaches the year 2000," he said.

Senior director of public relations Grant Vosburgh believes that the sign will project a positive image of the school.

"The sign will say 'Upstate Outlet Mall' and should be visible from I-385. Commercial Sign is doing its best to make sure that it will be visible from I-26, as well," said Vosburgh. "We think the sign will help lure prospective students to PC."

"When you think of the schools that we compete with — Furman, Wofford, Dartmouth — we're all about equal in what every college should offer. We all have great academics, fine athletics, and nice campuses. What PC will have, though, are shopping bargains that are out of this world," he added.

In addition to the changes to Neville, Griffith has asked that all columns be removed from campus buildings.

"[The columns] just look so old-fashioned," explained Griffith.

The columns will be crushed into rocks and sold by the Development Office to raise funds. Development officials are modeling the column sale after the "Buy a Piece of the Berlin Wall" endeavor in the early 1990's.

Each column will be replaced by an aesthetically-displeasing, yet cost-effective 4X4 wood post, much like those used on the end-units at the townhouses.

Another Presbyterian College official has announced his departure from the top ranks of the school's administration.

Senior vice president for spirit The Blue Hose has announced his resignation. In a bizarre twist of events, Hose will assume the mascotship of Lyon College in Batesville, Ark., former home of president John Griffith and current home to former academic dean Dr. William Moncrief.

Hose's duties during his 100+ years at Presbyterian College have included attending sporting events, energizing students at those events, and heckling other mascots.

"The first priority at Lyon will be getting to know the student body," said Hose. "What I do is almost a science, and it takes a while to study each group of people and find out what it takes to get them fired-up."

"You know, different crowds like different things. Let's say we're playing a team whose mascot is a bulldog. Well, 9 out of 10 people are going to like it if you walk around with a stuffed dog on a noose. But what about that tenth person? I think we need to think about him or her," said Hose.

According to Hose, his new position will allow him to try new things.

"Perhaps what attracted me most to this new job was that they have a flaming hoop they want me to jump through during halftime. On a little motorcycle. How can you pass up that opportunity? Also, the spirit office incorporates a lot more ladies in bikinis than PC does," added Hose.

Hose's announcement has sent shockwaves through the Smith Administration Building and the athletic department.

"We hate to see him go," said Allen Morris, PC's director of athletics. "Hose was always one to give more than the job asked for. When I was very young, Hose gave me a small, stuffed replica of himself. That was about an hour before I boarded a plane to play in Wimbledon. I kept the doll (I called him L'il Hose) in my bag for the whole tournament. That's the year I made it to the semifinals."

POINT

Squirrel slayings anger students

Noticed anything different since you returned from mid-fall break? If not, look around campus next time you are outside: the squirrels are gone. And they didn't just get up and walk away — they were killed. That's right, those cute, harmless little animals were blasted out of existence by some college employee bearing a shotgun. Over thirty were killed by someone's order.

There are some things I just have trouble understanding, and one is why anyone would want to kill thirty trusting, defenseless squirrels that donate a bit of serene sanity to the hectic hubbub of a world caught up in getting to class or lunch on time. As far as I can tell, squirrels pose no great threat to the well-being of Presbyterian College or its students. They don't defoliate the trees or keep the Academic Affairs Council from holding its meetings on time. If you want to kill some harmful animals, why not shoot the cockroaches in the dorms if they can be killed with a single gunshot?

We've lost a bit of PC with the loss of the squirrels. They did no harm, and they provided an opportunity to stop for a minute and observe real civilization for awhile. What is this college coming to?

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editors:

I read your article in the Blue Stocking about the killing of the squirrel on campus during the fall break. Since I am the employee that did the slaying, I would like to clear up some rumors that have gotten out.

No one ordered the squirrels to be killed. I asked permission to kill them. I understand that the squirrels are thinned out each year. I also killed seven pigeons and I'm surprised that wasn't mentioned.

If everyone would look real close, they would find that I didn't kill all the squirrels. In fact, you can hardly tell that I killed any at all. I just made them a little shy.

The editor stated that the squirrels were harmless. One squirrel can do more damage to a building or home than five rats. They rip up insulation in attics around campus when making their dens. They love to chew the covering off wiring and that causes a fire hazard.

Sincerely,

Lee Martin

Mascot departs after years of service

Just hours after Griffith received Hose's resignation, a committee was formed to search for a new college mascot. Dr. Suzie Smith, who has had extensive experience with national searches, was picked to head that committee.

"It's going to be a tough search to conduct," said Smith. "Not a lot of people are willing to admit it, but there's been talk of a new mascot around here for some time. The most popular candidate has been The Spayed Kitten. I've talked to plenty of alumni and friends of the school who want to see the Presbyterian College Spayed Kittens play their games."

According to Smith, salaries for Spayed Kittens tend to run higher than PC is willing to go, so the committee will explore the option of finding a Starving Alley Cat.

In light of the opportunities that lie before him, Hose admits his reluctance to leave that town that has been his home for over 100 years.

"My family loves Clinton," said Hose. "It's such an accepting town. I can go into a restaurant in Clinton and no one notices that my head is way too big for my body, and no one cares that I can't talk. And no one minds the blufloornish grin. It's going to be hard to leave."

Fire ravages Springs Campus Center office

Students speak out in SGA poll

by Mark Maurer
Staff Writer

A destructive, yet isolated fire tore through an office in Springs Campus Center Tuesday night, doing untold damage to Springs director Bryan Madden's office. The fire, which occurred just weeks after Madden's tenure as director of the building was extended, gutted his office. The flames destroyed books, furniture, files, and a computer handed down to Madden by former director Randy Randall.

The fire has caused some suspicion in the campus center, as it damaged only Madden's office. Further, the charred remains of the office make it appear as though the fire was discovered and extinguished immediately after the fire broke out. Items were damaged.

Madden, whose clothes caught quickly of gasoline when dropped on the scene by a Blue Stocking reporter, denied any knowledge of how the fire may have started.

"All I know is that now I'm going to spend the next week buying new toys. I mean uh...new valuable work-related items for my office," said Madden.

According to one Public Safety activity report, Madden was stopped moments before the fire walking in to Springs wearing a bandana over his face, with safety glasses, and carrying a gallon-sized red metal can. The Public Safety officer did not think this to be too suspicious, and was called away to harass a student for walking through a faculty parking space.

Madden estimated the damage to his office as "somewhere between $150,000 to $200,000."

An insurance field representative questioned Madden's figure, saying that, "if all three computer labs, GDH, and the founder's library burned together, then we'd be dealing with those types of numbers."

Madden defended his estimate, arguing that at the time of the fire, "the college's red Jaguar convertible — the one they drive at Homecoming — was parked in the office at the time, as was one of the campus' Italian sculptures."

In a seemingly unrelated incident, student intramural directors reported that their office had been tampered with, and that the room was soaked in gas.

PC SPORTS IN BRIEF

Dickey announces fall schedule

The Presbyterian College football team's 1998-1999 schedule was released this week by head coach Daryl Dickey, and shows off the coach's ambition for the team.

"I tried to pick up a challenging schedule, and I think that I did that for the most part," said Dickey.

The Blue Hose will open their season in late August against Mars Hill. PC has traditionally dominated this conference rivalry, and coach Dickey expects to chalk up another Blue Hose victory.

The Blue Hose then go on a nine-game road trip to face some tough opponents. The home schedule has been limited this year due to construction taking place in Bailey Stadium. Construction equipment and materials for the stadium's new upper deck and club level seating areas are currently stored on the field.

September 3, the Blue Hose will take on conference titans and yearly national contenders Carson-Newman for their second game. Dickey feels this one is sure to be a Blue Hose win, as well.

The remaining games on the PC schedule include a match-up with Dickey's alma mater Tennessee, a showdown with Notre Dame, a trip to Nebraska to battle the Cornhuskers, and a late season trip down south to take on Florida State, Miami, and Florida.

Dickey is predicting a 9-1 season, with the single loss coming at the hands of Florida. "Spurrier's just too good," said Dickey.

Results are in from the recent public opinion poll conducted by the SGA during class elections. The poll allowed students the opportunity to register their opinions on a number of hot campus issues. The short survey contained questions about students' attitudes toward parking, meal service, the administration, and the SGA.

"We thought the poll would be a good way to determine what issues the SGA should be working on," said one SGA member. "And the results speak for themselves."

According to poll results, 78% of the student body believes that the SGA's main goal for next year should be to pave the nature trail.

66% of students believed that the college should use some of its hefty endowment to construct South Carolina's largest inverted rollercoaster on the West Plaza.

The poll also contained several questions to test students' general knowledge about campus affairs. 60% were able to correctly identify Bryan Madden as the director of Springs Campus Center. 89% identified Belle Griffith as the GDH nutritionist.

The issue of campus visitation also evoked passionate responses from the student body. 93% of students agreed that the best possible solution for the visitation problem would be for every student to date someone who lives at the townhouses.

"The students have spoken," said junior class president Jon Baggett. "It's my job, and the job of every SGA member to work hard to see that these problems are solved. Or, if not every SGA member wants to work that hard, I can call some pledges and they can do it for us."

90% of students agreed that parking has become a problem on campus. Several respondents attributed this to the volume of students who commute to class from the townhouses and from College Park.

Baggett said the problem was probably caused by "pledges."

Equestrian team sticking to top spots like glue

by Dan Ackerman
Sports Enthusiast

The PC Equestrian team is back home in Clinton this week after a string of several away matches across the southeast. The team left on Thursday, March 12 for the 64th Annual Bluegrass Horse show in Lexington, Ky., beginning a stretch of the horsing season that Head coach Cindy Paul called, "the toughest tracks and meanest horses that we'll probably see all year." Paul said that, looking back, stamina definitely played a huge role. "It was one of those tough decisions that a head coach has to make, and yes, I'll take full responsibility," Paul said in answering questions over whether the call to make the trip to Kentucky on horseback was the best idea.

"Losing Lightning to that freak accident on I-78 up in North Carolina definitely had an effect on the rest of the team," said junior equestrian member Katie Holt. Will Edwards agreed.

"We left Clinton with 6 horses and made it up to Kentucky, 8 days later with only four...I just don't understand how [an eighteen-wheeler full of chickens] could do so much damage to one horse," Edwards said, still visibly shaken.

The 6th horse that Edwards referred to was actually DQ'ed from the event when pedigree records revealed that "Stephen" was in fact two-thirds Donkey, and thereby ineligible for the horse only event.

"I'm not going to say that we were completely on the up-and-up with the Bluegrass officials when registering over the phone," Paul said in reference to Stephen. "I also wouldn't call what we did exactly 'cheating'. Donkeys and donkey hybrids have been used time and time again in these type of shows. I don't see what all the fuss is about."

Down to four horses, the PC Equestrian squad came back for a strong showing in the Raleigh-Rodeo-fest. Jockey Courtney Pershing had the team's first ever top ten finish aboard Petey in the Pony division.

"Pete rode really well up in Raleigh. We were down three lengths coming into turn four and at that instant, Pete turned his head, and looked up into my eyes. Neither of us said anything, but we both knew then that we had to win this one for Lightning," said Pershing.

The team closed out the road trip in Camden at the Carolina Cup. After a brief stop back in Clinton to pick up a few supplies such as a much needed bus, the equestrians were back on the road.

"We were, well...pumped after Raleigh, and I suppose we celebrated just a bit too early," said Paul.

The head coach was responding to the reported allegations of having 2 kegs of oats and 1 keg of German hay in the back of the bus on the way to Camden.

A frustrated Edwards said afterwards, "The horses had no business even getting off the bus in the condition that they were in. They didn't even want to race. It was like all they wanted to do was stand around in the sun and socialize with the phillies from the other schools."

The team hopes to rebound with the conference portion of the schedule coming up next week.

"This is when it all matters," said Coach Paul. "when we get to the mane part of our schedule." She followed that shortly with, "mane...get it? It's a pun." The PC equestrian squad, even through adversity, is still able to maintain their horsey humor, and able to keep making PC proud that we have 4 horses and 1 donkey.

Priceless

Gillespie named new VPAA, Dean of Faculty

by Leighton Hart
Editor-in-Chief

As students concluded their Easter break and packed to come back to PC, the telephone rang in the office of interim vice president for academic affairs Dr. David Gillespie. The caller was president Dr. John Griffith, calling to let Gillespie know that the search to fill the dean's position had come to a close. After deliberating over the Easter weekend, Griffith decided that Gillespie was the man for the job.

Gillespie

On Monday, April 13, Gillespie accepted Griffith's offer to serve the college as vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty. The offer and acceptance finalized a search process that had been underway since September 1997.

"I'm very happy about [the appointment]," said Gillespie. "The other two competitors were both very strong candidates, and I'm very pleased with the way things have turned out."

For Gillespie, the new job combines a love and an aspiration that previously were at odds with each other.

"Even though I was not a student here, this really is my alma mater far more than any other liberal arts institution that I attended," said Gillespie. "I am so much a part of this culture and is so much a part of my history as a professional. I love this place very much."

Despite his years of faithful service to the school, Gillespie had aspirations to leave full-time teaching an assume a deanship at another school. But when he assumed the interim deanship at PC, he let it be known that he was not going to actively seek that position.

"I was not to be a candidate. This was to be a one year position. It was President Griffith's decision to ask me to offer my candidacy," said Gillespie. "I had let it be known that I was interested in becoming a dean, and I had actually been offered a position at a school in Kentucky, and was a finalist for a deanship in Tennessee, so it was not that I was clearly indicating no interest in becoming a dean."

Being able to stay at his beloved surrogate alma mater and guide that institution as an administrator created harmony between the two previously conflicting emotions.

Griffith's selection concluded the work of a search committee chaired by associate professor of business administration Dr. Suzanne Smith.

According to Smith, there was substantial interest in the position. After receiving 111 applications, the search committee selected fifteen applications on which they would perform reference checks. From those fifteen, eight candidates were granted interviews.

"Some [of the eight selected] were sitting deans, some had some administrative experience as department chairs, but we brought, from those eight, the three we thought were best for PC," said Smith. "From the campus opinion, we felt like David Gillespie was the best thing for PC."

"I'm just very pleased with the selection, and we clearly have the best dean possible," she said.

An important element of the candidate selection process was student input, and students were represented on the search committee by sophomore Dan Hart and senior Laura Jacobs. Jacobs said that serving on the committee was a valuable experience.

"I have to say that it was one of the times at PC where I have felt like I was treated as an equal," said Jacobs.

Griffith indicated that his decision was based on his judgements about the candidates' abilities to lead the campus currently and into the future.

"What went into my decision-making process was which of the three I felt would most meet the needs, currently and as we go through strategic planning, and as we begin to chart a course for the college for the next ten years. And it seems to me that Dr. Gillespie fulfills all of the expectations that I had," said Griffith. "He's a superb teacher, someone who has a clear understanding of the liberal arts, someone who is energetic, willing to seek new ideas, but also someone who would not throw the baby out with the bath water."

"I felt, after reflection, that Dr. Gillespie was the man for the job. I was delighted when he accepted," he said.

Coker named outstanding professor

by Dan Hart
Managing Editor

It is often said that the appearance of an office tells a lot about the person who works in that office. Displaying, among other items, a basketball autographed by a student and numerous books ranging in topic from the literature of twentieth-century Britain to the religious practices of cannibalistic tribes, Dr. Charles Coker's office on the first floor of Neville Hall indicates the value that Coker places on relationships with students and on lifelong learning.

Famous for his beige vests, dry wit, and entertaining anecdotes from history, Dr. Charles Coker, Brown Professor of History, was named the 1998 Outstanding Professor of the Year. Last week, Coker was honored at the academic honors convocation for his reputation as a teacher; during the convocation Presbyterian College President John V. Griffith presented Coker with a plaque.

Coker's award comes as no surprise to students who have taken his classes. Students who have experienced Coker's lectures can often be heard discussing the humorous or bizarre anecdotes that bring flavor to Coker's recounting of historical events.

"He knows everything about history!" said Will Edwards, a sophomore history and French double-major. "His dry humor and his rapier wit make him a fun and interesting lecturer."

According to Matt Miller, a senior history, English, and political science triple-major, describing Coker's distinctive lecture style to someone who has never taken a class with Coker can be difficult.

Lengthy search reveals strength of homeboy

Last week the campus was notified that Dr. David Gillespie had been offered and accepted the position of Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the Faculty. The staff of the Blue Stocking couldn't be more pleased.

Dr. Gillespie has served this college since 1979 as a professor of political science. In that time, he has distinguished himself as a true scholar in his field. Dr. Gillespie is the type of professor that is commonplace on the campuses of this nation's finest universities. He serves as a role model for his peers.

During his 19 years here, he has found time to teach classes, write a book, make appearances on television, in newspapers, and on the radio, chair a local political party, and travel abroad on a Fulbright award. And on top of all of that, he still finds time to walk Chelsea.

David Gillespie is the right person for this job. The valuable mix of intellect, charisma, leadership, and humility that he brings to this position will be a splendid addition to the administration of this college. With David Gillespie in charge, our academic

My Turn:
Leighton Hart

I've been in this newspaper business for four years now. This issue of the Blue Stocking is the last to be published under my direction. During those four years, I have invested a great deal of time in the Blue Stocking, starting as a staff writer with no experience and advancing through the ranks. Each new job presented a new set of challenges, and I was eager to accept each. Not bad for someone who had never written a newspaper article before setting foot on this campus, eh? Well, that's probably more a testament to what this school can draw out of a person than a testament to what I'm capable of achieving. PC presented me with the tools to learn this trade. I merely furnished the desire.

As I put the finishing touches on my editorship, I am also watching four incredible years of life and study come to a close. I am grateful for my time at PC, and I know that my parents' money was wisely invested.

I have previously abstained from filling this particular space in the newspaper with my own opinion largely because the "Point" column on this page is traditionally composed by the Editor. Yet, since I'm graduating and since this is my last paper, and since I'll be lucky if anyone opens this paper anyway, I'm going to fill this space.

As I think about leaving this campus, I am reminded of all of the wonderful experiences I have had during my stay. I am reminded of all of the changes that have been made to this campus since August 1994, including the completion of H-P, Yonce, the Templeton addition, and our beloved townhouses. I am also reminded of the somewhat less tangible changes that have been made since August 1994. In that time, the canteen has expanded its operations, several varsity sports have been added, administrators have come and gone, and somewhere in the shuffle it was determined that students weren't physically or mentally capable of swiping their own cards in GDH.

Despite the many advances this institution has made in the four years that my class has been here, so many more changes need to be made to perpetuate the cycle of excellence here. First, an Honor Code Committee was formed two years ago to examine and revise the college's Honor Code, Code of Conduct, and judicial system. That committee worked long and hard to examine and reflect upon the nature of those codes, as well as to iron out some of the wrinkles in the present system. The committee's work is done, and the proposals are waiting to be presented to the campus community. The proposed changes to the judicial system have been carefully crafted by a group of student judicial leaders, faculty members, and administrators. The proposed changes will dramatically improve the way that the judicial system is administered, and every effort should be made to implement the proposals as soon as possible. Dr. Griffith, please take note that you will see this proposal someday, and remember the hours of labor and reflection that went into the revisions.

The second thing that needs to take place in the coming months is a broad dialogue among all campus constituencies about what Presbyterian College will be in ten years. Dr. Griffith has identified strategic planning as one of his most pressing objectives, and he has set that process in motion. It's my hope that students will take the planning process seriously and won't be afraid to be vocal about their beliefs. The students of this college have nothing to lose by speaking out. And students, think about the implications — positive and negative — that major changes can have. Adding a communications major to the school's curriculum would dramatically improve the quality and frequency of student publications by providing those publications with committed and qualified staff members.

It has been a pleasure to serve as the Editor-in-Chief of your college newspaper this year. I'd like to extend a sincere thank you to the people who have contributed to the success of this volume in one way or another.

CHAMPS program holds follow-up activities during semester

by Ben Acton
Staff Writer

How would you like to dissect the eyeball of a sheep? The students of CHAMPS, the collaborative program between PC and the Laurens/Clinton communities and schools designed to inspire promising young students, have done that and more as a part of follow-up programs for CHAMPS.

Since its inception in 1995, CHAMPS major event has been the two weeks in the summer that the program's students spend at PC interacting with each other, mentors, and teachers. But according to the program's director, Dr. Jermaine Disasa, the follow-up programs, which take place 6 to 8 times a year, are of great importance as well.

"[The follow-ups] are essential to CHAMPS, because they allow the students to reconnect with each other and their mentors from the summer — and they also get the parents involved," he said.

Cathy Clasen, CHAMPS intern, put the activity of the parents as the most important facet of the follow-up. "It gives parents an opportunity to work actively in the CHAMPS program, and to be role models for their kids as well as the kids be models of behavior for their parents," she said.

One such opportunity was the chance to dissect a sheep's eye, during a science follow-up last year. According to Clasen, it was an event where some of the students were leaders for their parents.

"We were learning about eyes and the parents were asked to help their kids figure out what a sheep's eye was. Some parents dove right in. But some of the others didn't. But all the kids were in there, and they were helping their parents. They thought it was cool. They showed their parents they were excited about learning," she continued.

Although nothing dealing with sheep has occurred so far this year, CHAMPS has had two other follow-up events in the last two months, each designed to give a right.

The first, which took place in February, was an art workshop where CHAMPS students and parents got a chance to work together to create pieces of art. The workshop was taught by Mrs. Barbara Benson, an art teacher at Laurens District SS High School and a CHAMPS teacher. During the workshop, the students and parents were given a chance to create a piece of art.

Benson saw the program as a way to give the students a chance to work together. They all share a common purpose, and they are all working together to create a piece of art.

The fact that we're going together is a good thing, and it's a good thing that we're all working together to create a piece of art. Each person here is a wonderful fragment that can fit into a puzzle of art," she continued.

And the most important fragments were the CHAMPS students who participated. "It's really great to see the kids express their selves in such a creative way," said CHAMPS intern Jennifer Skelton.

Clasen agreed, adding, "There is a certain magic in doing a project such as this, because you might reach some of the kids and not others. I was really excited to see all the kids and parents get involved and express themselves."

The expression was nothing new to CHAMPS. In fact, the program's students and parents can attest to that. CHAMPS has taught us how to interact with each other, adults and students. This project has also helped us learn that two people working together can make a difference. Thanks to Dr. Disasa and the CHAMPS staff.

Added parent Sherry Smiles, "The kids help me stay motivated. Before the weekend, many of them didn't realize they had this talent in them, that they could be an artist."

Many students and parents also spoke of the advantages and impact that the CHAMPS program has had on their lives.

"I think these kids are blessed to have an opportunity to be this expressive," said parent Alan Rickard.

"We make leaders out of each other, working together," added Roscoe Watson, a student.

"CHAMPS is a very good program academically, physically, and mentally. It gives us a chance to meet new people and learn new things and bond with our mentors, teachers and family," said student Ashley Sanders, reiterating Dr. Disasa's idea of re-linking student and adult.

"This project has been very pleasing because it has given the children and their parents a chance to work together," Disasa said, continuing, "Hopefully this will be translated into the home as parent and child become more creative, helping each other to solve their problems together."

"The art project is great in and of itself, but it is also a great building block for the future," agreed Clasen.

Part of that future occurred on March 28, as CHAMPS journeyed to Horseshoe Falls Park and Musgrove Mill (only 11 miles from PC), to participate in a service project and put the creative skills they learned into practical use. The students helped clean up the park area as well as participate in landscaping, which involved the planting of grass for the park's new canoe trails. The trails are to be used for the park's new canoe program and were of special importance, because they were started as a collaborative effort between CHAMPS, local politician Danny Wilder, and the State and County Departments of Parks, Recreation, and Tourism.

Besides service activities, the trip also provided education for CHAMPS students in such diverse subjects as surveying, topography, history, and biology. The latter was provided in part by the student's bus driver, PC biology professor Dr. Bob Hudson. Dean of Students Joe Nixon was also present for the day, helping with the service projects. All of this was extremely pleasing for Disasa.

"[The weekend] went beyond my expectations. The weather was perfect, and all of the kids and parents got involved," he said, adding that the students not only had fun, but learned a lot as well, summing up the main purpose of the follow-up programs as being dedicated not only to academic, but also to non-academic and service goals.

The follow-ups have given the CHAMPS students the opportunity to see Disasa's vision, create, explore, see, and work together. And let's not forget dissecting.

PC IN BRIEF

SGA releases results of recent survey

Approximately 30% of freshmen, sophomores and juniors filled out the SGA Student Survey. The results are currently being reviewed by SGA and Dr. Griffith. SGA will use the survey as a guideline for setting goals for the 1998-99 academic year. The administration will look at the results as a gauge of student opinion concerning specific issues.

John Kimball, senior, was in charge of the survey. He attempted to ask questions about issues that have been brought to the attention of SGA in the past. Questions related to food service received the most response, with 95% of students who answered the survey dissatisfied with the current service. Other problems that were thought to be priorities, such as parking on campus and students leaving on weekends, were not indicated as major current concerns. Kimball attempted to get a well-rounded perspective by asking questions that would relate to the most students.

"The main thing is to be objective about it," Kimball said. "Some questions might be biased or misleading. We don't want Dr. Griffith to look at it and see everyone mad about food service or any one thing. It is mainly a way to get things going for next year."

Griffith is developing a Strategic Planning Committee for the college, and Kimball hopes that the survey results will be considered by the committee. Previous attempts by SGA to involve the students body, such as open forums, have not been successful in attracting student participation. The survey is a way to gather information and get a general idea of the student body standing on particular issues.

"This is a great voice for the students," Kimball said. "When one or two of us [SGA members] goes in to talk to the administration, they get tired of listening to just us. It is good for us to show numbers that tell the way it is with all students."

SGA is not sure of the magnitude of the survey. They hope to use it effectively to achieve students' needs.

"We [SGA] hope we do well so we can do it again next year," Kimball said. "We have been impressed with Dr. Griffith's concern about students and hope he will consider the survey results."

SVS continues quality service, plans new programs

by Beth Blackburn
Staff Writer

Uniting together to make a difference in the area communities, students are taking hold of the vision of Student Volunteer Services. As they grasp what it means to give something of themselves, to be an active part of the world around them, students are learning a valuable lesson. Service is one of the pillars of the PC educational experience. It is a goal of this college to instill in students a commitment of service to others. Through SVS and the leadership of individuals like Shelia Hill, SVS Director, this program is working to make it happen.

With all of the changes involving in SVS, Hill sees great things in store for the coming 1998-1999 year. First of all, new interns Beth Johnson and Sarah Brailsford will take on the challenge of leadership and will be working closely with Hill to develop new programs and keep traditional programs rolling smoothly. Both Johnson and Brailsford went through an intensive application process.

"They were required to do a two-step interview, one with myself and one with the Religious Activities Committee," Hill said.

Along with the new energy these interns bring, there is also a need for student leaders.

"Beth and Sarah have been working very hard with the interview process for selecting the SVS Coordinating Corps,"

Hill said. "It's a tough process to select fifty student coordinators that fill the need of the program with the desire to make that program work."

Brailsford also sees improvement in the 1998-99 SVS and has hope in the new coordinators.

"I am very excited about SVS next year. We have a wonderful corps of coordinators, and I am excited about working with Shelia and Beth," said Brailsford. "Hopefully next year, we will be able to recruit more volunteers. I also hope we can keep up the spirit of the volunteers and the coordinators."

Hill is also enthusiastic about new volunteers.

"I anticipate another banner year for student involvement. We want to promote SealPC [Service Experience at PC], a play-off of Dive Into SVS, and our vision, 'While we live, we serve,'" Hill said. "This is with the expectation that students will get involved in service their first fall semester on campus. We are going full-steam ahead with the idea of making SVS participation grow."

In addition, Hill is hoping to see three programs put into action that are now on the drawing board.

"We are starting a program with Langstone Home, an assisted living retirement community. Also, we want to work with the South Carolina School of the Deaf and Blind. I am very excited because this is the first time we have had a program of this nature," said Hill. "More importantly, it is in line with SVS efforts to reach out to special education individuals."

Brooke Blankinship is heading up a third program. In response to phone calls she received from guidance counselors, she decided to put her Spanish major training to work by tutoring Hispanic students.

"I found that, surprisingly, there is a need for people who speak Spanish to tutor children in area schools. I got the job of going over there to work with a little girl who could not speak a word of English. I had a feeling that it was helping, so I got the word out for other Spanish majors and Spanish-speaking students to help. Other schools were looking for the same thing, and I could not do it on my own," said Blankinship.

Also in planning is a program to work with the Dutchmen Correctional Center, a correctional facility in Cross Anchor. The Chaplain's office is considering a request to pursue the program's development.

Other ideas are yet on the horizon.

"SVS is pursuing new initiatives with Residence Life in terms of getting residence hall participation in community activities. We also want local organizations to work with SVS and adopt an SVS program like Frampton Hall or one of the cottages at Thornwell," said Hill.

New programs, new faces, and new ideas promise a successful year ahead for SVS.

SVS, now in its 31st year of existence, continues to positively impact the local community. In this photo, Shanna McAlister and Mary Craig Mooneyhan paint the face of a program participant.

stories and has a very distinctive sense of humor. The first time you hear a joke in his class you don't know whether you should laugh or not because he doesn't even crack a smile. After about a week, though, people start to realize that it's okay to laugh. His stories make his classes the most interesting classes I have taken at PC."

Now in his thirtieth year of teaching at PC, Coker has seen numerous changes in the institution since he has been here. Coker noted that student activities have greatly changed since he came to PC in 1968, only a few years after women were admitted to PC as full-time, residential students.

"Student life has been liberalized over the years—especially for female students," Coker noted. "They couldn't come with bare feet into the lobby of dormitories. Male students at that time didn't want to date girls on campus; it was the tradition for carloads of students to drive to Lander, Limestone, Converse, and Columbia College. That's changed dramatically."

Despite the changes that Coker has witnessed during his career at PC, Coker stated that PC has always had good students. Nevertheless, Coker regretted that students today do not read as much before coming to college as they used to read. For that reason, Coker said that he seeks to instill in his students an appreciation for reading.

"The best way of getting students to see that books have great things in them is by making students do research papers," said Coker. They come across things that interest them—things that are not only humorous, but that are also very interesting...if they could just read more!"

To Coker one of the most rewarding aspects of teaching at PC is the opportunity that teaching gives him to see students learn how to learn. While Coker said that he is always pleased to read an excellent paper from a bright student, he especially enjoys seeing the steady improvement in thinking and writing skills that many students show through out their college career.

"Students work through a class, and, without realizing it, they have learned to learn," said Coker. "While certain subjects that students have been exposed to may or may not abide with them through life, they will know where to go to learn."

Coker particularly emphasizes the lifelong nature of learning.

"If people stop learning, they may as well hang it up," said Coker. "One reason that people get old is that they don't want to learn anymore. A lot of people have problems with retirement because they don't know what to do with themselves. I don't think any teacher should have teaching as the sole thing in his life; there have to be other things. For life to be only one path would lead to a kind of self destruction."

Recognizing the necessity of leisure activities, Coker said that he enjoys, among other things, gardening, landscaping, and music. ("Classical music, that is," Coker clarified with a grin. "Real stuff.") Coker also said that he enjoys watching student athletic events at PC.

"Watching students compete in sports is a part of the family atmosphere here," said Coker.

In fact, Coker said that he was drawn to PC in part by the college's small town atmosphere. Because classes and departments are small, Coker noted it is possible at PC for faculty members to get to know faculty members in other departments and to know students well enough to have fun with them.

"You get the feeling here that you know everybody on campus—students, faculty, and administration," said Coker.

Coker added that he particularly enjoys talking informally with students.

"A lot of times my students come to speak with me about a term paper topic and they just get to talking," said Coker. "I enjoy seeing them get excited about something wonderful that they discovered for themselves."

S.E.E. Bulletin Board

Yesterday the campus celebrated Earth Day by cleaning up the grounds and enjoying music and a campout at the Intramural Fields. Today Students for Environmental Education (S.E.E.) and the American Institute of Biological Sciences (A.I.B.S.) would like to invite all students to continue this observance by cleaning up Hwy. 76 near the Laurens Co. Hospital. Anyone interested in participating should meet in the Richardson Library parking lot at 2:00.

S.E.E. is trying to reduce the amount of waste and increase recycling at PC, and in the city as a whole. According to Rich Lanier, outgoing President of S.E.E., the officers of the college advise forming a group of motivated faculty members and local citizens. This coalition would lobby at a government level to make recycling a reality in Clinton. Lanier also said that the Dean of Students' Office has volunteered to invite interested faculty members to join this group at an upcoming faculty meeting.

Senior Spotlight: Kimball finds outlet for leadership, service at PC

By Robbie Bryan
Sports Editor

PC has benefited from the determination of John Kimball and his efforts to keep the Safe Ride Shuttle functioning on campus. Kimball, a native of Duluth, GA, is a Business major who is very humble about his achievements. He prefers giving credit to others.

"I am amazed how involved the students on this campus are. A lot of those who are involved don't get the recognition they deserve. Laura Jacobs, for instance, sacrificed her Spring Break because of her position on the Search Committee. I think that it is incredible that the student's voice is heard through her. Also, Mitchell Moore is the epitome of service at PC, yet he never gets recognized for the commitment he has to Young Life at Clinton High School," said Kimball.

Although Kimball prefers talking about others, he is the reason that the Safe Ride Shuttle is still making its rounds on the weekends. The shuttle used to be run by one person. Kimball has organized a committee that has gotten people excited to drive the shuttle on weekends.

"At first I think that people were hesitant to give students the responsibility to drive the safe Ride Shuttle. Students have really stepped up though, and every student that has driven has been responsible. With the help of SGA, it has been easier to get people to drive as the year goes on. We are now sponsored by Hickory Hills, so not only do you get a free T-shirt for driving, you now get a pork plate from Hickory Hills," said Kimball.

"When John Kimball attempts to do something, he follows through. He took on the responsibility to make sure that the Safe Ride Shuttle is a part of PC weekends. In his dedication, John has gone beyond the requirements for SGA," said Laura Nisbet, a fellow SGA representative.

Kimball

Not only does Kimball participate on SGA, he is also a Handball teammate, the President of Inter-Fraternity Council, and Vice-President of Kappa Alpha Order.

Kimball's work with the Safe Ride Shuttle has been beneficial with position on IFC. He does not have to go between a middle-man to talk with Chief Mason and Public Safety.

"There hasn't been any problems between the fraternities this year; each has contributed to that fact," said Kimball about his involvement with IFC.

Kimball's participation with PC's Team Handball has been a fun experience for him this year. Handball is a new sport, and most of the players enjoyed the experience of learning the game together.

"It was fun learning the game, and I got closer to some guys because of playing the sport. I enjoyed being on the first team ever," said Kimball.

The Handball athletes were trained by an Olympic Star, and they ended ninth in the nation.

When asked what he has learned during his four years at PC, Kimball said, "No matter how much you get caught up in tests, you're going to make the grade, and it's the relationships that you've developed that count and last."

"The strongest characteristic about John Kimball is that he is a man of his word. When he tells you that he will do something, he will do it," said fellow teammate Mitchell Moore.

Adam Carter, one of Kimball's fraternity brothers, summed up the character of Kimball by saying, "John Kimball has displayed leadership qualities in all aspects of college life. Whether in the classroom, on the intramural field, in his fraternity, or in a meeting room, he actively seeks a position of authority. Kimball keeps the interests of others first in mind at all times, and makes decisions based not on his personal desires, but on the victory."

He has excelled in college and will continue to excel in the business world due to his exceptional work ethic, ability to identify with others, and desire to work for a greater good.

On Campus: Writing Center offers assistance, advice to students in all departments

This fall Presbyterian College opened the doors to its first Writing Center. The Writing Center was designed to help students of all levels improve their writing skills. For the first fall semester, the Writing Center was open only to the students of the English department, so that newly-trained tutors did not become overwhelmed. This past semester, however, the Writing Center was open to students from every department and discipline from the East to the West plazas.

The Writing Center was staffed with two English professors and eleven students tutors. All student tutors attended a tutor-training workshop during the summer and were recommended to work in the Writing Center by an English professor because of their writing skills. Although most of the student tutors are English majors, several other disciplines, including history, education, religion, philosophy, and psychology, are represented in the Writing Center.

The Writing Center received rave reviews in evaluations written by English 109 students who frequented the Writing center in the Fall.

"[The Writing Center] is very helpful on preparing a paper or revising it before turning it in," wrote one student.

"It has helped me with my writing skills," commented one student, "and I am confident that it could help other people, as well."

"When one gets stuck, the Writing Center is there to help," wrote another student in an evaluation.

One hundred percent of the evaluations reported the tutor's advice as good or excellent.

The Writing Center is located in Neville Hall, room 206. Students made half-hour appointments with the tutor of their choice; drop-ins were also welcomed on a first-come, first-served basis. Hour-long appointments were also available for those students with longer papers.

The Writing Center will be open again next fall; both returning and new tutors will be available to help students with their writing skills. The Writing Center urges any student to bring his or her writing assignment to the Writing Center for help in getting started, revising, or editing.

Softball team caps first season

by Jamie Lightcap
Sports Writer

The PC Lady Blue Hose Softball team ended the season 28-18, finishing the regular season third in the conference. They competed in the SAC tournament April 16-18 where they finished third.

"Our goal was to finish in the top two of the conference and also in the SAC tournament," said coach Debbie Holcombe.

On March 21, PC played a double-header against Wingate, which was at first conference game. The blue hose won the first game 4-0 and the second game 2-1.

We played pretty well defensively and we could play a little better offensively," said coach Holcombe.

On Tuesday, March 24, the team played a doubleheader against I under a rain delay. The blue hose had already played three times during the season and had a record of 1-2 against them.

In the first game PC won a close one 4-3. Nicole Goodwin had the winning hit and Ross Stewart had the winning run in the first game.

PC won the second game 3-1. Stewart had a bit second game going 2-2 at the plate. Jamie Carter provided the winning hit for the team in the second game. Shannon Seigler pitched well in both games for the blue hose.

"That was a big win for us," said coach Holcombe.

On Wednesday, March 25, the Blue Hose played its second conference opponent, Lenoir-Rhyne. PC lost the first game 4-3 but rebounded back with a 5-2 victory. Seigler again pitched both games for the blue hose. Monica Chaplin had a good game going 2-3 at the plate with a RBI.

"Stewart has been hitting well all season," said coach Holcombe.

"Chapling has been the most consistent offensively and defensively for the team," said coach Holcombe.

"I feel very fortunate to be playing with such a great team," said Mackenzie Bertram.

"I am optimistic about the rest of the season," also said Bertram.

"Even though we have a young roster, I think the team has been a surprise to our opponents," said Christi Smith.

Sonya McNeil has been hitting well for PC with a batting average of .513.

At the SAC Championships in Salisbury, NC, the team won its first game against Newberry 1-0 behind the pitching of Shannon Seigler. Seigler broke the SAC all time strike out record with 268 strike outs. The team next crushed Wingate in a mouth watering 10-0 victory.

In the Championship game PC lost 1-4 against Carson-Newman. The Blue Hose next played Lenoir-Rhyne and lost to them in the ninth inning 4-3.

The Blue Hose were given many individual awards. Freshmen second baseman Monica Chaplin and freshmen shortstop Jamie Carter both made second team all conference. Sonya McNeil and Shannon Seigler both made first team all conference.

Baseball team roars to conference title

—from staff reports

With an overall record of 38-14 the PC baseball team is currently ranked 7th in national polls. They were awarded regular season SAC champions over very tough competition. The team is under the leadership of Coach Doug Kowalski.

April 16th-18th, the team participated in the conference tournament. Because of rain, the team was forced to accept being co-champions with Wingate.

When asked if the team would have been allowed to play Wingate Freshmen Dale Krykka responded, "Oh yeah. They had to beat us twice and we only tied by less than one. In the first game they played them, we faced their number one pitcher. It looked like we were trying to get to him. We got three runs off him in the bottom of the fifth and they would have probably put in a weaker pitcher, but the game was rained out in the bottom of the sixth."

Men's tennis performing well

by Derrick Rapley
Sports Writer

Currently ranked number two in their region, the men's tennis team is anxious to enter end of the season with an undefeated conference record of 7-0. The team clinched the top seed for the SAC tournament.

Coached by Bobby McKee, the team is currently ranked 21st in the latest NCAA Division II polls.

As the Blue Hose face the end of the season, they remain focused on their goals. They have completed the goals of finishing undefeated in conference play and winning the SAC Championship. The men's team had easy victories as they rolled over their competition at the SAC Spring Sports Festival and were awarded conference champions.

The team would also like to remain undefeated in NCAA Division II play and keep their east region ranking of number 2. An east region ranking of number two at the end of the season will give the blue hose and automatic bid to the National tournament.

Men's tennis faces some disadvantages entering the end of the season. The main disadvantage for the tennis team is the inconsistency of the weather. Due to the rained out matches, the team is not in the best "match shape." The only way for the team to remain in match shape is to play other teams. Another minor setback for the team is the injury of the number 2 doubles player Chuck Webb. Even though the team does face a couple of obstacles, they have some great strengths facing the rest of the season. The overall depth and good doubles and singles matches seem to be the key strengths of the team this year. Good preparation for matches and commitment to goals also prove to be important strengths to the team also.

Preston Menning, and Will Stewart, seem to be key players at this point in the season. Preston's contribution so far is playing very well at number 2 singles. While progressively picking up his game, Will Stewart seems to be a plus for the team because of his great performance at playing number two doubles.

After making two trips within the past two years to the east region tournament, Coach McKee feels, "The Region is more competitive since Elon has stepped up to NCAA Division I. The title is up for grabs and we must remain focused and prepared for the tournament."

Combs was the last to play with the score tied at four all.

"It was the most exciting game I have ever watched," said Allison Merritt, who plays doubles for the team.

"The match would probably not have been as close if we could have used all the courts. Because of rain, we were forced to share the courts with the guys," added coach Arnold after her sports weekly information wrap-up given after she teaches her tennis class.

The team will find out Monday weather or not they will get an automatic bid to the nation championship. The team is currently ranked number one in the region, and if they remain the top dog, they will be playing in Springfield, Missouri on May 1st.

THE LAST WORD: Writers challenge "Leave on a high note" adage by Tommy "Slash" Reiser and Leighton "China Eight" Hart

It's been four years now since we were so mercifully upgraded from the wait list and granted what Admissions affectionately called a "conditional acceptance" into the hallowed halls of Presbyterian College.

Tommy was at work when he got the word. As his father relayed the message into his headset, he tossed his paper hat out the drive-thru window and told the manager he'd see him in hell.

Leighton, with G.E.D. still hot in his pocket, he was on his way to Western St. Petersburg Tractor College, when Eddie called up with the much-anticipated words, "Uh...we're short about eighteen grand in the budget this year...you want in or what?"

And so the two young lads were thrown in with the big fish here in the sea of Clinton.

"Put 'em together," Williamson could be heard telling Residence Life. "At least that way we'll have an open room by second semester."

But we proved her wrong. We made it. And there may have been some tough times, but after four years, few others can say that they have had a tag-team wrestling match with Vernon on a bed of lettuce and cold cuts, or that they've been able to successfully write 800 words of sheer crap every week on the back of the PC "student newspaper."

Now don't get us wrong. Nobody said anything about us graduating. All we're saying is that the officials are suspending our NCAA crap-writing eligibility after this issue. Leighton almost took the medical redshirt in 1996, but now he's glad he didn't. "The year of the burning and swelling" proved what he was capable of overcoming.

But what our articles have lacked over the past years, among many, many other things (notably journalism, style, content, humor, etc...) has been the names of many of this college's most notable individuals. Now we may drop the occasional administrator's title, but rarely have we gotten personal. And since we've got nothing to lose now with this our final issue, coming out on the last day of classes, we've decided to gamble a bit. A "crapshoot" if you will, to hand out some PC Superlatives of our own. Or, as we might call it, Burning Bridges 1998. Here it comes.

As a quick note, this is an interactive lesson, and it might be helpful to have your new PacSac on hand. That is, if you've been able to figure out the hours that the PacSac office is open.

Class of 2002 gets taste of PC life

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Over 270 freshmen and transfer students arrived on the PC campus on Friday, August 28 and participated in a four-day orientation led by the Student Government Association (SGA) and the Freshmen Orientation Board (FOB).

Upon checking into their dormitories on Friday, freshmen were greeted by blue-shirted FOB leaders eager to help them move into their rooms.

The theme of the 1998 freshman orientation, "Into the Great Wide Open," was taken from a song by the popular rock musician Tom Petty. In keeping with the orientation program's theme, freshmen, FOB leaders and SGA leaders donned their favorite bell bottoms or denim jackets at a time warp dance party featuring music from the 60's, 70's, and 80's.

According to SGA members, most freshmen participated in the dance and other entertainment activities during orientation.

"This is the best FOB year in the history of PC," said senior class representative Dan Brown. "The turnout at the dance was the biggest turnout at the FOB entertainment in recent years."

Darden to speak during Russell Program

The annual Russell Program, part of PC's Cultural Enrichment Program, will focus on Justice and the Media during lecture events throughout the 1998-99 academic year. The thematic question and unifying theme of the speakers will be the growing number of glamorized criminal cases, the result of media coverage on trials and whether rules have changed accordingly.

The first speaker will be prosecuting attorney Christopher Darden. Darden claimed fame as the deputy prosecutor in the O.J. Simpson trial. He has tried 20 murder cases while working for the Los Angeles County District Attorney's office. Previously, Darden worked as Assistant Head Deputy in the Special Investigations Division, where he investigated corrupt public officials, election law violations, excessive force allegations and police officer-involved shootings. His experience is extensive in both felony trials and prosecution.

The orientation program included much more than games and entertainment, however. On Sunday morning students participated in a worship service in Edmunds Hall following a program by the Student Volunteer Services (SVS).

Freshmen pose outside Clinton Dorm Sunday after being bombarded with shaving cream by FOB leaders and SGA officers. The shaving cream fight is an FOB annual tradition.

After a buffet dinner held in Greenville Dining Hall, freshmen met with members of the Presbyterian College Judicial Council to discuss the obligations and responsibilities inherent in the college judicial system and took their place with past generations of PC students in the signing of the Honor Code.

According to Judicial Council chairman Jon Baggett, members of the judicial council first begin the practice of discussing the Honor Code with freshmen at last year's orientation. Consequently, the Judicial Council last year tried fewer cases involving freshmen than they had in previous years.

"The Honor Code orientation meetings went very well," said Baggett. "I believe allowing the freshmen to ask questions helps them to understand and appreciate the Honor Code."

The Class of 2002 comes to PC from 15 states, including Texas, Massachusetts and Michigan. The class includes 118 males and 151 females.

Darden is a graduate of California State University at San Jose where he majored in criminal justice administration with concentration in corrections and minored in sociology. He earned his law degree from University of California, Hastings College of the Law in San Francisco.

Darden now works as an Adjunct Professor of Law at Southwestern University School of Law in Los Angeles and as an Associate Professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at California State University in Los Angeles. The Russell Program will host Darden Tuesday, September 15 at 11am in Belk Auditorium.

Other highlighted speakers for the Justice and the Media series will be Sen. Paul Simon and Harvard law professor Arthur Miller, both in February.

POINT

Two thumbs up for changes to dining hall

Food service has long been a major concern to students at PC. While the Blue Stocking has, in recent years, often taken a negative position toward the campus food service, we believe that one should give credit where credit is due.

Recent changes to Greenville Dining Hall indicate that the food service administration is willing to listen to student concerns and that it desires to improve its service. Students have asked for a better selection of foods at GDH, and dining hall officials have responded by providing pizza and stir-fry options for both lunch and dinner and by extending the sandwich bar's hours of operation.

Although some kinks in the new food service (e.g. long lines) have yet to be worked out, we are confident that, through further communication, these problems can be worked out. Such communication—the sort of dialogue between students and administration that prompted improvements to the food service—demonstrates what can happen when all members of the PC community work together to create a better institution.

Two thumbs up to the dining hall administration for its willingness to change for the better.

Blue Stocking faces 1998-99 academic year with new look, new leadership

If you are a regular Blue Stocking reader, you have, no doubt, noticed our new layout design. In order to give the newspaper a more modern appearance, we have altered the masthead and added more photographs to accompany news stories.

While our new layout is, perhaps, the most obvious change to the Blue Stocking, it is certainly not the only one.

The 1998-99 editorial board of the Blue Stocking has outlined its agenda for the present academic year. During the next few months, we intend to increase the frequency of publication, to increase student involvement in campus journalism, to provide greater opportunity for students to voice their opinions and to effect greater campus-wide discussion of the issues that face us as a community of faith and learning.

We welcome any feedback our readers may have regarding the 1998-

My Turn:
Ben Acton

Author's Note: Certain names have been changed to preserve the anonymity of those involved.

What happens when the right thing to do is neither completely right nor completely wrong? This question arose for PC this past spring in an incident that was not limited to merely the administration, the faculty, or students, but involved the Clinton/Laurens community as well. On May 2, 1998, a film containing pornographic material was broadcast on Laurens Public Access Channel 10. The channel's signal originates on campus, in the Media Center of James H. Thompson Library. An investigation by officials discovered the culprit, Dr. John Stevens, then a professor at PC. After being arrested on charges of distributing pornography with the intent to sell and spending the night in jail, Dr. Stevens returned to PC and faced the inevitable: his employer, the school administration. Within the next few days, Dr. Stevens was clearing out his desk, having been fired on the grounds of guidelines found in the Faculty Handbook, which state that "dismissal will occur when a faculty member's conduct or performance makes him/her less effective in his/her job than is necessary for the institution to maintain its educational standards to operate efficiently and effectively. Termination will only occur when there is sufficient clear evidence that it is necessary." In light of this, Dr. Stevens' termination was the right thing to do. However, as with most things in life, context and underlying conditions complicate the issue. PC is not just a school; in many regards it is a way of life, a community of love and service shared by faculty, students and the people of Clinton and Laurens. PC is a community that professes the Christian faith and demands the same from its faculty. But where was the Christian faith in this incident?

The decision to fire Dr. Stevens was made not from a Christian standpoint but from a mainly institutional one. The primary function of any institution, even of a Christian one like PC, is to perpetuate itself. The school's survival demanded the end of Dr. Stevens' career here, thus the choice made. This is not to say that the administrators involved did not think greatly about the issues or consult their faith upon making their decision. Their position was as difficult as any involved, and I applaud their willingness and determination to bear the responsibilities, no matter how difficult, of their office. In doing so they fulfilled their obligation to the school, students, parents, and the Clinton/Laurens community. The school was served in its institutional capacity, but what about its Christian one?

PC's motto is "while we live we serve," and through SVS, CHAMPS, SEAPC, and other programs, PC serves a great number of people. But there was one person we missed; where was Dr. Stevens truly served? In the wake of this incident, we the PC community, administration, faculty, and students, need to consider more than the absolute facts of the case; we need to also consider how we as a community might have failed Dr. Stevens in the first place; how we did not recognize one of our own as lonely and in need; how we might have been too quick to judge and too slow to understand; how we might have confused excusing inappropriate behavior with forgiveness of it. Although the incident is past and Dr. Stevens is long since gone, all of PC needs to consider these questions. Such consideration could prevent a similar event in the future, and if not, if something like this does happen again, it will give us a better idea of how we might all come together and cope. Because their most simple fault of the case is this: Dr. Stevens, like all of us other sinners, is in need of understanding, forgiveness and love.

I would like to welcome the Class of 2002 to the "PC Family," as well as welcome back all the upperclassmen, as we begin an exciting new year together. The Student Government Association has worked very hard to plan for the 1998-99 academic school year. During SGAs' retreat this past May, we set our goals for this year. Some of our goals include continuing to improve the food satisfaction in GDH and in Springs, improving the conditions of the dorm lobbies and kitchens and enhancing student/faculty interaction outside of class. We also had a retreat with the officers of the college in August which allowed us to share our goals and ideas with them, as well as become acquainted with their expectations and priorities for the year. The retreat ended with a softball game on the intramural field where SGAs and the OI

Griffith as part of our family. I want to thank the Student Government Association, the Freshman Orientation Board leaders and Dean Nixon for helping make the 1998 Orientation such a great success. There was a great deal of hard work that went into the planning and organizing of FOB, and I want to thank you all for doing such a wonderful job. I also appreciate the support that the freshman class provided as we led them through the ropes of "PC Life" in just five days. They are a unique class with a lot of spirit, and I have no doubt that they will be very successful in their four years here as PC students. I encourage each of them to consider picking up an application for SGA elections the week of September 7-11 on the SGA office door. I wish you the best of

Presbyterian to extend campus network to residence halls

Presbyterian College has begun work on extending the campus data network to the residence halls. When complete, the project will provide a jack at each residence hall desk, with access to the library, campus computers, and the Internet.

"This expansion represents the second phase of our network," Morris Galloway, Dean of Administrative Services, who is overseeing the project, said. "Students will have the same level of access in their rooms that they enjoy in the public labs."

The first phase of the network, connecting major academic and administrative buildings via fiber optic cable, was completed in 1993. Galloway pointed out that this project has been on the drawing board for some time.

"PC connected to the Internet back in 1992, before it was a household word. As far back as the 1993 long range plan, the college stated that the residence halls should be tied in to the network. The financial cost of doing so is significant. Now, our goal is in sight."

Fiber optic cable, buried in trenches, will reach all of the residence halls, the townhouses and Templeton Physical Education Center. Most remaining buildings on campus, other than some of the individual houses being used as dorms, will also be wired. The plan calls for commuting students to gain access to the network via a modem connection.

"The fiber should be in place by December," Galloway said. "Interior wiring won't be completed until next summer. We are working with the contractor to see if it might be possible to finish a dorm over the Christmas break. That would give us a good pilot test."

To connect to the network next fall, students should have an "Ethernet ready" computer. A Windows 95 or 98 system or a Macintosh running System 7.5 or higher would be acceptable choices.

"Practically, you are going to want a Pentium-class system or a Power PC Mac with a minimum of 16 megabytes of RAM; 32 megabytes would be better," Galloway said. "Students buying new systems between now and next fall should make sure they come with an Ethernet card installed. That's not normal for home PC's, so you will need to ask for it. A good card should be available now for about $60."

Ethernet cards may be added to existing computers next summer. Students who need assistance in installing the cards should seek help from a computer store or knowledgeable friend.

The college is working on recommended configurations and will be creating a web site to keep the campus community informed about progress on the network.

Based on experiences at other colleges, anywhere from 200 to 500 computers might be connected during the 1999-2000 academic year. Supporting all those people will be a challenge. The college plans to start a new program, Residential Computer Consultants, employing students to support their peers. Details will be worked out this fall. Interested students should contact Galloway in the administration building.

"This kind of real-world experience always looks good on a resume," said Galloway.

Reconstruction of townhouses continues after fire

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Reconstruction of two senior townhouse units and repair of a third began after a July 6 fire and continues into the fall semester.

At approximately 1:58 a.m. on Monday, July 6, the Presbyterian College public safety office reported a fire at the townhouses to the Clinton Fire Department. Firefighters responded promptly to the emergency and controlled the blaze approximately 30 minutes after the fire was reported.

A subsequent investigation by the South Carolina Law Enforcement Division determined that the fire was not caused by an act of arson. Nevertheless, the actual cause of the fire has not been determined. According to Skip Zubrod, vice president for finance, one can only speculate about the cause of the blaze. Nevertheless, Zubrod noted that the fire started on the building's patio, where a carpet and sofa allegedly sat. Zubrod suggested that fireworks set off near the building may have ignited the carpet and sofa on the patio.

The townhouse complex was built last year and includes three buildings housing five units each. The first two units of building B were completely destroyed by the blaze. Since both units were unoccupied for the summer, no students were injured. The third unit suffered smoke damage, and a student occupying the unit was evacuated.

While units 4 and 5 of building B were virtually undamaged and are presently being used to house students, units 1 and 2 are being completely rebuilt and are expected to be completed in November. Unit 3 of the same building is being repaired and is expected to be completed by mid-October. These damaged units will house students during the spring semester. In the meantime, students who elected to room in the damaged townhouses have been given the option of living elsewhere on campus for the fall semester or of finding alternative housing off-campus.

According to Zubrod, damage to the Townhouses B1 and B2 were completely destroyed by the blaze that raged July 6.

units was estimated at $300,000, but the damages have been covered by insurance. Templeton Construction of Laurens, S.C.—the same company that originally built the townhouses—won a competitive bid to rebuild the damaged units.

PC to make changes, add to campus

by Kay Owen
Managing Editor

The 1998-99 academic year will see many changes and additions to PC life, including a new dorm and administrative building, reconstruction of damaged Townhouses, renovations to existing buildings and other changes throughout campus.

The new residence hall will be the Irwin Belk International House between Barron and Grotnes Halls and behind Browns Commons. Its construction is a result of a gift from Irwin Belk. The International House will house approximately 40 students and may be co-ed by floors. It will be theme-orientated around international students on campus, language majors, and students who study abroad, in correlation with the language department. The International House may be affiliated with a faculty member living in Browns Commons who would facilitate the group. The residence is the beginning of a movement to campus-wide themehouses. Construction on the Irwin Belk International House will begin in January or February 1999 and may be completed as early as September 1999.

The Patrick Building will be an additional administrative building and will house the offices of alumni affairs, housing and admissions. It is also the result of a family's financial contribution. Construction is planned for October 1998–July 1999. Its location will be in place of the Beatty and James Houses.

The Townhouses that were destroyed in the July fire are currently under rebuilding. Apartment B3 will be completely restored during the fall. Apartments B1 and B2 will be ready by January 1999.

Renovations are in order for PC's art facilities. Godfrey House is to be renovated and Douglas House is to be better equipped, including new supplies and computerization. The renovations are being funded by parents of an art student.

Some changes will also be in effect for Greenville Dining Hall. The menu will see some revamping, such as the addition of pizza, pasta and Chinese food options. Also, sandwich bar hours will extend past lunch. These changes will be implemented throughout the fall semester.

Finally, a new phone system will be installed by January 1999. If properly done, installation of the new system should not effect students as far as making calls on- or off-campus.

ROTC cadets trained and ready for action this fall

Five seniors, John Harris, Chad Hyder, Ryan Merrick, Greg Moore and Cindi Smith, return to PC as graduates of ROTC Advanced Camp 1998. The camp, held annually at Fort Lewis, Wa., is a 35-day exercise in leadership, physical and mental stamina and tactical situational training. The camp affords cadets the opportunity to "show off" what they have learned on campus in their military science classes.

Nearly 4,000 students from 271 colleges and universities nationwide participate in Advanced Camp each year. Successful completion of Advanced Camp is a requirement for cadets seeking a commission upon graduation as a U.S. Army officer. PC's seniors will "lead the way" this year for the Scottish Highlander Battalion as cadet officers.

Thomas Boland, a PC junior and ROTC cadet, completed the United States Army Basic Airborne Course—more commonly known as Airborne School. The 3-week school is one of the most rigorous in the Army and graduation is a requirement for such elite soldiers as U.S. Army "Green Berets" and Navy SEALs.

Cadets and soldiers attending airborne training learn the proper way to exit an aircraft while in flight. In addition, they perform five jumps during the last days of the school, including a night jump. Boland returns to PC with the privilege of wearing his "wings," indicating his successful completion of Airborne school.

Will Hamilton, a ROTC cadet and junior at PC, was the only cadet from the Carolinas selected to attend specialized training. Cadet Field Training and Mounted Maneuver Training, normally reserved for West Point cadets.

Cadet Field Training (CFT) is an eight-week program of instruction examined by the United States Military Academy to develop the leadership skills of West Point's sophomore cadets and selected ROTC cadets. Seven weeks of CFT is completed at Camp Buckner, N.Y., with one week at Fort Knox, Ky. for Mounted Maneuver Training (MMT). CFT consists of basic skill level training ending with maneuver flight training where the cadets train on how to defend and attack an opposing force.

Three sophomores, Blake McGaha, Matt Mirelitch and Jim Trieschmann, begin their second year at PC with 3-year Army ROTC scholarships that pay for all of their college expenses, including an annual book allowance and a monthly stipend of $150 for each school month. The value of each 3-year scholarship at PC amounts to nearly $60,000.

Two freshmen will begin their PC education with ROTC scholarships. Hugh Coleman from Ladson, S.C. comes to PC on a full 4-year Army ROTC scholarship. Robert Kurtis, a freshman from Mobile, Ala. holds a 3-year scholarship that will take effect the beginning of his sophomore year.

Football team falls in heartbreaker to West Georgia

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

Head Coach Daryl Dickey returns for his second year after a 5-6 overall record and a 3-4 SAC record last year. Coach Dickey returns seven starters on offense and nine starters on defense.

The football team lost a heartbreaker in overtime to West Georgia 24-21 on August 29. PC came out firing on all cylinders and took a quick 21-0 lead in the first quarter, but the Blue Hose could not hold the lead.

Sophomore quarterback Blake Wilkey fired two touchdown passes to senior wide receiver Ben Powers for a 14-0 lead midway through the first quarter. Troy Gamble added PC's last touchdown pass—a one yard plunge over the goal line for a 21-0 lead. West Georgia scored two late touchdowns to tie the game at 21-21.

Heading into overtime, PC got the ball first but missed a 49 yard field goal attempt. West Georgia moved the ball and connected on a 34 yard field goal for a 24-21 victory.

Wilkey finished the day 15 of 34 for 221 yards and two touchdowns passes with no interceptions. Sophomore wide receiver Travis Smith caught eight passes for 92 yards, and Powers caught three passes for 99 yards.

New coach to lead volleyball team

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The women's volleyball team will have a new look from the sideline this season in new head coach Lisa Bugay. She will take over a team that finished 23-13 overall and 11-3 in the SAC. She has five returnees and six newcomers on the team this year.

Bugay is a graduate of the University of Ashland where she earned a bachelor's degree in business and marketing education. She was involved with volleyball, softball and field hockey teams. Bugay has over ten years of coaching experience. She served as an assistant coach and recruiting coordinator for the University of South Carolina and she served as an assistant coach with the volleyball program at the University of Massachusetts. Last year, Bugay was coach at Socastee High School where she earned Coach of the Year in 1996-97.

PC returns outside hitters junior Stephanie Cloud and

On offense, Wilkey returns at quarterback after passing for 1,528 yards and eight touchdowns last year. Wilkey's career day came against Newberry last year when he completed 26 of 53 passes for 287 yards and passed for two touchdowns.

PC returns a solid receiving core that caught 98 passes for 1,507 yards last year. Powers and Smith are the top two returning receivers. Powers caught 38 passes for 581 yards and five touchdowns while Smith caught 30 passes for 478 yards and one touchdown. Sophomore Di Young contributed by catching 22 passes for 323 yards and 1 touchdown.

The Blue Hose's defense is veteran this year. Losing only two starters last year, the defense will be anchored by several Pre-Season All-SAC Players.

On the defensive line, the Blue Hose return all four starters. Senior Tony Davis is selected as All-Region. He led PC with 104 total tackles and 19 tackles for loss last season. Senior Duane Thompson returns as a Pre-Season All-SAC defensive tackle. He posted 55 total tackles and had two sacks last year. Junior Jamie Tyler returns after a only playing in two games last year because of injury. Senior Chad Gleanon returns on the defensive line after posting 69 total tackles and four sacks last year.

The Blue Hose return two linebackers. Junior Brad Harris is pre-season ALL-SAC after posting 89 total stops, 10 tackles for loss and two interceptions. Junior Todd Huffman posted 48 stops last year.

The Blue Hose defensive backfield returns three starters and could be one of the most deepest and experienced positions on this team this year. Strong safety ALL-SAC Troy Gamble led the defensive backfield with 80 total stops and a team-high six interceptions. ALL-SAC Lee Hannah returns after posting 66 tackles and three interceptions. ALL-SAC Mike Scornavacca had 57 tackles and three interceptions as a sophomore last year.

On special teams, ALL-SAC performer and PC junior Jeremy Joyner will punt for the Blue Hose. Last year, he averaged 37.7 yards per punt, which was good for fourth in the SAC last year. Field goal duties and extra points will go to Junior Zac Thiek. He hit on seven-of-11 field goals and 16-of-17 extra points. His longest field goal was a 40 yard attempt last year.

PC will be off this Saturday but will play its first home game of the season against Charleston Southern on September 12. Last year, the Blue Hose defeated Charleston Southern 16-7.

sophomore Rachel Bishop. Last year, Cloud finished with 2.85 digs per game and Bishop finished with 0.54 blocks per game.

The Blue Hose will look to seniors Jenell Sanders and Lauren Axson for leadership this year. Both are coming off solid junior seasons.

"This year we will look to Axson and Sanders for leadership," said Bugay.

PC will have six incoming freshmen: Rikki Owens, Anna Sill, Leah Easter, Merrill Wood, Kati Scott, and Aisha Walker that will look for playing time this season.

The Blue Hose have scrimmaged Converse and won all five matches including the last game 15-0.

"Right now we have been working individually and on middle defense," said Bugay.

The Blue Hose plays archival Newberry at home on September 8, followed by Francis Marion on the road September 9.

New coach, new season boost cross country teams

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Blue Hose cross country team will be in its third season under new head coach Leigh Irwin. Last year, the girls team finished fourth while the boys team finished eighth.

Irwin will coach the cross country team and will be assistant basketball coach under head coach Beth Couture. Irwin is a 1995 graduate of PC where she starred under Couture as a four-year letterwinner. She was the head basketball coach last year at Greenwood High School and she also coached at Wade Hampton the year before.

The women's team will run a 5K race this year. The girls team consists of Heather Sherer, Jill Webster, Sarah Jones, Amy Kukla, Ashley Nelson, and Kate Reifsnieder.

The men's team will run an 8K this year. The boys team consists of Mark Dinkins, John Moorman, Jay Shippin, Johnathan Todell, Brandon Roshto, Matt Manley, Dan Lancaster, Zach Braden, and Jay Blunt.

The goals for the Blue Hose this year is to finish better in competition and to work harder, according to Irwin.

"The USCS Meet will give me a basis to see what we have and where we are this year," said Irwin.

"We have a lot of seniors and a lot of freshman this year, and the overall talent is better than last year's so, we stand to do better," said manager Matt Braswell.

Men's soccer to face top teams in Nike tournament

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

Coach Ralph Polson returns for his sixteenth season as men's soccer coach. The Blue Hose are coming off a 11-7-1 overall record and a 5-2 conference record last year. Coach Polson wants this team to just have fun this year and enjoy playing soccer.

"Our number one goal this season is to go out and have fun this year and play hard this year," said Polson.

The team returns six starters. Gone are three time All-American goalkeeper Jeremy Ransom and All-SAC teammates Todd Anderson and Bryan Ridgley. PC returns three All-SAC performers in sophomore Jamil Ficklin, junior Ryan Comer, and senior Daniel Hanks. Comer and Hanks are defenders that helped the Blue Hose hold opponents to under two goals per game last season. Ficklin scored seven goals and had one assist last year. He finished third in total points with 15.

Junior Trey Williams will help anchor the front line this year. He scored three goals and had two assists last year.

Injuries have plagued the Blue Hose this preseason. According to Polson one player broke his leg, one dislocated his knee cap and one has a crushed knee cap but could be back soon.

The Blue Hose will be a young team this year. Polson brought in nine freshmen in the off season and they are expected to compete for playing time. The new freshmen are Jeff Hendrix, Jason Prince, Nick Haigler, Michael Napier, Pat Mangan, Kevin Meyer, T.J. McMahan, Davis Jones, and Stephen Replogle.

Polson scheduled hard preseason games to get his players ready for the season. He scheduled preseason games against two of last season's NCAA Tournament teams—Furman and Charleston Southern. PC lost to Furman 6-0 and lost to Charleston Southern 1-0.

The Blue Hose are picked to finish third in the conference behind Wingate and Mars Hill. PC will play in the Nike Kick-Off Classic this weekend. The Hose will play against tenth ranked Tampa University on Saturday and against St. Leo, ranked twenty-first in the nation, on Sunday. This tournament will also feature fifth ranked USC-Spartanburg.

Women's soccer team gears up for regular fall season

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

Coach Brian Purcell returns for his tenth season as head coach of women's soccer. The Blue Hose are coming off a 13-6-1 overall record and a 6-1 conference record along with an NCAA Tournament appearance.

"We are a very similar team as last year because we only lost one senior, Brook Wright, to graduation last year," said Purcell.

The Blue Hose will be led this year by two NSCAA All-Americans, senior midfielder Heather Jones and sophomore midfielder Courtney Swanson. Jones had eight goals and three assists last year to lead the team with 19 total points. Swanson scored one goal that was a game winner. She played most of her time as a defender last year.

In goal this year will be returning All-SAC & All-Region senior Sarah Price. She averaged 0.73 goals against average while having six shutouts last season. Helping her to secure the defense this year will be senior Scarlet Raymond, sophomore Katie Kelly and All-SAC junior Anne-Marie Flaherty.

In the midfield, Rebecca Monroe returns scoring seven goals and two assists last year. She will be joined by juniors Leah Bailey and Michelle Spangler. Sophomore Ashley Davies will also anchor the midfield.

The Blue Hose return senior Diane Hancock up front. She scored seven goals and had two assists for a total of 16 points last year. Her scoring will be needed since PC played in 11 one goal games last year.

"What I am worried about this year is scoring," said Purcell. "We need to score enough goals to be able to win the close games."

The Blue Hose had two scrimmages this preseason. PC scrimmaged an under 19 club team from Atlanta and won 1-0. PC tied College of Charleston 1-1.

PC is ranked nineteenth in the nation and third in the region behind Catawba and Francis Marion. The Blue Hose will play both of these teams at the end of the season.

The Blue Hose will play September 8 at Furman and their first home game will be September 10 against Erskine College.

Trustees approve vision statement for college's strategic planning

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

During its monthly meeting on Tuesday, September 9, the Board of Trustees of Presbyterian College ratified a vision statement for the college, thus ending the first phase of the institution's Strategic Planning process.

"I think of strategic planning as unfolding in three phases," said Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College. "The first phase we have described as charting our direction—building upon the foundation where we are now—and that's completed. That was the vision statement—where we're headed, what we intend to look like in the year 2010. So now we're turning to phase two—really the meat of the strategic plan—where we describe how we're going to get there. If phase one is the direction, phase two is, 'What are the engines that will take us on this journey?'"

The Strategic Planning process began last spring with the formation of the Strategic Planning Task Force, a committee composed of students, faculty, administrators, and trustees. The committee is chaired by Dr. Fred Davison, vice chair of the Board of Trustees, former president of the University of Georgia and current president and CEO of the National Science Foundation.

"What is important is that this involves participants, such as students, faculty, administrators, staff, alumni and board members," said Dr. Booker T. Ingram, Jr., associate professor of political science. "I am very pleased with the process we are taking with this evaluation because it does involve input from all the constituents of this college. It is very important to give everyone a voice."

In addition, the college has hired a private consultant to help facilitate the strategic planning process. Assisting the strategic planning task force is Dr. Barbara Taylor of Academic Search Consultation Service in Washington, D.C.

"Barbara Taylor kept us on task," said junior Riddle, who along with senior Laura Keely, serves as a student member of the committee. "She didn't try to influence us in one direction but was impartial."

The Strategic Planning Task

Force, after reviewing the strengths and weaknesses of the college, concluded that PC must progress in order to continue its mission in the future.

"What we have done is to look at this institution, which has a fine reputation, and we are looking to enhance educational and residential life and learning," said Ingram.

Riddle described the task force's vision for Presbyterian College as "staying true to what the college is built on, but making advances in technology, infrastructure, diversity of students and classes."

"We want to be realistic," said Riddle, "but we don't want to sell the school short. The future could be very bright for this college."

The Task Force released a preliminary draft of the vision statement last May. Work groups composed of students, faculty, and administrators then reviewed and revised the vision statement over the summer. The document was further revised during meetings with the board of trustees and during faculty sessions.

Scottish Presbyterian tradition introduces 1998-99 academic year

Bagpipers march towards Opening Convocation Tuesday, September 8 in Belk Auditorium. They preceded the seniors in the traditional procession to begin the academic year. At the convocation, SGA members, FOB leaders and academic award recipients were recognized for their leadership on campus. In addition, President Griffith spoke in a sermon addressing his goals for Presbyterian College in the century to come.

POINT

College should keep traditions, core values in mind as it develops strategic plan for next decade

This week marks the end of the first phase of Presbyterian College's strategic planning process. We at the Blue Stocking, therefore, thought that it would be appropriate to reflect on where this institution has been and on where it is going.

There is no doubt that PC must progress in order to carry out its mission and meet the needs of society in the Twenty-First Century. New challenges will face our society in the next few decades as our nation's demographics change and as new technologies are developed. In light of these imminent societal changes, we, as a community of faith and learning, must ensure that we can meet the challenges posed by society.

Nevertheless, as Dr. Griffith admonished in his address to the college community last week, we must guard against the temptation to see our relevance to society as our primary mission. To some, the values that define PC may seem hopelessly irrelevant. As a church-related liberal arts institution in an increasingly secular, materialistic and fragmented society, we are, in fact, counter-cultural. While many in our society hold that the pursuit of knowledge is merely a means to an end, we hold that the pursuit of knowledge is its own end. While many in our society hold that a high-paying job after graduation is the ultimate goal of an college student, we hold that a life of service—both now and for the rest of our lives—is our ultimate goal. While many in our society hold that truth is relative and knowledge fragmented, we hold that all knowledge—indeed all of life—is unified under certain transcendent truths.

As we explore ways to improve PC in the next decade, then, we must continually remind ourselves of who we are and of what we believe.

Sidewalk Talk

What improvements would you like to see brought to PC during the next decade?

I would like to see a journalism/communications major brought in. That will help out with the newspaper, radio, etc.

—Robbie Bryan
sophomore
Stone Mountain, Ga.

More diversity on campus...I'd also like to see more elective courses—not just courses that fall within a major. I'd like to see a radio station aired on FM radio so that the community can listen.

—Katy Altizer
junior
Huntington, W.V.

The main thing I'd like to see is improvements in internet linkups in dorms and improvements to male dorms—basically, keeping up with technology, which I think they're doing pretty well so far; also, keeping standards of students high and continuing to hire quality teachers, because I think teachers are more important than researchers.

—Craig Horton
junior
Walhalla, S.C.

PC needs to take a serious look at the messages that may be given off concerning who is and who is not valued. One way to do this may be to look at whose values are at the core and whose are at the periphery. When you see terms like "female writer" and "African-American scientist," it is interesting to think about what messages an institution is sending by the use of prefixes. I feel that there needs to be more of a unified and respected voice among women and minorities on campus.

SVS excited about new academic year, new programs

by Ben Acton
Campus Life Editor

As freshmen might already know, Student Volunteer Services is pumped, jazzed, and excited about the upcoming school year.

The mantra of "I'm pumped, I'm jazzed, I'm so excited about SVS!" was first exclaimed at the annual SVS skit presentation during FOB. According to Ms. Sheila Hill, director of Multicultural Affairs and Volunteer Services, the excitement is catching on.

"I was very pleased with the freshmen reaction [to the skit]," said Hill. "But I was even more pleased that people were still talking about it on Tuesday. That shows that people are really interested about getting involved."

There is no shortage of ways for people to get involved as SVS has added several new programs this year, including outreach programs for Bailey Manor retirement center, Langston Home, the South Carolina School for the Deaf and Blind, and an expansion of the Department of Juvenile Justice to include an outreach towards female offenders.

SVS has also implemented administrative changes in order to increase the effectiveness and student awareness of the various programs involved in SVS.

"Since there are 37 programs, all of which are on-going, it's sometimes hard to focus on the big picture," said Beth Johnson, student intern for SVS. "That's something we need to work on as an organization. We'd like to make both coordinators and volunteers aware that there's more to SVS than just the program they're working on."

Hill agreed, adding, "Some people don't realize all that SVS does, or how many people we reach. And we haven't spent time on reflection of what we do in the first place."

Hill, Johnson, and Sarah Brailsford, the SVS vice-intern, have addressed this issue by establishing the role of head coordinator for each program area, e.g. elderly outreach, child outreach, social services, tutors, Thornwell, etc.

"The head coordinators were elected by the other coordinators in their particular area, and serve as an overseer and go-to person for the coordinators and volunteers of that area," said Brailsford. "The head coordinators will also be responsible for relaying information and providing a communications link between the SVS leadership team and coordinators." But these results are dependent upon the completion of volunteer sign-ups and orientation.

"The next step [after] sign-ups and volunteer meetings, is trying to maintain the excitement about SVS all year long," said Johnson.

Added Brailsford, "I was really excited at the activities fair and seeing so many freshmen sign up to volunteer. A lot of upperclassmen also signed up, which is great, since sometimes their schedules keep them from getting really involved. What we need to do now is get that enthusiasm to last the entire year."

To that end, the SVS leadership is looking into developing a program that would recognize the student volunteers, who are the most active in SVS. Although no plans are definite yet, the three women hope that such a program will encourage others to volunteer.

"Although we had nearly 60% of the student body participate in SVS last year, I would really like to raise that mark even higher," said Brailsford.

As Johnson sees it, getting more volunteers also means reaching more people. "We want to increase our outreach and student participation, and we can only do that with volunteers," she said. "We want students to recognize that it really is a privilege to serve."

"It is our responsibility to serve," said Hill. "Awareness will come from talking about the ideas and fundamental aspects of service. I want students to realize that SVS is not just a student service, but also a Christian one."

Phase I of strategic planning concludes with approval of vision statement

thing that people in higher education can appreciate," said Riddle, "but something that would be appealing to a high school senior looking at a brochure and trying to see what makes PC special."

After six revisions, the Board of Trustees approved the vision statement last week and suggested a few slight revisions. The vision statement was then directed to the editing subcommittee of the task force. At press time, the vision statement had not yet been released in its final form.

The second phase of the strategic planning process will seek to develop paradigms or models by which the college will seek to meet the general objectives proposed by the vision statement. Last week Griffith appointed four commissions to identify these paradigms.

The technology commission, chaired by Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy, is a sub-committee of the Russell Program Steering Committee and also includes two students and an additional faculty representative from the sciences. This commission is charged with developing ways to enhance the educational experience of students through technology.

Riddle expressed a desire to see the college make advances in technology. A resident assistant in Bailey Hall, Riddle said that about nine of the fourteen rooms on his hall have computers and that most of those nine rooms have two computers.

"Since so many students are comfortable with new technology," said Riddle, "I would like to see the school stay up with technology."

"As America changes, and people, science, technology, and workplaces change, it will have an impact on educational institutions," said Ingram.

"Hopefully, we can be a leader in preparing people for roles in the Twenty-First Century. In order to do that, we must have a strong curriculum. I think that a liberal arts education does that well."

As Ingram's comments suggest, members of the strategic planning task force believe that examination of curricula is closely related to implementing technology in the classroom. The general education commission, chaired by Dr. James L. Skinner, Charles A. Dana professor of English, includes members of the Academic Affairs Council and Dana Paul, dean of admission and financial aid. This commission is charged with designing an innovative four-year curriculum in which general education is integrated with the major and practicum (work and service) experiences.

The integrated living/learning commission, chaired by Dr. Peter H. Hobbie, associate professor of religion, is charged with developing ways to create greater cohesion in student life both inside and outside the classroom. Unlike the other three other commissions, the integrated living/learning is an ad hoc committee; that is, the committee is not formed from an already existing committee.

"Integration of liberal arts in all aspects of college life is what we're looking for," said Riddle. Hobbie described integrated living and learning as an "opportunity for community at all levels."

According to Hobbie, the commission will investigate a number of ways to achieve greater integration of academic and social life. Some possibilities include housing faculty members on campus or creating programs through which freshmen advisors can better know their advisees.

"We want to show students that life has an integrity, a unity to it," said Hobbie.

The international education commission is chaired by Dr. Craig Powell, associate professor of chemistry, and includes members of the International Studies Committee and selected personnel with responsibility for the co-curriculum. This commission will seek to develop opportunities for students and faculty to study the relationships between various human cultures.

"We would like a significant majority of students to have study abroad experiences, hopefully to African and Asian countries, as well as the European continent," said Ingram. "We want very broad experiences."

Closely related to international studies is the desire of many students and faculty to increase diversity on campus.

"It would be great to have a larger representation of minorities as well as international students," said Ingram.

Riddle would like to see greater diversity in the student body at PC, but he also added that he would like to see greater diversity represented at PC by diversifying the faculty, diversifying theological views and diversifying the curriculum with a greater emphasis on study abroad experiences, internships and service.

"It's a changing world where Latinos could soon become the next majority," said Riddle. "We don't want the college to lose out in the long run on diversity."

Dr. David Gillespie, dean of the faculty and vice-president for academic affairs, sits on each of the four commissions. In addition, each commission has a consultant to facilitate its work. The commissions, furthermore, have numerous resources available to them as they seek to develop paradigms upon which the strategic planning process will operate.

"We've had an alumnus of the college give a $100,000 challenge grant, asking our trustees and other alumni to match it so that we make sure we're developing the most exciting and well-conceived plans possible. We've also recruited a national advisory board to aid in this process, so that each commission has available the very best experts in the field nationally."

As Presbyterian College begins to consider ways to move into the Twenty-First Century, students, faculty, trustees and administrators involved in the strategic planning process emphasize the importance of remaining true to PC's traditions.

"One thing I love so much about PC is its sense of community," said SGA president Laura Keely. "During the strategic planning sessions people talked about increasing the student body to 1500. I think the idea is good, but I don't want PC to lose that sense of community."

"The theme that we have for strategic planning is 'Moving Without Leaving Home,'" said Griffith. "To me that's a good image. The moving has to do with the direction, in that we do have to continually strengthen this institution; and if we have some clear priorities and a clear vision, the strengthening will be easier to accomplish. The home part is that we want to be sure that the generations of Presbyterian College students always recognize this place—that has to do with the core values...The reason that I've chosen Homecoming for my Inaugural, where I'll talk a lot about the future of the institution, is that people are home, and it's in the context of being home that you're able to talk about change and growth."

Mens' soccer beats Erskine, loses heartbreaker to USC-Spartanburg

The PC men's soccer team stands at 1-3 on the season. The team lost their first three games but bounced back with a win against Erskine on Sept. 9. In their first three games the Blue Hose played teams that are ranked among the top 25 in the nation.

Although the men's soccer team's record stands at 1-3, as of Sept. 10, Coach Ralph Polson has very positive outlook on the team and the season.

"Our number one goal this year is to have fun," said Polson. "I have been able to play a majority of the team, which is a positive for us, considering we have such a young team....I am very pleased with the work and effort the team is putting forth."

Assistant coach Michael Louter feels the team could improve in a couple of ways.

"Instead of thinkers on the field the team needs to become reactors on the field," said Louter. "Our communication on field could improve."

Junior forward Trey Williams has great confidence in his team. "This is the best team I have played on since being at PC," said Williams.

On Sept. 2 the Blue Hose opened the season with a 2-3 loss against Anderson College in Anderson. Trey Williams and Gus Goding each scored one goal for the Blue Hose.

During Sept. 5-6 PC played in the PC/Nike Kickoff Classic. PC's first game, which they lost 0-2, was against number-eight Tampa University. The team's following game of the tournament was against number-eighteen St. Leo College. The Blue Hose were leading the game 3-1, but with 20 minutes to play, St. Leo scored three goals. Roddy Dinsmore, Stephen Replogle, and Pat Mangan each had goals for PC.

On Sept. 9 PC defeated Erskine College 2-1 in a very competitive game. Erskine scored first with a goal late in the first half. PC tied the game right before halftime when senior Ryan Williams scored with an assist from junior Dinsmore. The game winning goal, which came in the second half, came from sophomore Gus Goding with Andy Evans assisting.

Andy Pfaff picked up one save against Erskine and now has 12 for the season. The blue hose outshot Erskine 24-2 on the day.

The Blue Hose traveled to Spartanburg, S.C. last Saturday night, Sept. 12, to battle number-four-ranked USC-Spartanburg. Although neither team could put the ball in the back of the net during the first half and the game remained tied at 0-0 throughout most of the second half, USC-Spartanburg scored at the eighty-eighth minute of play to defeat PC 1-0.

"Even though we are 1-4, I think we're probably the best 1-4 team in the nation since we've lost to nationally-ranked teams in very close games," said junior Roddy Dinsmore.

The men's soccer team's next game is today in Belmont, N.C. against Belmont Abbey College.

Purcell pleased with womens' soccer scoring

The PC women's soccer team is off to a 1-2 start after Sunday's loss to Belmont Abbey.

The Blue Hose lost a heartbreaker to the Lady Crusaders 3-2 in overtime. Belmont Abbey scored in the fifteenth minute of the first half and the Blue Hose answered with a Jamie Harris goal. Karen Markham added a second goal to give PC the lead, but Belmont Abbey answered with ten minutes left in the game to tie the game 2-2 at the end of regulation. In the first overtime there were many close chances, but neither team could put the ball in the back of the net. In the second overtime, in the one-hundred-sixteenth minute of play, Belmont Abbey scored the game winner. Belmont Abbey outshot the Blue Hose 16-14. Sarah Price was credited with ten saves on the day. Belmont received votes to be nationally ranked in the latest poll, and, according to Blue Hose Coach Brian Purcell, the team should be ranked.

The Blue Hose hosted their first home game against Erskine College on Sept. 10. PC defeated the Flying Fleet 5-0 in an offensive shootout. The Blue Hose outshot Erskine 16-5, and goalkeeper Price had her first shutout of the season. PC took a 3-0 halftime lead with Ashley Davies scoring a goal and Heather Jones scoring two goals. In the second half, Kim Counts and Markham each scored to put the game away.

"The one thing I was worried about the most this season was scoring goals," said Purcell. "We played well against Erskine and it was good to score this many goals early into the season."

The Blue Hose played powerhouse Furman on September 8 in Greenville, S.C. PC was outshot 16-1, but Furman could only manage one goal to go on to defeat PC 1-0. Furman put the ball in the back of the net off a header from a corner kick, midway through the second half. Price made three saves during the game.

"This is a very experienced team I have back this year and I am pleased with the way the team has played so far this year," said Purcell.

The next game for the Blue Hose will be at Gardner-Webb on Sept. 22.

The taste of victory was sweet on Tuesday, Sept. 8 in the Blue Hose volleyball team's game against PC's long-time rival Newberry College. The team crushed Newberry with a score of 15-4, 15-8, 15-2. Stephanie Cloud, a junior from West Columbia, S.C., led the team in kills with an outstanding 13 in the game. Team captain Jennell Sanders, a senior, helped the team out tremendously with 34 assists. These assists boosted her assist average for the year to 0.4016.

This game against Newberry College was the volleyball team's first game. The first game was actually supposed to be played against Anderson College at home earlier in the week, but it had to be cancelled due to a power outage in Templeton gymnasium. The game against Anderson will be rescheduled for later in the season.

The team played against Francis Marion University on Wednesday, Sept. 9 and lost 15-8, 15-1, 15-1.

Other teams that have given the Blue Hose a fight in the past were Gardner-Webb and Mars Hill.

"Gardner-Webb has been the big competition lately," said Sanders.

The season has been looking bright for the volleyball team.

"Our team goal this year was to play well together. I feel that we get very well as a team," said Sanders.

After this week, the team's record stands at 1-0 for SAC region play and 1-1 overall. The Blue Hose played against Wingate University at Wingate, N.C. on Monday, Sept. 14, and against Cawtawba College at Salisbury, N.C. on Wednesday, Sept. 17. At press time, game stats were not available for these games. The Lady Blue Hose travel to the Armstrong Atlantic State Tournament this weekend.

Sarah Price was credited with ten saves on the day. Belmont received votes to be nationally ranked in the latest poll, and, according to Blue Hose Coach Brian Purcell, the team should be ranked.

The Blue Hose hosted their first home game against Erskine College on Sept. 10. PC defeated the Flying Fleet 5-0 in an offensive shootout. The Blue Hose outshot Erskine 16-5, and goalkeeper Price had her first shutout of the season. PC took a 3-0 halftime lead with Ashley Davies scoring a goal and Heather Jones scoring two goals. In the second half, Kim Counts and Markham each scored to put the game away.

"The one thing I was worried about the most this season was scoring goals," said Purcell. "We played well against Erskine and it was good to score this many goals early into the season."

The Blue Hose played powerhouse Furman on September 8 in Greenville, S.C. PC was outshot 16-1, but Furman could only manage one goal to go on to defeat PC 1-0. Furman put the ball in the back of the net off a header from a corner kick, midway through the second half. Price made three saves during the game.

"This is a very experienced team I have back this year and I am pleased with the way the team has played so far this year," said Purcell.

The next game for the Blue Hose will be at Gardner-Webb on Sept. 22.

Strategic planning

College releases final draft of vision statement

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

Presbyterian College is one step closer to developing a strategic plan for the next decade with the administration's release of the strategic planning vision statement.

On September 8, 1998, the Board of Trustees of Presbyterian College approved a vision statement that had been developed by the strategic planning task force, a committee of students, faculty, administrators and trustees, during the previous four months. (See "Trustees approve vision statement for college's strategic planning," September 17, 1998.)

At its September 8 meeting, the Board of Trustees recommended a few slight changes to the vision statement. The draft released by the college administration is the final version of the vision statement.

"We want to be realistic, but we don't want to sell the school short," said junior Brian Riddle, who is a member of the strategic planning task force, the committee that helped develop the vision statement. "The future could be very bright for this college."

Indeed, the vision statement aims high.

"By the year 2010," the vision statement reads, "Presbyterian College, remaining true to the Christian tradition and its relationship with the Presbyterian Church, USA, will be the leading liberal arts college in South Carolina and one of the top ten national liberal arts colleges in the Southeast."

According to an endnote to the vision statement, "This comparison group includes the 32 'Liberal Arts I' institutions in the Southeast. Seven variables used by 'U.S. News and World Report' to determine rankings of educational institutions will be tracked to determine progress in accomplishing this strategic priority." The endnote further lists the variables as the following: academic reputation, admission selectivity, faculty resources, retention rates, academic resources, alumni giving and value added measures.

"U.S. News and World Report" (August 31, 1998) currently ranks PC as a Third Tier (out of four tiers) National Liberal Arts College. If PC were ranked "one of the ten best national liberal arts colleges in the Southeast," as the vision statement predicts, Presbyterian College would stand with Davidson College, Washington and Lee University and the University of the South, which were all ranked in the first tier of national liberal arts colleges. Furthermore, a ranking as "the leading liberal arts college in South Carolina," would place PC above both Furman University and Wofford College, which were both ranked in the second tier of national liberal arts colleges.

Nevertheless, Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College, cautions against placing too much emphasis on college rankings.

"What you don't want to become obsessed with is that goal," said Griffith in an interview earlier this month. "What you want to become obsessed with is the education of our students. I hope what came across in my Opening Convocation address is that what really matters is the relationships between people here and this notion of service. I'd like to think that when all of us are gone every one of us will be one of the saints of Presbyterian College—students, faculty, administration, staff alike—because of what we've contributed to the education of people. We're not here to lust after rankings; we're here to lust after a first-quality experience for the students we serve. If we keep that focus, the other will happen."

Griffith has appointed four commissions to develop models for PC to carry out its mission in the future in the areas of integrated living and learning, technology, core curriculum and international studies. The commissions will submit reports to the President on November 13.

The strategic planning task force editing committee is scheduled to draft the strategic plan by the week of November 16. The strategic plan will then be considered by the strategic planning task force, the Board of Trustees and the college community as a whole during the following months. New buildings to expand residences, administration

by Mindy Powers
Staff Writer

The campus of Presbyterian College is expanding in many directions. Two new buildings have been proposed to help the campus meet the needs of current students, administration and faculty. The Patrick Center, an addition to the Smith Administration Building, will help alleviate the crowded atmosphere of Administration and provide a new area to house the Admissions and Alumni Offices. The International House is a new Residence Hall that will bring the concept of "theme houses" to PC.

The Board of Trustees has approved a plan to move forward with the building of the Patrick Center.

"The Patrick Center will greatly enhance our Admissions and Alumni Offices and give us a place to house guests from time to time," said Skip Zubrod, vice-president of finance. "A private foundation has recognized our need and graciously helped us fulfill it."

The Patrick Center is designed to meet the current needs of the Administration offices. The building will be located where Beatty House currently stands and will include a connector to the Smith Administration Building. The Patrick Center will also contain guest rooms to house visitors to the campus. The Patrick Center is scheduled to be completed by next September.

The International House is still in the preliminary stages of development. "We do not envision the need of a residence hall of the traditional type at this time. The International House is a step toward integrating curricular and co-curricular aspects of college life," said Joe Nixon, dean of students.

The International House will house approximately 40 students and will include a full kitchen, a small library, and a meeting area in the atrium.

The International House will house students who are interested in international studies, such as Amity Scholars, foreign exchange students, students who have studied abroad and those interested

POINT

Proposed International House may provide model for integration of living and learning

Two thumbs up to the administration of Presbyterian College for its proposal to construct a dormitory with an international theme.

Although Presbyterian College has not traditionally offered students theme housing, the construction of a dormitory centered on international studies is certainly in keeping with the liberal arts traditions of the college. Perhaps the central tenet of liberal education is the belief that all knowledge—in fact, all of life—is unified and that life, therefore, should not be compartmentalized (or departmentalized, as the case may be). Too often the classroom experiences of students at PC seem irrelevant to students' out-of-classroom experiences. The International House may provide a model for future programs that will bridge the great divide between curricular activities and extra-curricular activities; as students learn about different cultures in the classroom, they will experience different cultures on a daily basis.

Nevertheless, we hold some reservations about the construction of a dormitory with a special theme. Such a dormitory must not become merely a vehicle for cliques and the isolation of one group of students from other groups on campus. The proposed International House must be integrated into the educational and social program of the entire college. After all, if we hold that the life of an individual must not be compartmentalized, we must also hold that the life of our community must not be compartmentalized.

If precautions are taken to see that the International House does not become just another social club on campus, the International House will, we are confident, challenge students, faculty members and administrators broaden their cultural horizons and will provide a sorely-needed bridge between the academic and social worlds.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

September 16, 1620 the Pilgrims adopted the Mayflower Compact, a statement of their ideas and goals for their new home of Plymouth, before they left their ship. September 16, 1998 the Student Government Association endorsed the current draft of the Vision Statement. The symbolism of these September sixteenth, though years apart, is extraordinary.

Many settlements in colonial America failed because the settlements lacked organization, planning and agreement upon common goals. The excitement and newness of the "New World" caused the settlers to forget their logic, as a result, settlers embarked on a journey towards inevitable failure.

When Dr. Griffith's "moving" vans were unpacked, he, like those aboard the Mayflower, did not embark on a journey towards inevitable failure, on the contrary, he navigated a course composed of a series of meetings with trustees, administrators, faculty, alumni, students and friends of the college to establish the common goals for the future of PC. These meetings have led to a Vision Statement for PC, enabling our college to "move without leaving home."

As a participant throughout the strategic planning process, I feel as if I have just stepped off the Mayflower. As a settler, I know that hard work and countless hours have created an achievable, organized and planned vision for our "New PC." I am confident that our community will keep the traditions of the "Old World," while beginning the "New World." We can be confident knowing our new "captain" and his "founders" have charted a bright future for PC.

One can easily see why the Student Government Association unanimously endorsed the current draft of the Vision Statement, fittingly, on September 16. I look forward to our "Thanksgiving" in 2010.

Jay Philpott
SGA Vice-President

I hope everyone's classes have gotten off to a great start, and you are ready for an eventful 1998-1999 school year. We had our second Student Government Association meeting this past Wednesday night, and I would like to extend an invitation to all of you to join us for our regular meetings on Wednesdays at 9:00 p.m. to discuss any concerns or just to see what we have planned for the year. We are now in the process of planning events for Homecoming and for Dr. Griffith's Inauguration.

Freshman class officers were elected this past week. The election was one of the biggest seen on campus with five candidates for President and six candidates for Representative. CONGRATULATIONS to Lawton Greenwood, Freshman Class President, along with John Penn and Liz Woods, Freshman Class Representatives. Rest dence Hall Association also held their elections this past week. Katie Dobbins won the RHA Vice President position, and Cori Stevens was elected RHA Treasurer. Everyone is excited about our new officers and you are invited to their Induction on September 30, at 9:00 p.m. in the SGA office.

The Senior Class officers are in the process of working on possibly getting the Presbyterian College diploma enlarged. They are in collaboration with Dr. Gillespie on the matter, and it looks promising. The Sophomore class raffled off a TV for their fund-raiser this year. Congratulations to Melissa Burgess, who had the winning ticket, and thanks to those of you who bought a ticket. A total of $285.00 was raised!

The SGA would like to commend Shanna McAlister, President of the Student Union Board, and the SUB members for all their hard work with student activities. Inklings has been a huge success thus far, and the SGA would like to thank them for all their hard work. Special thanks to Tyler Darden and Brian Ballentine, who are responsible for the management of Inklings.

As PC's annual Homecoming approaches, SGA will give you further notice on planned events. If you have any ideas or suggestions, please let any SGA member know so that we can address it at our next meeting. Good luck to all our fall sports for a successful season, and to the student body for a semester full of accomplishments!

Around Campus

My Turn: Rebecca Grau

Around campus, the talk of students often refers to PC as life "in the bubble." I disagree. The four months we spend away from PC can be a test of the kind of bubble, if any, in which we claim to live. I believe our experiences prior, during, and in-between our PC time leave us hungry for something much more satisfying than an idealistic bubble. The philosophical, literary, biblical and ethical questions that we ask and grapple with here at PC are enlightened by those experiences we bring from across the globe. I'd like to focus on the summertime in-between our PC semesters. I spent this summer working at Grady Memorial Hospital in downtown Atlanta as a "wheelchair specialist." Needless to say, I've mastered the art of delivering quality wheelchair taxi-services to hospital patients. Besides learning the practical side of wheelchairs, I saw another side of the coin at the hospital. Four main areas really "hit home" for me: I was the minority for the first time, I saw a new side of humanity, I experienced God in a new and meaningful way, and I saw a new and real view of medicine.

Upon arriving at employee training, I found myself the minority. I'd never experienced being the "different one" like this and it was lonely, humbling and angering. It gave me a new perspective on a culture quite different from my own. Not only were there racial differences but also differences in education, socio-economic levels and values. McGregor was my trainer on the "ins and outs" of Grady hospital for my first week and appeared a rough, streetwise gangster when I first saw him. During these forty hours of training, I gained an insight into a fellow American's life quite different from my own. I later that week McGregor joked, "I never knew white folk could talk like that." He was referring to the openness about racial and socio-economic that we discussed. He has a point. How often do we bring out such issues that have been all too long swept under the rug? Born and raised in a south Georgia ghetto, McGregor taught me more lessons than I ever thought possible. He pointedly asked, "When did you decide to go to college?" And I ask this of those reading—when did you decide to continue your education beyond high school? For me it was a life-long assumption based on who I am, or, rather, where I was born. My college education was a matter of where or what I wanted to study rather than if I would study. McGregor's lessons didn't end here. When I asked McGregor why he preferred to live in the crime-filled areas of Atlanta and befriend drug dealers, he responded, "Miss Grau, once your ghetto pass is revoked, you can never get it back." Wow. Loyalty is so crucial to him that he remains in a crime-filled, poor area of town in order to be true to his neighborhood family. To say he holds courage to live in the ghetto only belittles the culture in which he grew up. Rather, I claim what brotherly loyalty he holds toward those of his kind. Would I do the same? I'll never fully understand what he meant because our roads have crossed from such diverse backgrounds, but seeing just the small glimpse he gave me yields enormous respect for an individual much of society would look down upon.

I saw a frighteningly realistic perspective on humanity. Indeed, it was a very raw picture. How do you react to the stench of excrement as you walk down the emergency room corridor? How do you respond to obvious differences in healthcare between the urban homeless and the suburban homely? How do you react transporting a prisoner who could have committed the most heinous of crimes? How do you reply to patients who ask you when their pain will end? How do you summon the courage to transport a corpse to the morgue, passing the grieving family in the hall? How do you react when halls are filled with HIV positive patients whose painful condition is overshadowed by their peaceful, humble gratitude towards life?

One of the most touching experiences came one afternoon as I walked down the hall and heard someone singing, "What A Friend We Have In Jesus." As my steps brought me closer to her resounding voice, I came to find this woman stopped in the middle of the pharmacy line singing this classic spiritual with such emotion, vitality and strength. Those previously impatient with the never-ending line were now quiet, they even smiled. I learned about real faith. I learned of a faith held by the pain-filled, disease-ridden homeless about a God who is ever present, ever giving, ever loving. God is no taboo word but a best friend spoken of among all. I even became known as Mr. Chaplain's daughter in reference to my dad's position as chaplain at the hospital. I saw faith values lived out in real and tangible ways—patients sharing biblical passages with me, colleagues discussing God's faithfulness and even patients crying out for God.

Finally, I saw a realistic picture of an over-glorified medical profession. I've wanted to be a doctor since I was six years old, but, I must confess, much of the time it was driven by the reputation and the name. I challenge those who are in the same boat as me to take a good look at who a doctor is. I never found a George Clooney in the entire hospital. Rather, I saw interns coming off forty-eight hour shifts, residents nervously memorizing diagnostic treatments for the anticipated drilling by doctors, and doctors finishing their school when thirty-two years old. With all these thoughts, I'd like to turn to a conversation I had with a doctor in Honduras last March. I asked her why she wanted to be a doctor (the classic cliché one is always asked). Her response said it all: "I've always wanted to help others. God has just given me this capacity to do so."

Hearing others' similarly eye-opening summer experiences, I don't think it's possible to come back and live in a bubble. Rather, I think PC offers a bridge—a bridge that broadens and deepens one's interpretation of experiences, brings you to more questions than concrete answers and beckons you to never leave learning on West Plaza upon graduation, but to mold it into your very being.

RHA working on new visitation policy, dorm improvements

by Kathryn Mehl
Staff Writer

The executive officers of the Residence Hall Association (RHA) met on Thursday, September 24 and decided that expansion of student visitation hours is a priority in its agenda for the 1998-99 academic year. For some time, students have asked for a new visitation policy. While the Residence Hall Association last year presented a proposal to extend visitation hours in the dormitories, the proposal was rejected by the faculty.

According to Catherine Breitenhirt, RHA president, the RHA will take more time this year to study the issue before submitting a proposal for a change in visitation policy. In addition, the RHA expects to work more closely with administrators.

"We realize that there needs to be a change, and I think that the [college administrators] are looking for a change," said Breitenhirt.

There are currently three visitation policies at work. The plan most requested by students is known as Plan A. The visitation hours in this particular plan are Sunday through Thursday, noon until midnight, and Friday-Saturday, noon until 2 a.m.

"The people that trained us to be RDs told us that Plan A was the plan that most of the halls were on. Students like it the most of all the visitation plans because there are more visitation days and a wider selection of hours," said Clarybel Peguero, resident director of Mary Irwin Belk Hall. The resident hall lobbies are open to both sexes 24 hours a day, but a lot of students would like that policy to extend to their rooms as well. Last year during second semester, a proposal went before the Student Affairs Council to approve 24-hour visitation on weekend, and 10 a.m. through 2 a.m. weekday visitation. The proposal was not approved.

The process that the Residence Hall Association, Student Government Association, and the Student Affairs Council have to go through to get new visitation hours is complicated. First, a individual student or student group brings an idea for a new policy to the RHA. Then the RHA writes up a professional proposal and presents it to the Student Affairs Council (SAC). The SAC, a group of students, faculty, and staff, votes on the proposal. If the proposal is disapproved, the proposal is ended. However, if the SAC approves the proposal, then the proposal goes on to the Faculty. If the Faculty approves it, then it may go to the Board of Trustees, but only if the proposed change is extreme. The board has the ultimate "veto" power when it comes to new policies at PC.

According to Mike Rosolino, director of residence life, the visitation policy has been the same since he has been employed at PC, but he has no problems with it possibly changing.

"I went to a college with a 24-hour visitation policy, which worked for that institution. I think that there is an atmosphere at PC which is ready to look at some gradual changes in the policy. I do not know if we are ready to move to 24-hour visitation as yet," he said.

Another development at PC is the possible addition of a co-educational dorm. There are plans to start building a coed dorm on the PC campus, which should be open for next year. The dorm's name will be Belk International House and will be located behind Grotnes and Barron Halls.

"I don't mean to step on anyone's toes, but I don't think that freshmen should be able to live in a co-ed dorm," said SGA president Laura Keely. "It is not anything against freshmen, but you mature a lot during your freshman year. You need some sort of structure to help you acclimate to college life. This is their first time away from home. They don't have any familiar nagging from their parents to do their homework and go to bed. They need that time to get used to motivating themselves to study. You change a lot all through college, but you change the most in your freshman year.

The name of the dorm has a striking significance to the anticipated theme of the building. It will be a dorm especially for students of a multicultural background and for other students that are interested in learning about people of other cultures.

The other option for seniors is the townhouse. The townhouse, and possibly Belk International, will be up for student lottery. This means that students with predetermined qualifications enter a drawing for places in the particular housing complex. The townhouses, which are for seniors only, should begin signups for the lottery starting in mid-October and should conclude by the end of October. Rising seniors should get information on the set dates by mail.

Don't forget to check in this report.

in international business, government and international education to experience a new environment.

"I think the International House is good for emersion, but I have a concern about the possibility of isolation from the rest of PC," said Will Edwards, a Junior French and history double-major.

This concern has been recognized by the administration.

"We haven't in the past developed theme houses and there is some caution that the facility not isolate or segregate international students from other college students," said Nixon.

Living in the International House will be considered a privilege and an honor. According to the Preliminary Program Statement, the International House will be "devoted to those fundamental and increasingly significant principles of diversity and global citizenship as well as to the traditional focus upon community and the liberal arts."

The International House will be located behind Barron and Grotnes Residence Halls. It will be connected by a walkway to Browns Commons. A faculty member may live in the apartment in Browns Commons and will take some responsibility for coordinating activities in the residence hall. The International House will be a residence hall for both male and female students.

"There is an outside chance that the International House could be occupied by Fall, 2000," said Nixon.

There may be a secondary function for the International House. Receptions for prominent visitors to PC may take place in the atrium of the residence hall. Short-term retreats and conferences may also be held in the International House when the college is in recess.

The Patrick Center and International House will be welcome additions to Presbyterian College as the campus continues to grow in the coming years. The needs of the campus are included in the Campus Master Plan section of the Strategic Plan, which is in development.

Strategic Planning Vision Statement

By the year 2010, Presbyterian College, remaining true to the Christian tradition and its relationship with the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., will be the leading liberal arts college in South Carolina and one of the ten best national liberal arts colleges in the Southeast. To realize this vision we will:

- *Provide an innovative, broadly diverse and relevant liberal arts program primarily serving undergraduates, with the possibility of graduate and continuing education programs in selected areas that complement our primary educational mission.
- *Deliver an integrated "living learning" experience that develops graduates characterized by excellence in professional disciplinary competence, ethics, reasoning, decision-making, communication, teamwork, service and stewardship.
- *Attract and retain high quality faculty who are committed to the teaching and advising of students and to continued professional growth through scholarship, and staff who are experts at managing a student-centered academic enterprise.
- *Increase enrollment while maintaining an appropriately qualified student body, financial accessibility, and the character of the college community.
- *Improve the quality of student life on campus and take an active role in the continued revitalization of the city of Clinton.
- *Maintain a strong program of intercollegiate and intramural athletics.
- *Create a campus which reflects a higher level of diversity in all its facets.
- *Provide first quality facilities and technologies to support and, as appropriate, to expand our programs.

These achievements will require that we conduct on-going planning and assessment, strengthen institutional management and strengthen our financial condition through a larger endowment and increased annual giving.

To make this vision a reality will require the support and commitment of all members of the college family.

Patrick develops leadership skills through service at PC, plans career in law

by Emily Benthall
Business Manager

A missed face among many on PC's campus last semester was that of Mary Frances Patrick. She was spending her semester studying abroad in London where she served in a parliamentary internship. Her internship consisted of promoting British school children in NATO and the UN. There was a conference in Wales where the students wrote letters to British government officials about the environment, human rights and government policy. The students attended an international school in a Welsh castle.

Not only did Patrick go to London, she also attended Georgetown University this summer. She spent her time in Washington, D.C. as an intern in Mayor Marion Barry's office.

"The best part of going abroad was coming home. PC stays reliable. The PC bubble is like CHEERS, 'where everyone knows your name,'" said Patrick.

Patrick went to London through the program Central College offers. "I was asking my friends from Central College what their motto was, and no one knew it. I was shocked. I think that it's important that PC lives by our motto and strives to achieve it. Dum vivimus servimus. We take it seriously, and I think that this is what makes PC stand out above the rest," said Patrick. Others know Patrick from her efforts to improve GDH meals as a member of the Food Committee, yet she refuses to take the credit for the improvement this year.

"John deserves most of the credit for what has taken place," said Patrick.

A native of Greenville, S.C., Patrick is a political science major. She hopes to apply to law school at the University of South Carolina.

"Ever since I was a junior in high school I knew what I wanted to be—judge for Family Court. My dream is to be a judge for South Carolina's Supreme Court, perhaps even the Nation's Supreme Court," said Patrick.

Patrick does not esteem how law is practiced in today's society. More than anything else, she would like to have an effectual influence and make a difference.

The most influential professor during Patrick's stay at PC has been Dr. David Gillespie. Not only was he Patrick's interviewer during Scholarship Week of her senior year in high school, he gave Patrick her fondest academic experience by taking her Freshman Honors seminar to a hippie commune in Tennessee.

"Dr. Gillespie is great. I'm so glad he is still here and PC's new Academic Dean," said Patrick. "I've learned to keep an open mind towards new experiences and other's differences."

Clyde and Ann Smith enjoy "serving" at grill

by Doodle Harris
Staff Writer

Springs Student Center is a place for students to play ping-pong, get those long awaited packages from home, take a break from all those physics problems, or just waste time. What the average student may not know is those people responsible for making Springs the place it is. This issue introduces Clyde and Ann Smith, managers of the Grill.

The Smiths have been working here at PC for nearly 19 years—since May 1990. They both have a deep appreciation and overwhelming love for PC.

"The most pleasant, considerate, and courteous customers a business can have are students at Presbyterian College," said the Smiths.

Clyde's favorite part of his job is meeting and working with the students. Judy Weaver, manager of the bookstore and co-worker, agrees that everyone "enjoys relationships with the students" and considers the staff of the bookstore and grill along with the students "one big family."

Although the Smiths strive to provide the best possible service for the students, they enjoy getting better acquainted with the students and Ann loves a good joke. Working under college guidelines and trying to accommodate the students occasionally frustrate the Smiths.

"I work for the college, not for myself," said Clyde. "I sometimes struggle to please the students and comply with college regulations."

The canteen opened Monday, September 14. Although Smith says no new dishes will be offered this year, he emphatically recommends the turkey sandwich. The grill is open weekdays from 8:00 until 2:30 and serves between 500 and 600 students breakfast and lunch per day. The Smiths encourage all freshmen to stop by and see what the canteen has to offer. Clyde is "amazed at how much students enjoy simple hamburgers and hotdogs," but admits away from the Grill, he would rather cook steaks or barbecue.

Aside from their jobs at PC, Ann and Clyde devote much time to their family and they love to travel. They have two daughters, one of whom attended PC for a short time, and two grandchildren—a boy and a girl. They also have a camper at Myrtle Beach, which is one of their favorite weekend retreat and vacation spots. High on their list of upcoming adventures, is a hopeful visit to Niagara Falls and an experience of Vermont in the Autumn.

After so many years of work and more than quadrupling the revenue of the canteen and bookstore, Clyde and Ann plan to retire in the summer of 1999.

October to be the month for on-campus faculty/staff Annual Fund campaign

"Participating in the Presbyterian College Annual Fund is a chance to demonstrate a vote of confidence in Presbyterian College," according to Dr. Peter Hobbie, associate professor of religion. "It isn't how much a person gives, it is simply the act of making a gift that counts."

Dr. Hobbie is one of several faculty and staff members that are taking part in an on-campus effort to educate others about the Annual Fund while also getting more people to participate in it. During the month of October, on-campus faculty and staff will be given a chance to participate in Presbyterian College's Annual Fund. Individuals involved in this effort include: Sheila Hill, Dr. John Inman, Norman Scarborough, Beth Couture, Dr. Peter Hobbie, Andrea Long, Dr. Tom Weaver and Dr. Ron Dempsey.

The Annual Fund is the primary fund raising organization that PC uses to solicit and obtain financial contributions from alumni, parents and friends of the college. The Annual Fund is comprised of gifts that are designated to one of the following three areas: unrestricted, Scotsman Club (athletic scholarships) or Alumni scholarships.

The money generated in these areas is used for faculty/staff support, operating budgets, new equipment or books, additional student scholarships and anything else needed on campus. The Annual Fund is one of three ways in which PC produces revenue on campus to run the college, the other two being tuition and income from endowments.

Sheila Hill, director of multicultural affairs and student volunteer services, states that she is involved in this campaign and feels others should be interested in participating because it is an "opportunity, as an employee of this institution, to show a sense of propriety and loyalty."

"You can make a personal contribution towards the product you are helping shape," said Hill.

Everyone is encouraged to participate in the Annual Fund this year. The higher the percentage of on-campus personnel supporting the college, the stronger a statement is made about how those closest to the college believe in the mission of the institution.

Currently, many PC faculty and staff participate in the Annual Fund and do so by either monthly payroll deductions or by simply writing a check. This year, it will take everyone getting involved to reach the goals of the Annual Fund. The Board of Trustees has set the objective of the Annual Fund as having to raise $925,000 for the fiscal 1998-99 year, a 17% increase over last year.

There is a special incentive to encourage more people to participate this year. The Whitaker '66 Woodward '60 $100,000 Annual Fund Challenge will match up to $50,000 this year and next, increased gifts and new alumni gifts to the Annual Fund. For example, if a donor made a gift of $50 to the Annual Fund last year and his or her gift increases to $100 this year, then the $50 increase would be matched in this challenge.

1998-1999 is the year to get involved and participate in the Annual Fund. A stronger Annual Fund will mean a stronger PC. For questions, please contact one of the individuals involved in this campaign. For specific fundraising details, contact James Krege, Director of the Annual Fund & Scotsman Club at 833-8261.

Blue Hose football team slaughters Charleston Southern, Lenoir-Rhyne; loses to Carson Newman

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Blue Hose football team now stands at 2-2 overall and 1-1 in the SAC after this weekend's victory against Lenoir-Rhyne.

The Blue Hose defense stood tall Saturday and recovered five fumbles and intercepted two passes to lead PC to a 43-7 drubbing of Lenoir-Rhyne. Senior Troy Gamble finished the game with 171 all purpose yards including 96 yards on five punt returns. His big return was a 55 yard interception returned for a touchdown in the second quarter. After this, sophomore quarterback Blake Wilkey went to work in the second quarter with two touchdown passes of 12 and 20 yards. PC took a 23-7 halftime lead into the locker room. In the third quarter, Wilkey hit sophomore Travis Smith with a 14 yard touchdown pass, Smith's second of the game. Donald Wilson scored PC's last two touchdowns on runs of three and 11 yards.

Wilkey finished the game 11 of 23 for 127 yards and three touchdowns. After missing some passes early, Wilkey finally settled down and felt confident in the pocket. This, in turn, opened the running game. Ryan Knight finished the game with 15 rushes for 83 yards.

PC played a tough football game against number three Carson-Newman. PC lost to tough team 35-14.

Carson-Newman has been a top team in the SAC and in NCAA Division II the past couple of years, advancing far in the National Playoffs. The Blue Hose were shutout in the first half 14-0 at halftime. PC cut the score to 14-7 on a 59 yard touchdown pass from quarterback Blake Wilkey to sophomore wideout Travis Smith with nine minutes left in the third quarter. Carson-Newman scored 21 straight points before PC scored a late fourth-quarter touchdown.

Wilkey finished the game 14 of 34 for 184 yards and four interceptions. Smith finished with six catches for 109 yards and one touchdown.

The Blue Hose got their first home victory of the season against Charleston Southern 42-0. PC's defense played hard. They forced five fumbles and picked off four interceptions. Senior Lee Hannah picked off two interceptions and returned one for a touchdown in the fourth quarter. Troy Gamble and Joe Morgan also had an interception. Jamie Tyler returned a fumble for a touchdown midway through the second quarter.

Junior wideout Brad Bolemon got the scoring started with a 64 yard run that capped off a four-play 97 yard drive. Bolemon also did it on defense by blocking a punt and returning it 21 yards to give PC a 23-0 halftime lead.

Wilkey got the offense rolling in the fourth quarter when he hit wideout Smith with a 43-yard touchdown pass to push the lead to 29-0. Senior fullback Stephen Wedgewood capped off the scoring with 10-yard touchdown run with ten seconds remaining.

Wilkey finished 8 of 18 for 147 yards and one touchdown. Ben Power led the receivers with three catches for 43 yards and Smith had one catch for 43 yards. Donald Wilson rushed 11 times for 61 yards and senior Ryan Knight rushed nine times for 40 yards.

"It was a good team victory, it wasn't pretty at times, but when you win 42-0 you feel you're making progress," said head coach Daryl Dickey.

On the season Wilkey is 37-87 for 552 yards with four interceptions and four touchdown passes. Wilson leads the rushing core with 110 yards on 26 carries and Knight has 97 yards on 28 carries. Smith leads the receiving corps with 15 receptions for 244 yards and two touchdowns. Power has six receptions for 142 yards and two touchdowns.

On defense, Hannah and Gamble each have two interceptions. Tony Davis leads the team in total hits with 28. Gamble and senior Cory Dickerson are one behind with 27 each.

PC will play Tusculum at home this weekend and then Catawba for Homecoming the following weekend. The Homecoming game will kickoff at 3:00 P.M.

Cross Country

Men's, Women's teams running strong

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

First year head coach Leigh Irwin has done an incredible job to get the cross country team back in stride with improvements with both the women's and the men's team.

In the eighth annual Lander/Conley Maxwell Invitational, held in Greenwood, SC on September 12, the women's team finished sixth out of ten teams with 100 points, and the men finished sixth out of eight teams with 164 points. Top finishers in the 5K women's race were sophomore Sarah Jones (21:40) in sixth place, freshman Amy Kukla (22:39) in fifteenth place, and freshman Kate Reitsnyder (24:12) in twenty-third place. Top finishers in the 8K men's race were Zach Braden (29:55) tenth, senior Jay Blount (32:48) thirty-sixth, and senior John Moorman (32:58) thirty-seventh.

On September 8, the Blue Hose ran at the USCS Rifle Opener. The men's team finished sixth out of seven teams and the women's team did not have enough team members to qualify for this event. Top finishers for the men were Braden (27:15) in eleventh place, Moorman (29:11) in twentieth place, and Blount (30:53) in twenty-sixth place. On the women's side, Kukla (17:56) finished in tenth place and Jill Webster (21:02) finished twenty-seventh.

The cross-country teams will be at Wingate University on October 1 and at Erskine College on October 15.

Men's Soccer boasting winning season

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

The Blue Hose men's soccer team improved its record to 4-5 last week with three wins and a loss.

The team traveled to Belmont, NC on September 17 to defeat Belmont Abbey College in double overtime. Gus Goding scored the first goal for the Blue Hose with an assist from Jeff Hendrix, a freshman. The deciding goal was a shot by Warren Turner, assisted by Jamil Ficklin.

On September 19, Newberry College came to our home turf to get crushed by the Blue Hose. Our team rallied to win the game 5-0. Junior Drew Stephen, a forward, came out strong in the first half to score two goals against the Indians. Midfielder Andy Evans assisted Stephen's first goal. Second half, the action continued with a goal apiece by sophomore Andy Evans, freshman midfielder Jason Prince and junior defender Erik Anderson to inherit the win. Tommy Wolfenberger, Ryan Comer, and Walter Howard each contributed an assist each. Goalkeeper Matt Miletich, a sophomore, picked up his first shut-out of the season and recorded a save for the game. Presbyterian outshot Newberry 17-1 in the game.

The freshmen on the men's soccer team got a lot of playing time in this game.

"Everything was great about the Newberry game. The freshmen are doing great. They just played their hearts out. They are doing phenomenally on and off the field. They don't normally start, but once they get in, they put an extra dimension into the game."

Tusculum College becomes ninth member of South Atlantic Conference

Greenville, TN - The South Atlantic Conference Presidents Council voted to expand to nine member institutions with the addition of Tusculum College, it was announced today by league officials during a press conference on the college campus.

SAC membership for the college will officially begin on July 1 of this year. The school will be eligible for championships and award in all 13 SAC sports beginning in the 1999-2000 academic year.

"We are delighted that Tusculum College has been admitted to the SAC," Tusculum President Dr. Robert Knott said. "The conference is one of the premier NCAA Division II leagues in the country, and the educational and athletic missions of the member colleges are highly compatible with mission of Tusculum College."

"We appreciate the gracious reception that we have been given by the member schools and presidents. I look forward with much enthusiasm to the new rivalries and friendships that we will find in the South Atlantic Conference."

Tusculum College is located in Greenville, TN, between Knoxville and the Tri-Cities in the foothills of the Great Smoky Mountains. The oldest college in the state, its campus includes 19 buildings spread over 140 wooded acres.

"The SAC is certainly excited about the addition of Tusculum to the membership," said Lenoir-Rhyne president Dr. Ryan LaHurd, chairman of the SAC Presidents Council. "Tusculum fits well with our institutions as a small, private college that adheres to a philosophy of providing comprehensive sports sponsorship as an integral part of the overall educational experience."

Pioneer athletics programs reached high levels of success in 1997-98. Teams representing the college reached regional postseason competition in the sports of men's soccer, women's soccer, men's basketball, women's basketball, men's golf, women's golf, women's tennis and baseball. Of those, three reached national tournaments.

"It is a real positive move for Tusculum College to gain admission into the South Atlantic Conference," Tusculum Athletic Director Dr. Jim Fields added. "Athletically and academically, the SAC has the type of schools that we want to be associated with. The SAC is recognized as one of the top Division II conferences in the country, and we look forward to the competition and opportunities that full affiliation will present."

The SAC is a group of church-related colleges of similar size and athletic philosophy. Entering its 10th year as a comprehensive sports conference and eighth as a member of NCAA Division II, the league continues to grow as one of the premier small-college athletic conferences in the nation.

The SAC has made great strides in NCAA Division II postseason play over the last five years. The league was represented in eleven of its 13 conference-sponsored sports in NCAA postseason play in 1997-98, including representatives from four sports that reached the final rounds of the national tournaments.

The league was founded in 1975, as a football conference and continued until 1989, when it expanded to a comprehensive sport programming format. The SAC currently sponsors conference championships in the sports of football, women's volleyball, men's and women's soccer, men's and women's cross country, men's and women's basketball, men's baseball, women's softball, men's and women's tennis and men's golf. The league also conducts postseason championships in all sports except football.

Tusculum joins current members Carson-Newman in Jefferson City, TN; Catawba College in Salisbury, NC; Gardner-Webb University in Boiling Springs, NC; Lenoir-Rhyne College in Hickory, NC; Mars Hill College in Mars Hill, NC; Newberry College in Newberry, SC; Presbyterian College in Clinton, SC and Wingate University in Wingate, NC.

"We are pleased to now have two member schools in the state of Tennessee," SAC Commissioner Doug Echols said. "The addition of Tusculum and the Greenville community broadens the geographical area of the SAC, providing us with another high-quality institution and an expanded market area of exposure for the league."

sion in for the better," said Michael Louter, assistant coach of the Blue Hose.

The game against Gardner-Webb University on September 23 ended with a goal by the Bulldogs in the last 39 seconds of the game. The Blue Hose fell to Gardner-Webb, ranked twenty-first nationally, in a tight match. The final score was 4-3. Scorers for the Blue Hose were Trey Williams, Ryan Comer, and Gus Goding, who also recorded an assist for the day. Goalkeeper Andy Pfaff suffered an injury in a collision with one of Gardner-Webb's offenders. Pfaff was out of play for the remainder of the game.

The men's team came out victorious on September 26th. Presbyterian traveled to Tennessee on Saturday afternoon to battle Carson-Newman. Drew Stephen and Jamil Picklin each drove into the net to defeat Carson-Newman 2-0.

Assistant coach Michael Louter feels that many key players contributed to the team's good week.

"Ryan Comer is playing consistently. Gus Goding is playing outstanding," said Louter. "Drew Stephen has also had some fantastic goals. He was named 'Player of the Week' for SAC conference last week."

The men's soccer team's next game is scheduled for Wednesday, September 30 against Mars Hill.

The Rear End: serial card-snapping student angered at lack of Back Page; Amos and Robbie save the day

by Robbie "Mad Dogg" Brian and "Famous" Amos Disasa

All right now Irish exchange student, Mickey O'Shields is upset. You may ask why? You may say, "Our new president has white hair, which obviously makes him wise, coming sales have skyrocketed and Warren Turner found his blue retainer he has nothing to be mad about." Well, our dear friends, the last two is "Blue Stock" you are reading an impor-

O'Shields' irate serial card-snapper

O'Shields the back page upon flipping to found "Notes from the Chaplain's Office" and a full page Wachovia add and became enraged. Where was his Rear End it was missing? What followed can only be described as bizarre and circumstantial.

In a related story, Amos hails from the mighty country of Ethiopia, which is his excuse for his receding hairline and his land mine damaged toe. Robbie, who has often been described as husky, has a beard, not because it's cold (remember, Amos got real dark this summer) but because he wants people to know he has gone through puberty.

O'Shields first snapped his own ID card, and then continued snapping any card he could get his hands on. This bizarre card snapping spree continued until the writers of the Rear End assured Serial Card Snapper, Mickey, that his captiveness was left by the whole campus (even ZONA, whose only recorded smile last year was when she noticed the name "Baggott" chuckled and remarked to herself, "Was that a misprint?" and that there would be a Rear End of the next paper).

In yet another related story, Editor of the Blue Stocking and most powerful man on campus, whom you might know as "Cool Breeze," Dan Hart recently disclosed that he was named after a pro-wrestler.

In conclusion, we want everyone to know the Rear End is open for anyone's suggestions and/or articles. So if you have a funny picture or story that you would like the world to laugh at, call our love shack at *8974. O'Shields, are you happy now?

Griffith to be inaugurated as sixteenth president

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

After a full week of academic, social and cultural activities, festivities surrounding the inauguration of PC's new president will climax tomorrow, October 10, with the inauguration of Presbyterian College's sixteenth President. Dr. John V. Griffith will be inaugurated on the West Plaza at 10:30 a.m. following an academic procession from the fountain behind Neville hall to the platform where the inauguration ceremony will take place.

Delegates from nearly 90 colleges and universities will process in full academic regalia behind delegates from the State of South Carolina and clergy from the Synod of the South Atlantic of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A bagpipe band performing "Scotland the Brave" and "The Rowan Tree," two traditional Scottish songs played every year at PC's Opening Convocation, will be followed by trustees and trustees emeriti of the college, faculty and faculty emeriti of the college, administrative officers of the college and representatives from the classes of 1999, 2000, 2001 and 2002.

"This is a treat that only happened three times in the past fifty years," said Grant Vosburgh, senior director for public relations, who served as a co-chair of the committee that planned the inauguration festivities. "A presidential inauguration at PC is not a commonplace event."

Griffith's inaugural address is entitled "A Profound Sense of Place" and will follow his presentation for inauguration as the sixteenth president of Presbyterian College by Dr. Kenneth B. Orr, president emeritus.

In an interview with the "Blue Stocking" last month, Griffith compared the theme of his inauguration to the theme of the strategic planning process in which the college is currently engaged—"moving without leaving home."

"The reason I've chosen Homecoming for my inaugural where I'm going to talk a lot about the future of the institution is that people are home, and it's in the context of being home that you're able to talk about change and growth," said Griffith.

Since the Inauguration is the same week as Homecoming, many alumni will have the opportunity to participate in the festivities.

"We're doing this at Homecoming in part because the president wants past and present students to celebrate with us," said Vosburgh.

Indeed, PC alumni will play an important role in the inauguration ceremony. The benediction will be offered by Rev. Joan Stanbridge Gray, pastor of Columbia Presbyterian Church in Decatur, Ga. and a 1973 graduate of Presbyterian College. Ruth Tiller Coleman ('65), president of the Alumni Association, will present Dr. Griffith with a charge on behalf of the alumni, and Dr. John William Elrod ('62), president of Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Va., will present Griffith with a charge on behalf of institutions of higher learning.

In addition to charges from the alumni and academia, four other charges will be given. Senior Laura Keely, president of the Student Government Association, will represent the student body; Dr. George Ramsey, Kristen Herrington Professor of Bible, will represent the faculty; Duncan S. Ferguson, president of the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities, will represent the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and Governor David Beasley will represent the State of South Carolina.

A luncheon on the grounds will follow the inauguration ceremony and will feature entertainment by the New Orleans Steamboat Dixieland Jazz Band.

In addition, other events were held this week as part of the inauguration festivities.

Earlier this week, PC hosted the Inaugural Lecture Series on Technology and the Liberal Arts with lectures by Dr. Jerry Gaff of the Association of American Colleges and Universities; Dr. Carol Twigg, founder of the National Learning Infrastructure Initiative; and Dr. David Shi, president of Furman University. The three speakers spoke on the role of technology in the liberal arts and were each followed by reactions from a PC student.

"The Inauguration is not just a single day's ceremony, but an entire week of thinking," said Dr. James L. Skinner, Charles A. Dana professor of English, who serves as the other co-chair of the Inauguration Committee. "This lecture series gives us an opportunity to reflect on the relationship between technology and the liberal arts, and there couldn't be a more relevant question at this time for this institution."

The week's festivities will close with a concert by the South Carolina Philharmonic Orchestra on Sunday, October 11 at 3:00 p.m. in Belk Auditorium.

In addition to the academic and cultural events surrounding the Inauguration, the Student Union Board (SUB), along with the office of student activities and the Student Government Association (SGA) planned a number of social events for Homecoming/Inauguration week.

According to senior Shanna McAlister, SUB president, the theme of the festivities—"where tradition meets tomorrow"—was chosen at a planning retreat.

"After talking about what's important to us about PC, we decided that tradition is the most important thing; and Dr. Griffith represents tomorrow," said McAlister.

The social activities will climax with an inauguration party for Dr. and Mrs. Griffith tonight at Springs from 7-10 p.m. The event will be catered and entertainment will be provided by Sounds of Motown.

Men's soccer to receive new stadium

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

On September 8, the Board of Trustees met and gave the go ahead to begin fundraising for a new soccer stadium to be built directly behind Templeton Gym where the practice soccer fields are now.

The soccer achievements of both the men and women's soccer programs have put the Blue Hose into the national spotlight. Coach Brian Purcell led the women's soccer team to the NCAA Division II tournament last year and hosted the first round game here at the Ponderosa. The women's team has finished in the NCAA Division II national rankings each of the last four seasons.

Coach Ralph Polson has led the men's soccer program to four SAC regular season championships and four conference tournament titles. The men's team has also been ranked among the nation's top teams.

Now that PC is in the national spotlight in soccer, PC is moving forward into the 21st Century with the building of a new soccer stadium.

"We will have a quality stadium to equal these two rising programs," said Polson.

"This new soccer stadium will create an exciting college atmosphere for our games," said Purcell.

The new stadium will use the same parking lot with Templeton Gym. The stadium will have a central entrance that will house a storage facility. There will be a seating capacity of 700, with 400 permanent seats and 300 more seats from the bleachers that will be moved from the Ponderosa to the new stadium. One exciting feature of this stadium will be lights. Now both programs can schedule night games that will enhance the college atmosphere of a soccer game.

"This facility is going to meet the needs of both the women's and men's soccer programs and we will be

Lecture Series on Technology and Liberal Arts shows need for change in academic program

This past week, PC hosted three nationally-renowned experts on the relationship between technology and the liberal arts in order to spark campus discussion of ways to improve the academic program at PC.

The insights of the three guest lecturers clearly show that PC must reform its academic program significantly in order to carry out its mission in the next century. According to Dr. Jim Skinner, Presbyterian College has not significantly revised its general education program in 30 years, and, as Dr. Jerry Gaff pointed out in his lecture on Tuesday, America has experienced enormous change in the past thirty years. Particularly significant are the advances in technology that have occurred during the past thirty years. Who would have thought thirty years ago that one could hold a conversation with a stranger on the other side of the world from a computer terminal in Clinton, S.C.?

In light of such technological advances, we at the Blue Stocking believe that PC must make some significant changes to its academic program. By using integrating technology in the classroom with the values of liberal education, PC will, we believe, successfully carry out its mission in the next decade.

Blue Stocking seeks to spark political discussion

On November 3 the citizens of South Carolina will elect cast their ballots in two major elections—the election for Governor and the election for U.S. Senate.

In order to spark on-campus discussion of the issues surrounding the November elections, the Blue Stocking will devote the opinion section of the newspaper to these two elections. This issue of the Blue Stocking focuses on the Senatorial race between incumbent Senator Earnest "Fritz" Hollings (D) and his Republican challenger Bob Inglis.

Earnest "Fritz" Hollings, a former governor of South Carolina is running for reelection to the United States Senate. During Hollings' service, he has founded a solid reputation as a fair and concerned representative of South Carolina. A summary of his past achievements and voting record is more than sufficient to convince South Carolina voters to reelect this proven candidate.

Senator Hollings is a staunch supporter of deficit reduction. He saves and returns a portion of his mail funds and his budget to the U.S. Treasury each year. Senator Hollings has returned $3 million of his own office funds to date. Hollings has been and will continue to be instrumental in federal deficit reduction. Senator Hollings realizes that measures such as his 1993 Budget Act have helped reduce the deficit. Other politicians want to use a perceived surplus to slash taxes, but Hollings opposes any attempts at using dishonest accounting methods to justify raiding Social Security Funds. He proposes to utilize the budget "surplus" to shore up Social Security first. Senator Hollings plans to protect these vital funds with the Pay-As-You-Go Extension Act and the Deficit Integrity Act. These measures will help ensure the both Social Security and

Senator Hollings is funder of public education strongly supported the program. He ensured this national program million. South Carolina $54.1 million for its Head

This public education booster actually saves more than $7 for each dollar invested. Senator Hollings has also helped to double technology grants for South Carolina schools. He is a big supporter of the TRIO Program which helps first generation college students from disadvantaged families pay for higher education.

Senator Hollings is a great promoter of college student aid programs. He defeated a Republican House plan to drastically reduce student aid programs. The Republican plan would force 88,000 students to pay more for college, while at the same time, 21,000 students would be denied. Hollings has also worked hard to serve Student Incentive Grants and the Pell Grant.

Economic development and infrastructure enhancement are crucial to economic expansion in the state. Senator Hollings has worked hard to provide millions in funding for South Carolina airports. This funding has been extremely important in the expansion of the Greenville-Spartanburg airport and the BMW plant. Senator Hollings has found funds for the widening and improvement of I-85, the Mark Clark Expressway, the James Island Bridge, the Isle of Palms Connector, and the Cooper River Bridges. South Carolina's average yearly appropriation of federal highway funds has increased from $232 million to $420 million.

Another big concern for Senator Hollings is the protection of South Carolina workers. He has defended them from noncompetitive and unfair trade agreement that send jobs overseas. He successfully fought against a proposal by the Federal Trade Commission to grant "Made in the USA" labels to products that were manufactured with less than 25% foreign materials or labor.

During this summer's drought, Senator Hollings requested that U.S. Agriculture Secretary, Dan Glickman visit South Carolina. After witnessing the crop devastation, Hollings lobbied hard to have the entire state declared an agricultural disaster area. Senator Hollings has also provided support to South Carolina farmers effected by the recent tobacco legislation. Senator Hollings has developed economic programs to help support tobacco-dependant communities and professional training programs for displaced farmers.

Senator Hollings has made notable progress in guaranteeing access to health care to all South Carolina citizens. To this end, he has helped establish 64 community-run non-profit Health Centers. Senator Hollings supports HMO reform as well.

Hollings is a champion of mothers and children. His policies have included prenatal care programs such as Women, Infants, and Children (WIC). This program provides nutritional supplements for infants and pregnant mothers. In 1990, Senator Hollings led a nationwide drive to combat cervical and breast cancer. South Carolina was among six states involved in a pilot program. Today, South Carolina receives $3 million annually for this program.

Senator Hollings cosponsored the Violence Against Women Act to help ensure women's rights and safety throughout law enforcement and prosecution strategies, as well as victim services. Senator Hollings has maintained funding for another important women's program, the Violence Against Women Prevention Center at MUSC.

Nature conservation is very important to Senator Hollings as well. He supported the passage of the Ocean Act of 1997. This act outlines a plan to save marine life and ecosystems of coastal areas. This plan also includes protection for coastal residents in instances of natural disasters. He has helped preserve important natural areas around Lake Jocassee, and has incorporated them into the Sumter National Forest. Similarly, Senator Hollings was instrumental in the preservation of the Waccamaw National Wildlife Refuge. He secured funding to protect some 50,000 acres of hardwoods and tidal wetlands in Marion, Georgetown, and Horry counties. Senator Hollings also opposes the practice of allowing other states to dump or store their nuclear waste in South Carolina.

Senator Hollings' record speaks for itself. He is a staunch supporter of saving Social Security, public education, college students, economic development, South Carolina workers and farmers, health care (especially for women and children), and conservation.

These measurability of Medicare, also a decision. He has Head Start funding for with $374 now receives Start Program.

Bob Inglis may not be a familiar name to all the students at Presbyterian College. In fact, unless you're from the Greenville area, the red signs with his name and picture may be all you know about Bob Inglis. Inglis has been in the House of Representatives for South Carolina's 4th District since 1992. Inglis is now running for the United States Senate. Inglis's campaign for the South Carolina seat that has been held by Fritz Hollings for 30 years is a simple campaign based on simple principles. Inglis hopes to give South Carolinians a New Senate that listens versus the arrogance that holding power for so long creates. Inglis's campaign focuses on the belief that power and should be re-state rather than hands of Washington.

Inglis's stand on education has been questioned by Hollings. However, the television commercials and radio ads have distorted Inglis's stand on education. He advocates keeping education funds in South Carolina rather than sending 35% of funds to Washington to be watered down by bureaucrats and then sent back to the state. Inglis realizes that 50 years of federal government control over education funds has left South Carolina far behind other states. He suggests that giving state and local government control of these funds will allow for a greater benefit to the state. Inglis advocates reforms such as charter schools, vouchers for low income students, and assistance for home schooling. He believes that local communities and state government should implement these reforms. Inglis also supports parental involvement and commensurate pay for teachers in South Carolina schools. Bob Inglis does support South Carolina's education system, however, he does not follow Senator Hollings reasoning that Washington is the best judge of how to use education dollars.

Bob Inglis believes that the American people are overtaxed. Inglis believes that the tax code should be scrapped, and "replaced with a flat tax on income or a national sales tax." He also supports the elimination of death taxes and capital gains taxes. Inglis believes that the government should get no more than 25 cents for every dollar earned by the American people. Bob Inglis is working for South Carolina. He supports term limits and does not accept money from Political Action Committees. Inglis restricted himself to three two year terms in the House of Representatives. If elected to the Senate, he has promised to limit himself to two six year terms. In early July, Inglis offered a plan to Senator Hollings that would have placed a limit on campaign spending. Hollings rejected the plan that would allow each candidate to spend $3.5 million. "Hollings proposed a Constitutional Amendment that would have authorized Congress to regulate campaign spending," however, he would not agree to follow his own policy in this campaign.

After working in Bob Inglis's Congressional Office in Washington, DC all summer, I have realized how important it is for the people of South Carolina to have a choice between a Washington career politician and a relative newcomer who is truly connected to the people. Although Fritz Hollings has done good things for our state, it is time to introduce a new voice in the Senate. It is time to elect an advocate for South Carolina who believes that the state should be able to control its money. The people of South Carolina need someone who believes in their ability to decide how to fix the education and healthcare systems, not someone who thinks that Washington is the only place these decisions should be made. Bob Inglis supports real solutions which will help secure the future for South Carolina.

"Justice and the Media" lecture series continues with Dr. Jean Elshain Oct. 13

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

On Tuesday, October 13 Presbyterian College will host Dr. Jean Elshain, the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Professor of Social and Political Ethics at the University of Chicago, as part of the Russell Program's 1998-99 lecture series on "Justice and the Media."

A native of Timnath (population 185) in the farm lands of northern Colorado, Elshain attained a bachelor's degree from Colorado State University in 1963 and received her Ph.D. in politics from Brandeis University in 1973. Before her appointment to her current position at the University of Chicago in 1995, Elshain taught at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst and at Vanderbilt University, where she was the first woman in the institutions' history to hold an endowed professorship. Elshain has also served as a visiting professor at Oberlin College, Harvard University and Yale University.

The recipient of four honorary degrees, Elshain was elected a Fellow of The American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1996 and is currently serving as the Vice-President of the American Political Science Association. Furthermore, she is married and the mother of four and the grandmother of three.

Elshain has authored over four hundred essays in scholarly journals and journals of civic operation, has written more than 20 books and writes a regular column for "The New Republic." Her recent book "Democracy on Trial" (1995) was named a "New York Times" notable book and considers the national obsession with rights over responsibilities.

She is currently working on an intellectual biography of Jane Addams.

The Russell Program's "Justice and the Media" lecture series, which is bringing Professor Elshain to PC, seeks to highlight the growing number of glamorous criminal cases and the result of media coverage of those trials and to ask whether the rules have changed accordingly. Other highlighted speakers include former L.A. prosecutor Chris Darden who spoke at PC last month, and former U.S. Senator Paul Simon, who will speak in February.

CHAMPS

Program's education provides awareness, connections for students involved

by Ben Acton
Campus Life Editor

Summer school students were not the only members of the PC community who stayed on campus this summer. Once again, PC was the home of CHAMPS, the PC and Clinton/Laurens community outreach program, now entering its fourth year. The program's goal has been to help educate and prepare community students and their parents about the possibilities of higher education. To accomplish that end, more than 100 CHAMPS students, along with several PC students, who served as group mentors, spent two weeks at PC learning to live and work together. They attended workshops and took field trips, all in the pretext of learning about what opportunities lay before them.

"We learned a lot this summer," said Dr. Jermain Disasa, PC education professor and director of special programs, and the man responsible for overseeing CHAMPS. "We discovered new things about our students, how they are changing. Recognizing this change gives us a picture of what [the program] should be expecting for the upcoming year."

According to Disasa, further involvement by area businesses, the college, and the CHAMPS parents make those expectations bright.

"I am very excited and pleased with the direction CHAMPS is going," said Disasa. "Our parents are beginning to take ownership of the program and work intensively with it, which was our goal from the start. The fact that so many departments were willing to adjust their schedules for our summer program shows a great deal about the willingness on all parties to cooperate, share resources and generate new ideas."

But Disasa also said that the backbone of the program was those PC students who serve as mentors to the CHAMPS students.

"The mentors remain the backbone, both in nurturing the CHAMPS students and keeping them focused and on target," he said. "They develop a strong relationship with the kids [during the summer], and that continues as we do follow-ups later in the year."

Mentor Mark Guthrie, junior, also affirmed the positive effects of such a relationship, not only for the students, but also for the mentors.

"[As a mentor] you can tell the program makes a difference in the kids' lives," said Guthrie. "The CHAMPS students are challenging, but at the same time they are very encouraging. It's been a great positive for everyone involved, especially for me."

Another mentor, junior Lee Davis, agreed and added that some of the kids really surprised her.

"I was really amazed at the students' open-mindedness, the way they came up with new ideas," she said. "They were accepting of a lot of different ideas and made connections with each other."

The connections that the students and mentors make has been carried over beyond the summer experience at PC. As part of CHAMPS follow-up programming, the mentors visit the area schools involved in CHAMPS, as well as attend monthly workshops and field trips with the CHAMPS students. According to Disasa, the follow-ups allow mentors, students and parents to "re-link" personally and also share in an educational experience.

"The last follow-up (on Sept. 26th) was a science workshop, where the students got to make slime and goo. They saw that chemistry could be fun," said Davis.

Mentor Tabitha Wright, sophomore, agreed, adding, "[The follow-ups] have helped me get to know the kids outside of a classroom setting."

Wright, who also has been coordinating the mentors' school visits, also showed insight into another important part of the CHAMPS experience.

"Before CHAMPS, I didn't know my community," she said. "Now I do know it, and I like keeping in touch with the people I've met."

To Disasa, this shows that CHAMPS is also sending the message that the college cares about its community and is also open to have more PC students to help.

"CHAMPS is moving in a strong direction," Disasa said. "Many groups continue to go beyond the normal expectations and responsibility in helping our students. For those who want to, CHAMPS provides a great chance to communicate different ideas on what it takes to cooperate, to see needs and to find solutions."

Students, faculty involved in SNS

by Kelly Williamson
Staff Writer

At least once a week, all the students of Presbyterian College get a small, rectangular piece of fluorescent paper inviting them to SNS. Sunday Night Service, or SNS, is a student-run worship ceremony that takes place on the PC campus.

Some students do not attend this service because they already go to church. There are some other students that throw the precious little piece of paper on the floor because they are uninformed about SNS.

SNS is an informal service that takes place in Edmunds Hall at 6:00 p.m. every Sunday night. The service is a non-denominational praise and worship service and lasts only between 45 minutes and one hour. At the beginning of the service, a candle is lit to signify eternal life. A member of the PC staff gives the devotion, and a student makes the gift offering and makes a small speech or reads a poem. A few simple prayer songs are vocalized and scriptures are recited.

"I don't think that it makes a difference what religion, if any, a student was raised as," said sophomore Michael York. "SNS is just a group of students who want to worship God. It is great to see students and faculty attending the service. It shows that they care about how they worship and how they feel about their spirituality. SNS is not a regular service. God works through each person, and they will get out of it what He wants them to. It helps if they put something into the service, because then the student will get more out of it. The service is understandable even to people who have not had previous church experience. SNS is led by people who care about God and want to share their faith. The great thing about students and faculty participating is that a different perspective is presented every service.

Even if a particular professor is boring in class, he or she may present something very interesting in the service. It is a remarkable growing experience."

The unique element about SNS is that it is completely student-run and founded.

"I don't want any of the credit for starting SNS," said senior Brett Lamb. "It was a God-given vision. I felt a need for a community that was based on the PC campus. I thought that, since PC is a Christian-based college, a church group would be a good way to go. I went and met the chaplain and he was very supportive, as were the rest of the people involved. I feel that it is a blessing in my life, and I hope that it continues."

Amity students bring knowledge, experience to campus

by Kelly Williamson
Staff Writer

Are you already struggling with "¿qué de español?" Or maybe you've gotten stuck in pass/tail French and don't know the difference between a carvat and a croissant. Well, don't start preparing for another semester of introductory foreign language in summer school just yet.

This year PC will again be home to four foreign language students from the Amity program. These students will be assisting the foreign language professors as well as holding help sessions for PC students while taking a few classes of their own.

Out of this year's Amity students, three out of the four are returning for a second year as teaching assistants at PC: Ana Perez of Spain, Manu Charrier of France, and Michael Buerstner of Germany are all veterans in the PC foreign language department. This will be the first year in the Amity program for Bonnie Rodriguez of Peru. She became involved with the program after answering an Amity ad in the newspaper. She chose to come to PC, over an offer in Hawaii, in order to improve her English. Others, like Perez, became involved with the program through applying to a database of foreign language programs.

These programs experience has broadened the scope of these students' own education.

The program has changed my vision of life," Charrier said.

One of the students' activities while at PC will be holding help sessions for foreign language students in Neville Hall room 207 on Mondays through Thursdays in the afternoon. These sessions are designed to give struggling students extra help from students who speak the language first hand.

"It's comforting to know there will always be help when I need it," said Mary Margaret Fouse, Spanish student. The Amity program, which is based in California, matches high schools and colleges with teaching assistants from all over the world. Dr. Mark Cox feels that Amity is a strong program because, "it brings PC students face to face with someone from the culture they are studying."

PC became involved with this program in 1982 with funding for the first three years coming from the National Endowment for Humanities. Now PC fully funds the program.

Four positions are available for foreign language assistants at PC. These positions are filled by applicants who have been selected by the foreign language department. Two Spanish-speaking students, one from Latin America and one from Spain, are selected, as well as one French-speaking student and one German-speaking student. Most of the selectees have obtained a degree and have teaching experience.

If any PC students are interested in being a roommate with an Amity student next year, contact Dr. Colwell this March.

Multicultural Affairs: Diversity Week at PC raises awareness

by Tara Sluder
Staff Writer

Monday, September 21, 1998 kicked off Diversity Week, an annual event sponsored by the Multicultural Student Union and the Office of Multicultural Affairs (MAA).

The event emphasized the diversity that exists on campus and in the community. Chon Glover, the former director of MAA, began Diversity Week in 1992.

programming to the campus that addresses the uniqueness of each individual, yet points out the commonality we share," said Shelia Hill, MA director.

This year's theme was "Diversity is the spice of life." A variety of daily events carried out this theme.

The New Arts Six, an ensemble of six women devoted to the preservation of the African-American arts, performed "A Joyful Noise" Monday night. The musical highlighted the importance of the spiritual form of gospel music.

"I enjoyed the way the women portrayed life in their time through the costume and music," said Kate Howard, freshman.

Tuesday night's Catwalk was a fashion show put on by PC students. Representatives from different groups on campus participated in the show, reflecting their own individual styles. On Wednesday night, just for fun, students gathered for a rousing game of Ultimate Frisbee.

A cultural bowl tested students' knowledge of cultural facts on Thursday night. Teams from various organizations on campus competed in this jeopardy-like game. Sigma Nu took first place, while the teams representing SGA and Zeta Tau Alpha won second and third, respectively.

Of the Diversity Week events, the International Food Fair on Friday afternoon had the highest attendance. As students made their way through Springs to check their mail or eat lunch, the table of free food immediately caught their attention. The wide variety of food there represented a number of countries, including Italy, Greece, Korea, France, Cuba, Mexico, Peru, China and Spain. Students sample such foods as French crepes, causarellena, southern port cheese, lasagna, tortilla de patatas, souvlaki chicken, Latin citrus salsa and arroz con pollo. Bony Rodriguez and Ana Perez, amity scholars from Peru and Spain, respectively, provided several of the dishes. Alfredo's in Laurens and the GDH staff provided food also.

"I think it's good to see different countries represented and everyone enjoying the food," said Brooke Blankinship, senior. Clarybel Peguero, RD in Belk Hall, coordinated the Food Fair.

"It's great to see PC students enjoying the spice of diversity," said Peguero of the Food Fair.

Rocky Sullivan, the president of MSU, served as the overseer of the programs committee for Diversity Week. Sullivan desired that, throughout the week, people would learn from each other's differences.

"Diversity goes deeper than white or black; it includes religion, politics, and community," said Sullivan.

Both Sullivan and Hill expressed their appreciation for the help of Cynthia Shands, Jackie Pearson, and Peguero in making Diversity Week a success. Next year Hill and Sullivan hope that more groups will be represented fully.

"It is important that we have events like Diversity Week where we talk to one another and learn about each other. We learn that we actually have a lot in common," said Hill.

Diversity Week exposed PC students to new ideas and concepts and encouraged us to embrace our differences. As Sullivan said, "Together as one we shall advance."

Baggett embodies campus involvement

by Kay Owen
Managing Editor

He can often be found at the desk in Springs Campus Center. His favorite color is green, and his favorite vegetable is butter beans. And contrary to prolific rumors, he was wearing pants at the Honor Code signing ceremony in August.

He is senior Jon Baggett. Baggett is a senior from Walterboro, SC. During his interview on a sunny afternoon on the porch of the Judicial House, Baggett called

Dr. David Gillespie, vice president for academic affairs. Baggett sees Gillespie as a great teacher and a helpful advisor. Dr. Booker Ingram, professor of political science, has also influenced Baggett.

"He's been another great teacher who I've learned a lot from," Baggett said. "Both he and Gillespie I look up to."

Baggett has worked closely with Dr. Richard Baker, associate professor of philosophy, as he is faculty advisor for

"Though I've never had him for a class, I've gotten to know him

Beyond faculty, the students at PC have also impacted Baggett.

"There are a lot of wonderful people at PC," he said, "and I've made lifetime friends. I can see myself still talking to these people in 20-30 years."

Baggett's family has also taught him values and given him support.

His grandmother imparted the value of service and education, which has carried over into Baggett's life at PC.

Springs offers new workout facilities

by Joe Evans
Staff Writer

In a new era where health and fitness play a major role in our day to day lives, proper exercise facilities are in high demand. Thanks to administrators like Bryan Madden, director of Springs Campus Center, Presbyterian College is now home to cutting edge exercise equipment to satisfy the needs of its student body. This new facility is located on the third floor of the Springs Campus Center for our convenience. Whether you are trying to lose that beer gut or your freshman 15, the Springs Fitness Center is the place to go.

The college's new exercise facilities have evolved from the "pre-historic" multi-exercise machines of the past. The new area includes top of the line aerobic systems from Cybex (the same equipment that is used at the YMCA); in fact, there is an entire room devoted to a good aerobic workout.

"There is much nicer equipment this year and it's a huge improvement over last year," said sophomore Beth Campbell.

"I am not embarrassed to give tours up here like I was in the past," said junior Ann Marie Lassiter.

This room also offers a large television with many channels, a radio and a state of the art water dispenser that serves two temperatures of Alpine Spring Water. It seems that the aerobic room is preferred, because it has all these commodities, but students will be happy to hear that the water is placed in this area to keep it away from non-fitness room users. The Fitness center also offers dozens of resistance machines to help people build and tone their bodies.

"I believe that developing your muscles is like molding a block of clay into a breath-taking vase," said freshman Matt Ballard. "That is why I am so breath taken by the wide variety of exercise equipment for different parts of the body. I am also impressed with the clean and sanitary atmosphere. This area is certainly open to all kinds of lifters."

If students are interested in an actual aerobic class, the new fitness center also has much to offer and the student body is responding. Even though mirrors were just added to the aerobics room, the aerobics room has become obsolete due to a recent rise in participation. Classes have been moved to the gym to support the overwhelming numbers of participants.

People are often turned off by unsanitary conditions in exercise facilities, and they will be happy to hear about the fitness center's emphasis on sanitation.

"Everything is very clean," said junior Natalie Massie, who works at the new health center. "The same ladies that clean Springs clean here everyday."

Students may be concerned about the water, but the staff has taken all precautionary measures to heart. Disposable paper cups are used to prevent the spread of harmful bacteria. Though there are no strict rules to follow when using the facilities, Madden is not a fan of bubble gum, especially when it is spit on the floor. According to Madden, "This rule is enforced not only because of sanitation, but also "because it is hard to get up."

Safety is also very important to the members of the Fitness Center staff. Running is prohibited and yellow and black tape has been placed to cover up the wires that may cause people to trip and fall.

As students marvel at the splendor of their new fitness center, Brian Madden plans for the future. Expansions of the workout room may not be very far away.

"Fitness at PC is a big deal; the students want that, so we try to give it to them," said Madden.

The new facility is located on the third floor of Springs and is open Sunday - Thursday.

Blue Hose Golf: Driving Past the Competition

by Jeremy Carl
Staff writer

"Eric Williamson has a good chance of making all American this year," said Addison. "The freshman group has shown alot of maturity this season," said Addison.

In the first tournament of the year in Topsail, N.C., the team finished third and shot a 307 for the tournament. Eassy lead the way with a score of 72 and Williamson shot a 75. Gardner shot a 79. Stjostrom shot a 81, and Cliff Hicks shot a 92. Eassy's score of 72 ended up being a tournament best.

The men's golf team is led by head coach Tommy Addison. Under his leadership, the team won the SAC conference last year and was nationally ranked 15th in the nation by golf stat.

The team is led by all-conference senior co-captains Chris Eassy, from Greenville, S.C., and Cliff Hicks, from Anderson, S.C. Eric Williamson, a junior from Anderson, S.C., Russ Baggett, a sophomore from Aiken, S.C., Chris Davera, a sophomore from Atlanta, Ga., and Cliff McKinney, a sophomore from Jackson, S.C. provide the team with consistent play. A strong freshman group comprised of Jon Stjostrom from Seneca, S.C., Andrew Gardner from Spartanburg, S.C., Mark Eassy from Spartanburg and Jib Byber from Spartanburg make up the rest of the team.

The two senior co-captains provide great leadership for the team.

"Chris Eassy will probably win all conference this year," said Coach Addison. "I always can count on Cliff Hicks to hold the team together," said Addison.

Stadium

able to host post season tournaments in the near future," said Dr. John V. Griffith, president of Presbyterian College.

This new soccer facility could not have happened without many generous donations. Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Martin wanted to give back to PC because two of their sons had played soccer for Coach Polson.

"We wanted to make coach Polson's dreams of a new soccer stadium come true and to give back to the PC community because Polson has done a lot for our sons Michael and Mark," said Mrs. Martin.

We needed to move PC's soccer programs up to the next level, and by building this new stadium, PC can compete with any soccer complex in the SAC," said Michael Martin, who graduated in 1993 and was captain of the men's soccer team.

One of the big concerns that has been a problem for both programs is being able to host tournaments here. Last year, the women's soccer team was able to host the first round of the NCAA Division II, but Purcell had to put in extra effort just to host the game here because PC did not have the right facility to host such a big game. This year the same problems faced the men's program. PC hosted its own tournament, but after days of continuous rain before the tournament, the Ponderosa was to wet to play on. PC had to move the first day of the tournament to USC Spartanburg to let the Ponderosa dry out. With this new facility, PC will be able to host the SAC Conference Tournament and other postseason tournaments.

"This new stadium will enhance PC athletics and with soccer being the fastest growing sport in the world, the coaches and the student athletes deserve to play in this type of atmosphere," said athletic director Alan Morris.

Mr. Bob Edens played soccer for PC in the 1970's when it was just a club sport. According to him, PC needs this kind of stadium because he has been to Duke, North Carolina, USC and Virginia and has seen how their soccer complexes fit their teams' soccer needs.

"This was a dream of mine, and it is the best way I know how to give back to PC by helping them build this new soccer stadium," said Mr. Edens.

The total to build this soccer stadium is estimated at $850,000. PC has raised $400,000 according to Mr. Edens. This year will be used to raise the rest of the money for the soccer stadium. Next fall is planned for the start of construction of the new stadium with the 1999-2000 soccer season being played in this new stadium.

PC will be able to compete with Wofford College, Furman University and Davidson College with the completion of this soccer stadium. Each of these programs have state-of-the-art soccer facilities for their teams and each of these programs can host postseason tournaments.

"This new stadium is going to help our attendance and give us the ability to play night games," said Purcell.

"This soccer complex is a must need if you want to be sincere about competition," said Michael Louter, assistant men's soccer coach. "This stadium fits the style of this school."

"I am looking forward to the completion of this stadium so we will be able to host post season tournaments in the near future," said Polson.

Davidson.

Williamson shot a 144. Gardner shot a 145. Stjostrom shot a 156. Padgett shot a 153. Eassy shot a 148.

At the First National South Intercollegiate Tournament in Florence, SC, the team finished ninth with a team score of 905. The team had a first round score of 295, a second round score of 303, and a third round score of 307. Williamson lead PC's scores with a 215 for the tournament. Stjostrom ended up with a 230 for the tournament. Padgett shot a 232 for the tournament. Gardner and Eassy both shot a 233 for the tournament.

The team is tied for first place with USC-Aiken in District 3 North in NCAA Division II. Coach Addison's goal for the team is to win the Conference again and receive a bid to the National Tournament.

"I also hope we can improve on our national ranking," said coach Addison.

"The whole team has stepped up a notch this year," said sophomore Cliff McKinney.

"The team has played excellent so far with the help of a freshmen class that is playing like experienced upperclassman" said Chris Eassy.

Cunningham named SAC Player of the Week

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The PC football team won a key conference victory over Tusculum Saturday 28-6. PC avoided turnovers and was able to move the ball to get to a 3-2 overall record and 2-1 conference record.

Freshman Todd Cunningham was named the SAC Pepsi Player of the week. He came off the bench to throw 13 of 21 for 225 yards and three touchdowns. Starting quarterback, Blake Wilkey went down in the first quarter after breaking his collar bone. He could miss the rest of the season. Troy Gamble came in to replace Wilkey on the first scoring drive. He scored on a two yard running play to give PC a 7-0 lead.

Cunningham came in and hit wide receiver Di Young for a 46 yard touchdown pass early in the second quarter.

With 12 seconds left, Tusculum kicked a 32 yard field goal. PC took a 14-3 halftime lead.

In the second half, Cunningham came out firing and threw two touchdown passes to Travis Smith. The touchdown passes were 28 and 35 yard passes.

Smith led the receiving corps with four catches for 78 yards.

Kevin Maloney led the PC defense with 11 hits and Gamble had 10 hits. The defense held Tusculum to 84 yards rushing and intercepted one pass.

Tomorrow, PC will take on Catawba for Homecoming at 3:00.

Rookie Coach Paces PC Volleyball Team

By Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Blue Hose women's volleyball team stands at 1-10 overall and 1-5 in the SAC for the season. New head coach Lisa Bugay returns five upperclassmen and six new faces. PC is trying to extend two streaks this season. They have finished in the top three in the SAC regular season since the conference has been in existence for nine years and they are also trying to extend a 20-win season for the 13 years straight.

PC stepped out of the conference to play the University of South Carolina Spartanburg volleyball team on October 1. PC lost 15-10, 15-6 and 16-14.

On September 29, the Blue Hose dropped a tough match against Mars Hill. PC lost in four games 15-3, 11-15, 15-6 and 15-5. Kinsley Crave had 9 kills and 4 total blocks. Rachel Bishop had 8 kills and 13 digs while Jenell Sanders had 32 assists. Stephanie Cloud led the team with 19 digs.

The Blue Hose lost in straight sets to Lenoir-Rhyne on September 24. PC stayed with it lost 15-7, 15-5, and 16-14. Cloud led the Blue Hose with 10 kills and Merrill Wood had eight kills. Sanders led PC with 21 assists and 10 digs.

PC traveled to Boiling Springs, North Carolina to battle conference foe Gardner-Webb. Gardner-Webb was picked to finish first in the Preseason SAC Coaches Poll. The Blue Hose played a tough match but lost in four games 15-2, 14-16, 15-12, and 15-10.

On September 16, the Blue Hose traveled to Salisbury, North Carolina and lost to Catawba College in three games 15-2, 15-10, and 15-5. PC played tough in game two. PC scored the first four points and Catawba came back to take an 8-4 advantage. PC rallied back to take 10-8 lead and then Catawba won the next seven points to take the game.

PC played perhaps its best match of the season against Wingate on September 14. The Blue Hose lost in five games. PC controlled the match by winning the first two games but Wingate rallied and won the final three games for a 5-15, 10-15, 15-10, 15-4, 15-7 victory. Aisha Walker led the Blue Hose with a match high 20 kills. Cloud had 18 kills and Sanders had 43 assists for the Blue Hose.

Women's Soccer team tied for first in the SAC

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

With eight games under their belt this season, the PC women's soccer team's record stands at 5-3 overall and a strong 3-1 in SAC Conference play. The Blue Hose are currently tied with Mars Hill College for the top team in the conference.

This past week, the team played two away games, the first against Mars Hill college in North Carolina and the second in Charlotte against Queens College.

"These games are the two extremes of our season," said Coach Purcell. "It's been a bit of a rollercoaster ride season. When we've been good, we're quite good, but we've been a bit inconsistent."

The women's soccer team continued SAC conference play with a game against Mars Hill Lions on Tuesday, September 29th. After a hard fight against Mars Hill College, the Blue Hose lost 1-0. The Lady Blue Hose attempted 5 shots on their goal, but none of them found their way into the net. Out of the 6 shots hit by Mars Hill, only one scored. This goal was shot with only 19 seconds remaining in the first half. Senior goaltender Sarah Price defended the goal valiantly for PC, playing the full 90 minutes and tallying up 5 saves. For the season, this raised her total saves to an outstanding 41 saves.

"The Mars Hill game was a really disappointing loss especially since it was a conference game."

Their next game of the week was played against Queens College on Saturday, October 3. The game proved to be an incredible one for the Blue Hose, downing Queens 2-1.

"The Queens game was a really big game for the team. The excitement level was beyond comparison. The momentum of the win should carry us through the season," said freshman Shannon McCall.

The game began with a goal early on by senior Diane Hancock. Fellow senior Heather Jones assisted with a pass across the box. Hancock hammered the ball straight into the net. Hancock has had a strong season this year with four goals and an assist.

"It was probably one of my best goals of the year," said Hancock. "Everyone put forth total effort. It was the best overall performance we've displayed all year."

The second goal came at the tail end of the first half. Lucy Evans, a junior, dribbled the ball down the field and then crossed it to senior Rebecca Monroe. Monroe scored for the team, assuring the 2-1 win. This key goal was Monroe's first for the season, and she has also contributed and assist for the team. Sarah Price had another excellent game in the goal with four saves for the day.

The single goal scored by the Queens College team came on a penalty kick during the first half. Neither team scored during the second half of play.

"The second half was spent mostly with us attacking. We had a lot of goal scoring opportunities," said newcomer Kim Counts, who has already scored one goal this season as a freshman.

"We bounced back this weekend and had a really good win over Queens. This was the best performance by our ladies that I have seen all season by far. Our juniors and seniors really came through and performed. They took us over the top. I was extremely pleased with the overall performance," said head coach Purcell.

SAC Conference play continues on October 7 with a home game against Wingate University. On October 11, the Lady Blue Hose play another home game against University of North Florida.

The Rear End: Junior Spotlight on Ben Edwards

by Robbie Bryan
and Amos Disasa

The ever-popular Junior Spotlight focuses this week on Greenville, S.C. native Ben "Jun-Tao" Edwards. He currently resides on the fourth floor of Georgia dorm with his two kids, wife and roommates Drew Stephen and Erik Anderson. He has been married for three years and is very proud of his two kids. His oldest and only son, Keith Steen, is a sophomore at PC and plays on the Blue Hose soccer team. But his pride and joy, the apple of his eye, and the center of his universe, is his only daughter, Lee Davis. Lee is currently a PC junior, who spends most of her quality time cheerleading for the Blue Hose football team.

"Daddy is my biggest inspiration. He constantly is reminding me that it takes discipline and charisma to survive. I think the world of him," says Davis.

Keith was not available for comment after he was grounded for being in Drew Duffey's room.

Ben credits his childraising skills to his father, Booker Ingram who is a professor in the political science department.

"My dad was tough on me, so now I'm going to be tough on my kids. I love em' to death, so I always tell em' that this is going to hurt me more than it is going to hurt you."

This summer Ben left the kids and his wife for a short period, and served, as an intern at Wal-Mart Distribution Center in Laurens. Ben fondly recalls shooting ball on break, having a good time loading trucks and drinking a lot of soda.

"Laurens was a good place to get away. The Distribution Center provided me with a new life. My fellow employees took me in like a brotha'. Beforehand my life at Presbyterian sucked, and I was mad at everyone but Chris Digby. Now I'm still mad at everyone, but when I'm anxious to get physically aggressive, I remember my days at Wal-Mart and laugh hysterically. Yea, Wal-Mart was good to have...and to use...chemically...chemistry."

When asked what he most wanted to tell people, Ben replied, "I love my wife-but women be shopping. You can't stop a woman from shopping!"

Students get involved in upcoming election campaigns

by Dan Hart
Editor-in-Chief

After months of campaigning, candidates for political office in South Carolina and throughout the nation eagerly await Election Day 1998, when voters around the country will cast their ballots for their elected officials.

While few people would categorize Presbyterian College as a campus full of political activists, the excitement of the 1998 elections has not gone unnoticed at PC. In the past few months two candidates for major political office have visited the campus, and students have volunteered their time and energy to support the candidates of their choice.

Earlier this semester Congressman Bob Inglis (R-4th District) visited PC as part of his "Spirit of Carolina Tour" in his campaign for the U.S. Senate, while last Thursday S.C. gubernatorial candidate Jim Hodges (D) visited the PC campus and chatted with students and administrators.

Inglis spoke with PC students over dinner at Greenville Dining Hall and shared his vision for a new Senate. During his visit to PC, Hodges also shared his ideas to improve South Carolina during a question and answer session with students in a Southern Politics class taught by Chris Grant, instructor of political science. Most questions involved Hodges's controversial plan to enact a lottery in South Carolina, which, he believes, will provide $150-200 million surplus for education.

PC students have been involved in the fall campaigns in more ways than simply meeting candidates. Two PC students have volunteered their time this summer and fall working on the Senate campaign.

Junior Mindy Powers served as an intern for Inglis in his Washington office this summer and is now assisting the Inglis campaign for the U.S. Senate.

"Before I worked for Inglis this summer, I wasn't sure how much I supported him, but I found that he stands for the same things that I stand for," said Powers. "His campaign for the Senate is something I believe in."

Powers has worked once a week this fall for the Inglis campaign. Because her Washington internship provided her with experience answering phone calls, Powers frequently calls Inglis supporters and urges them to support the campaign financially.

This past week Powers has worked every day for the campaign. She has called voters and urged them to vote for Inglis.

While, according to Powers, some people have mentioned that they are tired of politics in general in the wake of the Clinton scandal, Powers noted that people are usually receptive to the calls.

Senior Elizabeth Pearson served as an intern this summer in the campaign to reelect Sen. Fritz Hollings (D).

Pearson, an English and political science double major, said that she desired an internship in some area of politics in order to determine whether or not she may want to pursue politics as a career following graduation. Working for a campaign was particularly attractive to Pearson because, she noted, campaigns are very different from other political activities.

According to Pearson, the common statement that campaigns are "controlled chaos" is accurate, but she added that she loved working for the Hollings campaign.

"I learned a lot more about campaigns in general," said Pearson. "Campaigns have become a cottage industry. You can make a career of campaigns...I never considered campaigns before, but I got job offers through my internship."

Pearson said that the Hollings campaign was particularly attractive to her.

"Fritz is an incumbent," said Pearson. "He has experience and knows what you need to do to run a good campaign. The campaign also appealed to me because Hollings is a moderate, old-school Democrat."

Students publicly support candidates of their choice.

Pearson worked with the finance director of the Hollings campaign and thereby gained first-hand knowledge of how campaign fundraising is carried out. Pearson also assisted with a few Upstate campaign activities and a commercial shot at a school—a commercial in which her younger sister appeared with other children.

In addition, other students are participating in the campaign excitement by displaying posters or bumper stickers for the candidates of their choice and by attending political rallies.

According to freshman John Penn, chairman of the PC chapter of the College Republicans, a number of Republican students traveled to Furman yesterday for the final gubernatorial debate between Gov. Beasley and Mr. Hodges.

POINT

Despite Clinton scandals, students should exercise right to vote in November elections

Election Day 1998 is only a few days away, and, in light of the imminent House, Senate, gubernatorial and local elections, we at the "Blue Stocking" encourage all members of the PC community to exercise their right to vote this November.

Considering the Clinton scandals that have smeared the front pages of our nation's newspapers in the past few months, we are not surprised that a number of voters have expressed that they are somewhat less than enthusiastic about voting this year. For many Americans, the Clinton scandals are merely the climax to the steady erosion of principles in public policy. Many voters, particularly college students, see America's political system as hopelessly corrupt and incapable of reform, or they at least place little hope in the effectiveness of their individual votes to bring about change.

The current political skepticism among college students and other voters is understandable and perhaps even somewhat desirable. College students today are apparently aware that politics is not a panacea and that lasting social change more often comes from the bottom up, rather than from the top down. In addition, recent studies have shown that today's students, while less interested in politics than previous generations, exhibit great willingness to participate in volunteer activities.

Nevertheless, we worry that our democratic system is in danger of suffering an untimely death if political skepticism becomes political apathy. When individual voters decide that their votes are not important, when citizens consider government corruption too great to fight, when Americans fail to take an interest in their political traditions, democracy is ultimately sacrificed to a junta of special interests.

If the American people are dissatisfied with politics as usual, they must voice their opinions through the ballot box. And so, we strongly urge all voters to let their voices be heard next Tuesday--for the sake of democracy.

Editor's Notes

Political discussion continues in issue 5

In the last issue of the "Blue Stocking" we featured a discussion of the U.S. Senate race between Democratic incumbent Sen. Earnest "Fritz" Hollings and his Republican challenger Congressman Bob Inglis with op-ed pieces by Mindy Powers and Will Edwards. This issue focuses on the S.C. gubernatorial race between Republican incumbent Gov. David Beasley and his Democratic challenger, Jim Hodges.

Corrections

Please note the following corrections from issue 5:

*The headline for the article about the new soccer stadium should have read "Soccer teams to receive new stadium," not "Men's soccer to receive new stadium." We apologize to the women's soccer team for failing to include them in the headline.

*The article on the PC golf team was last year's article. The appropriate article, with updates, appears on page 7 of this issue. Our apologies to the golf team.

*The article about the Sunday Night Service was written by Kathryn Mehl, not Kelly Williamson.

This month has been filled with many exciting activities, and I hope that you have had the opportunity to be a part of them. PC came alive the weekend of Homecoming as our sixteenth president, Dr. Griffith, was inaugurated. Several students marched in the procession as student representatives during the ceremony, and the SGA would like to thank those organizations that were a part of Dr. Griffith's Inaugural Celebration the night before. We had lots of students and faculty come to help us celebrate as the Sounds of Motown entertained us. Our annual Miss Catawba Pageant was a huge success. Thanks to those organizations who sponsored our beautiful "drag queens," as well as to Dr. Hudson, Mike Rosolino, Chris Grant and Sheila Hill, who judged the pageant.

Jay Blount, representing SVS, and Dan Lancaster, representing SUB, tied for the second runner-up position. First runner-up was given to Bob Hill, who represented WF, and our 1998 Miss Catawba was Grant Gillespie, a senior representing the Dance Team. Congratulations to the contestants and thanks to everyone for helping make it a fun-filled activity once again this year.

The Student Union Board did an excellent job planning the Homecoming activities for the week. Dr. Griffith presented the winning organizations with a third place prize of $50 to Alpha Delta Pi, FCA, WF, SEE and AIBS. A prize of $100 was given to the Dance Team, the second place winners. And Zeta Tau Alpha received a prize of $300 for winning the Homecoming activities. Congratulations to these organizations, and thanks again for making Homecoming a huge success.

Due to the fact that the Homecoming events did not allow us to have Blue Sox, Blue Sox has been rescheduled for Friday, Nov. 13 before the PC vs. Newberry football game. More information will be given at a later date. The SGA has their annual Silent Auction on Saturday, Oct. 31 during Parent's Weekend. The auction will be held on the first floor of Springs during the football game, so please stop by and bid on all the gifts from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

h o p e everyone's parents have a safe trip here this weekend as we welcome them to our "home away from home."

I would also like to congratulate our three sororities on a successful rush this past week. Fraternity rush has begun and we wish each of them good luck on an equally successful rush from Oct. 26-Nov. 6. Good luck also to SVS on their Halloween Carnival Thursday, Oct. 29 from 3:00 to 5:30 in Springs gym. I hope everyone has enjoyed their semester thus far as we advance into another month full of excitement on PC's campus. Have a safe and happy Halloween!

Hodges exemplifies positive character

My Turn

Andrew Folks

I support Jim Hodges for governor, and I encourage you to support him as well. Jim Hodges is a South Carolina native, and he is from my hometown of Lancaster, where he was educated in the public schools and worked in the cotton mills. Mr. Hodges, his wife, Rachel, and their young boys live just down the road from my house, and they have been longtime friends of my family. I know them very well.

Jim Hodges used his public education to become a successful professional. A graduate of USC Columbia (79) and the USC School of Law (82), Hodges currently works in Lancaster as a lawyer for The Springs Company. Hodges has served as Lancaster County attorney. His outstanding legal work and community service have not gone unnoticed. The S.C. Bar Association awarded him the Complete Lawyer Silver Medalion in 1994.

Jim Hodges is a Christian. He has never faltered at finding time for his religious faith. He is a lifetime member of the First United Methodist Church in Lancaster. He has served as a Sunday school teacher at the church for over a decade.

Jim Hodges is a statesman. He represented Lancaster in the S.C. General Assembly for ten years and has served previously as the House minority leader. He was named "Legislator of the Year" in 1993 by the South Carolina Chamber of Commerce.

Jim Hodges is a moderate who is a listener to all segments of society. Because he grew up in a mill town and is not independently wealthy, Hodges brings an outstanding understanding of and sympathy for the hard working South Carolina family. And Jim Hodges is no extremist. Republicans, Democrats and independents alike call him a moderate.

Jim Hodges is an advocate for better public education in South Carolina, and he will be committed to rebuilding it. If elected, Hodges plans to establish a pre-kindergarten initiative so that all South Carolina preschoolers have the chance to enter school ready to learn. Hodges wants to reduce the size of all classes in South Carolina.

capping them at 15 students per classroom. Children who consistently disrupt classes will be assigned to attend special discipline schools away from the classrooms they disturb.

Jim Hodges does not want to raise taxes. Most people know of the success of the HOPE scholarship funded by a state run lottery and its positive impact on education in Georgia. Mr. Hodges advocates a state run lottery here in South Carolina, as well. Funds from this lottery would be committed to providing full scholarships to all South Carolina graduates who have a B average and who attend a state university or technical school in South Carolina.

A believer in fiscal responsibility, Hodges wants to improve our educational system without a tax increase. A lottery is a voluntary tax. No one has to play. And if all of the lottery money is committed to education, we all win—better education and no new taxes.

I think Hodges's educational plan has special significance for all of us here at PC. If you are from South Carolina and tired of being accused of getting a lousy education in this state, then here is your chance to do something about it. If you are a professor here or work here and have kids in school, are you not tired of worrying about the quality of their education? Here is your chance to do something about that, too.

Jim Hodges loves the natural beauty of South Carolina and wants to protect it. He wants to end the flow of nuclear waste to the Barnwell site. As governor, he will stop other states from shipping their nuclear waste here.

Jim Hodges is morally sound and believes in moral development. Since his religious life is important to him, Hodges has proposed an initiative that will allow all South Carolinians to express their religious faith. The initiative would include a public monthly prayer breakfast, making school property available to religious and church groups and a moment of silence in South Carolina public schools for prayer, reflection or quiet contemplation.

The philosopher Socrates stressed that a man's public and private life should mirror each other. Jim Hodges exemplifies this idea, and if you are skeptical, I encourage you to look again at the words that describe him: South Carolina native, successful professional, Christian, statesman, moderate, advocate for education, protector of the environment, morally sound. I know that is what I want in a governor. How about you? I encourage you to vote Hodges for governor.

Beasley provides excellent leadership for S.C.

I was enjoying a legendary "Bird Dog" at Harry's restaurant when I realized the establishment distributed more than just great food and ice cream. Bright yellow signs decorated the storefront and a "fact sheet" graced the front door. Amid the amazing noise a video poker machine made, I spotted paraphernalia on the counter and a Jim Hodges button on a woman's shirt in the next candy-applied booth. It didn't take the fine education I'm receiving at PC to realize the connection. The gambling industry stands behind the Jim Hodges campaign, not just in ideology, but with deep pocket

One of the key issues in the governor's race appears to be whether or not South Carolina will have a lottery. However, the governor has no official role in whether a lottery goes on the ballot. Moreover, both incumbent David Beasley and Democratic candidate Hodges support a public vote on a lottery. They believe the people should decide whether we have a lottery. Beasley has voiced his opposition to a lottery but believes the legislature and people should settle the debate.

After renouncing the distracting lottery issue, the main issue is clearly leadership. David Beasley has provided outstanding leadership as the 113th Governor of South Carolina. Beasley began an aggressive campaign of "putting families first" from the moment he took the oath of office. Halfway through his first term, there were dramatic results: record-breaking capital investment, welfare case loads cut by half, new technology and investments in the classroom and tougher criminal sentencing.

During Beasley's first three years in office, taxes fell by $900 million. Under Beasley, South Carolina has experienced tremendous economic growth. South Carolina's unemployment has gone from the fifteenth highest in the nation to the seventh lowest. Job creation from new investment has increased 75 percent over the three previous years. In the same period, capital investment doubled to nearly $17 billion, creating 80,000 new jobs.

David Beasley believes in a common sense approach to education. He isn't assigning blame to certain groups. Instead, he has worked for tough, back-to-the-basics academic standards that mea-

My Turn

Mark Guthrie

recommendations were signed into law this year.

PASS is a real-world accountability system that includes grade-by-grade standards, state tests to make sure standards are being met and "public school report cards" that grade every school on how well their students are learning. To recruit and retain the best teachers, the Governor succeeded in raising teachers' compensation above the Southeastern salary average for the first time in South Carolina's history. Beasley has overseen state budgets that devote more than half of all spending to education. He believes that investing in our state's education can work when coupled with high expectations, tough standards and real innovation.

The governor has worked hard to make higher education available to qualified students, regardless of their ability to pay. Governor Beasley created South Carolina's first need-based college scholarship. More than $9 million have gone to expand the Palmetto Fellows program, which then Representative David Beasley forged ten years ago. This year, many PC students saw their tuition drop $2000 thanks to the Governor's Life Scholarship plan.

David Beasley has shown South Carolina how a public servant would run the Governor's Office. He delivers on his promises and continues to work tirelessly for the interests of the people. Politicians of this quality are hard to find. My absentee ballot will be cast for David Beasley.

PC IN BRIEF

SUB, Russell Committee procure grant to show new-release films

Presbyterian Students, this information could save you a dollar. Thanks to donations from the Russell Committee and the hard work of Student Union Board members, the Richardson Science Hall will be home to the college's own movie theater. Starting November 20, movies like "Armageddon", "The Truman Show", "The Mask of Zorro", and "Lethal Weapon 4" will be featured on the Richardson big screen, absolutely free. These films will be shown on Friday nights with two shows—one at 7:00 and another as a 10:00 matinee. The films will be shown in Whitelaw Auditorium in Richardson.

Dana Becker, the leader of the organization of the new, on-campus movies, entertains the idea of popcorn and other refreshments.

"We want this to be as much like a real movie theater as we can make it," said Becker.

When the Student Union board and the Russell committee go with something, they go all the way.

"If you're gonna go (you're gonna go), at least go with buttered popcorn," said Becker.

Kappa Alpha Order receives probation, rush restrictions

by Ben Acton
Campus Life Editor

Due to charges of PC alcohol violations and hazing, PC's Beta Pi Chapter of Kappa Alpha Order will not be able to participate in fall rush activities. The decision to suspend KA's rush functions was made by the Interfraternity Council (IFC) after an investigation by Joe Nixon, dean of students, and national representatives of KA into the charges. The charges were first brought to Dean Nixon's attention via an anonymous e-mail, as well as an anonymous letter through campus mail in September of this year.

"The e-mail I received was also sent to the national offices of KA," said Nixon. "[The e-mail] expressed concern over some of the actions of the Beta Pi chapter. The anonymous campus mail I received expressed those same concerns."

After receiving these letters Nixon was in contact with the Province Commander for KA in South Carolina, Mr. Bob Lyon. Both Lyon and Nixon met with the president and members of KA and determined that further investigation would be required.

The KA national office then sent their own consultant to meet with Nixon and the membership of KA to more fully investigate the allegations. After a two to three day investigation, the consultant and Nixon confirmed that there had been inappropriate conduct on the part of the chapter. KA was then charged in an IFC hearing for hazing and two counts of PC alcohol policy violation, Articles 5B and 5E in the Knapsack. The IFC found KA guilty on all charges, a decision upheld by the Appeals Board on October 21.

"For [violating] 5B and 5E, KA was shut down for 10 days and fined $125," said John Ballard, senior and president of IFC. "For the hazing infractions, they were denied their right to rush and pledge students this fall semester. KA may take pledges in the spring semester."

According to Nixon, KA also received sanctions from the national office. "The National Office... placed KA on disciplinary probation for one year, and KA will also receive visits from a national consultant in November and again in the spring," said Nixon.

In addition, KA is required to pay a 20 percent insurance premium surcharge for one year and must hold a risk-management workshop this fall and create a risk-management action plan to avoid future violations.

"These sanctions are intended to be educational and corrective, rather than punitive," continued Nixon.

In Ballard's mind the sanctions against the alcohol and hazing violations also provide another effect.

"While KA's actions would not generally cause any long-term and lasting effects, hazing in any light is ugly and not permissible," said Ballard. "The student body should be proud of the IFC for setting such a high precedent."

Nixon agreed, saying, "I think the actions by the IFC were a strong statement that there would be zero-tolerance for hazing."

KA president Beau Cannington, senior, had the following comments on the situation:

"As active president of Kappa Alpha Order, Beta Pi chapter, I would first like to formally apologize to anyone, especially faculty and Kappa Alpha alumni, whom Kappa Alpha recently let down because of the incidents that occurred last year," said Cannington. "As a chapter, we are well aware that our actions have reflected negatively on ourselves as well as Presbyterian College, and for this we can only apologize. Although we have made an error in judgement, we still feel that we have the ability to correct what was wrong in the past and move optimistically to the future."

Inauguration: October 9&10

Dr. John V. Griffith speaks at his inauguration Oct. 10. His speech concentrated on the focus of the college in the coming century. The ceremony began with a large procession from Neville Hall to the West Plaza. Representatives from nation-wide colleges and universities, as well as PC faculty and students, marched. Griffith completed the line of dignitaries.

"I think it was a positive thing that the school had student representatives involved in the inauguration because we are the representatives of college institutions as well as the schools across the nation are," said Laura Keely, Student Government Association president. "We are the success of PC. The students represented PC in a way that showed the other institutions as well as Dr. Griffith that this is our home and that we take pride in the future of PC."

Griffith thanks junior Anna Gasque for her gift from Delta Omicron at the Blue Sox Inauguration Party. The party was held in Springs the night before inauguration. Students and faculty danced to The Sounds of Motown band, and campus organizations presented Griffith with gifts honoring his presidency.

"The party was not only fun for the students who came, but also for the faculty, staff and Dr. Griffith, because there was interaction on an out-of-classroom basis," said Keely. "The organizations did a wonderful job of being creative with their gifts they presented to Dr. Griffith."

Staff Spotlight

Sgt. Revis takes students' safety seriously

by Joe Evans
Staff Writer

Outside Presbyterian College's campus is a world scared by crime and violence. Police officers are called to deal with criminals of all shapes and sizes on a daily basis. When dealing with hardened street thugs, a man of the badge is forced to intimidate and incriminate a criminal into submission. Fortunately, not all public safety officers use this approach.

"I really enjoy working with the kids," said Sgt. Jim Revis of PC Public Safety. "I'm not here to put people in jail. Our job is to take care of the kids, that's first priority. We've all made mistakes, I understand that. I just want kids to know they have a friend."

This issue's Staff Spotlight features a man that all students now have permission to call Sarge. I wanted to encounter Sgt. Revis in his element, and for this reason, the interview was held in his squad car. Here I could see what Revis was really all about. I could see the man underneath the badge. I saw a man who enjoys a wide variety of foods, including mainly vegetables to avoid high blood pressure, and who models himself after Andy Griffith's Barney Fife. I even saw a man who understands the real importance of a squad car.

"If you had the opportunity to trade in your squad car for a horse, would you do it?" I asked.

"No, it would get cold," said Revis.

the keys to the pair of handcuffs that chained my journalistic hands together, and I was unable to write anything for the last three hours that we were together. However, I was able to see first hand how Public Safety comes together in an emergency situation and I know I had a greater opportunity to see the real Sgt. Revis.

In closing, all I have to say is, "Sgt. Revis—what a great guy."

A person is dedicated enough to look for it. Revis's den is filled with awards from various organizations praising his hard work and dedication in every thing he does. Plaques, certificates and even a trophy sailfish are displayed across the walls. However, Sgt. Revis does not serve his community for personal gain.

"I don't care about the awards. I just get a real blessing out of helping people," said Revis. "That is all the thanks I need."

Unfortunately, after this picture was taken, Sgt. Revis realized that he did not have the last three hours that we were together. However, I was able to see first hand how Public Safety comes together in an emergency situation and I know I had a greater opportunity to see the real Sgt. Revis.

In closing, all I have to say is, "Sgt. Revis—what a great guy."

Simpson finds 'niche' at PC

by Ben Acton
Campus Life Editor

When did you know PC was the place, the school for you? For senior Sara Simpson it was the moment she first stepped on campus.

"On my first visit, I could tell it was the right place for me," said the Tampa, FL native. "I just really fell in love with it."

And the PC experience fell in love with her. For the past four years Simpson has been involved in numerous organizations including Stirlings, SVS, Celtic Cross, the Preministerial Society, Radio PC (where she co-hosts a show Tuesdays at 12 p.m.) and Westminster Fellowship.

This year Simpson is the moderator of Westminster Fellowship, or WF, and she counts her involvement in the group important as her most PC activity.

Fellowship found my said "It's where I of my and it's to develop ship skills."

"Westminster is where I niche," Simpson met most friends, helped me my leader-

But Simpson also credits her study abroad experience in China, where she was away from her comfort zone, as being very influential.

"The semester in China changed my life," she said. "It gave me direction and also helped me appreciate PC as a Christian community."

In addition, Simpson spent her spring break last year in Honduras in conjunction with the Third World Seminar course. Simpson and her classmates spent a week in Honduras, learning about the country and culture of the Third-World nation. She said both trips were major influences on her.

"Both China and Honduras really challenged me," Simpson said of her foreign experiences. "I was challenged for the first time to be a minority, but at the same time I got to share my experience with a lot of great people."

Besides shaping and expanding her views on the world, Simpson's studies abroad have also given her an idea of what she might want to do for her future.

Simpson, an English major, has said she would like to go overseas and teach English in Asia or perhaps teach English as a second language in the States.

Whatever she does, Simpson says that she will always carry a memory of the PC community with her.

"I will always remember the community, the friendships and the professors who have been role models for me," said Simpson. "PC has given me the chance to figure out who I am and discover what I want in life."

And Simpson also has advice for the freshman and others who would follow in her path.

"Do not declare a major until you absolutely have to—that's my best advice," said Simpson. "But, seriously, leave yourself open to the opportunities out there and don't miss out on a chance of a lifetime."

Depth at guard paces women's basketball

by Jeff Walker
Sports Editor

The Blue Hose women's basketball team is coming off a 23-8 overall record with an 11-3 SAC conference record. The team finished first in the SAC and captured the SAC Conference Championship. The team finished fourth in the South Atlantic Region and lost in the second round of the NCAA Division II Tournament to Bowie State, 63-59.

Head Coach Beth Couture returns for her tenth year. Couture has an overall 163-92 record. She will have help this year from first-year assistant coaches Leigh Irwin and Dee Nichols. Irwin is a 1995 graduate of PC and Nichols is a graduate of Georgia Southern University.

Couture returns four starters and 11 letterwinners. Gone from last year's squad are Denyel Barman, Tonya Kelley and Alice Ridgill. Kelley earned first team All-SAC honors with 9.6 points per game and 5.9 rebounds per game.

"We will be very young at the post position this year, but we will come around there," said Couture.

Men's soccer defeats Morehouse, Lander; loses heartbreaker to Catawba

by Amy Kukla
Staff Writer

With two more games remaining in the regular season, the men's soccer team stands at 8-8 overall and 3-4 in the SAC conference. The Blue Hose defeated two of the last three teams that they faced.

"We have stepped up the level of practice and increased communication on the field. The intensity is super high right now," said Michael Louter, assistant coach of the Blue Hose.

Over fall break, the men's team travelled to Georgia. At Morehouse College on Oct. 16, the team defeated Morehouse at their home in Atlanta, Ga. with an impressive performance by the Blue Hose to rise to victory. The final score was 3-0. Freshman Pat Mangan scored with an assist from Warren Turner, and freshman Jason Prince added a goal, his second of the season.

On October 21, the men's team travelled to Greenwood, S.C. to battle Lander University. They Williams scored both goals for the Blue Hose. He scored the first goal during the first half of the game.

"The first half was high tempo and our ball circulation was much higher than Lander's," said Louter.

Presbyterian continued to hammer Lander, but at the 80:06 mark, Lander shot a goal to tie the game. The game went into overtime for the third time this season. Williams found the back of the goal for the second time with 3:36 remaining in the second half of overtime. Williams has tallied an impressive four goals this season.

Catawba College travelled to PC on Saturday, Oct. 24. The result was 3-2 Catawba after the teams had to go into overtime.

Coach Louter is impressed by what he saw this season with the Blue Hose.

"The team has tremendous team spirit and maturity. They all have a professional attitude and a desire to improve. This season the team has had a lot of near misses with a lot of games," said Louter.

The Blue Hose have only two remaining regular season games this year. They are both home games, against Francis Marion University on Oct. 28 and Clayton State on Oct. 31. The SAC Conference Tournament starts on Nov. 4.
